No. 1696 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ettie Hamilton vs. Alexander Hamilton.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states that the parties were married in the town of Oakland, Garrett County, State of Maryland, on the first day of January, 1899, and that they lived together for a period of three years, at and after which time the defendant deserted the plaintiff and has remained away ever since, which desertion has now lasted for over eight years, is final, uninterrupted and without any reasonable hope of reconciliation.

The plaintiff asks for the custody of the child, and the bill alleges the non-residence of the defendant and prays for an order of publication against him.

It is thereupon, this 9th day of March, in the year nineteen hundred and ten, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting as a Court of Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, give notice to the defendant, who is alleged to be a non-resident of the State of Maryland, of the object and purpose of this suit by publishing said notice once a week for four successive weeks before the 11th day of April, 1910, and warning the defendant to be and appear in this Court in person or by attorney on or before the 28th day of April, 1910, to show cause, if any he may have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

CH. JOHN W. HART NOW OAKLAND'S MAYOR-ELECT

Candidates on Citizen's Ticket Unopposed at Monday's Election.

As the result of a joint call for a meeting of the citizens of Oakland signed by the chairmen of the Republican and Democratic County Committees, the residents and tax payers of Oakland in convention held last Thursday evening in the court house nominated a strong ticket of conservative business men for the municipal offices to succeed those whose terms expire with the ending of the present month.

The nominating convention was called to order by Mr. W. R. Offutt, and Mr. Fred. A. Thayer was made chairman with Mr. Offutt as secretary.

Following a statement by Chairman Thayer of the object of the meeting Messrs. G. M. Mason, Scott T. Jones and John W. Hart were named as candidates for the nomination for Mayor. Mr. Jones withdrew his name. With Mr. Jones out of the field the balloting laid between Messrs. Mason and Hart, the former receiving 32 votes and the latter 68 votes.

For Councilmen nine candidates were named and to make a selection by a majority of the votes cast two ballots were necessary, resulting in the nomination of Messrs. J. M. Stanton, G. A. Fraley and J. A. Kelly.

At the election Monday this ticket was unopposed and the result is a matter of congratulation to the tax payers of the town for all are assured of a painstaking, economical administration of the public business.

Young man! You with the peachy down under your proboscis, and luxuriant hair on your shapely head; you with the taffy of young maidens smearing your sunny countenance; you with the two-story collar hugging your swan like neck; you with your needle-toed shoes and baggy trousers, you with the ... of cheap cologne and vile cigarettes ...rcling your fragile from like incense;—you want to be an editor! an editor, sir! You will have to shoot the 'stash, shoot the taffy, draw a bead on the two-story collar, shake the needle points, knock the eternal daylight out of the perfume and the weak-kneed smokers, and then perchance you may get a grip on the lower round of fame's ladder, and after years of heartache and backache you may reach the goal your youth now hankers for—a bald head and an editorial chair at the munificent salary of seven per.—Hagerstown Mail.

MARYLAND DEMOCRATS ARE IN DESPERATE NEED

Hence Their Resort to Another Disfranchisement Amendment.

The Democratic leaders in Maryland realize that they are in desperate straits and to win this year and next year, when a governor, an attorney general, a state comptroller and a legislature will be chosen, they must extend their disfranchising laws. Hence the serious consideration which they are giving to a plan, originally proposed by former Senator M. V. Brewington and supported by Southern Maryland Democrats, headed by Mr. W. Mitchell Digges, of Charles county, to refuse to register negroes at the new general registration next year.

This is a bold step, involving a change in the boards of registry by which the Democrats will have two and the Republicans one registrar. It is an open defiance of the Constitution of the United States, as bold and daring as was the Nullification advocated by John C. Calhoun and crushed by President Andrew Jackson. Far-seeing are the Maryland Democrats in their boldness, for they believe that by the disfranchisement of the negro they will sweep the state, electing their candidates on the state ticket and a majority of the two houses of the General Assembly, and that their successful candidates will be strongly intrenched in power before the flagrant violation of the Constitution can reach the United States Supreme Court. The effect of an adverse decision of the highest court in the land on Maryland's election is an aftermath, a bridge to be crossed when it is reached.

All the details of this proposition to ignore the Constitution of the United States will be discussed by Democratic members of the Senate and House of Delegates at a conference at Annapolis this week. Behind this conference as its mainspring is the knowledge of the very pertinent fact that the Democrats cannot secure the approval of a suffrage amendment in Maryland. They have tried twice and twice have they disastrously failed. They say that they will not take the proposed step in the dark, that they have secured the best available legal talent and that they have more than a reasonable assurance that the Fifteenth Amendment, if tested before the United States Supreme Court, will be declared to be unconstitutional.

However, sorely tempted are the Democrats, in their determination to deprive the negro of his vote, to resort to the plan of refusing to register him, it is by no means certain that they will take the desperate step of committing themselves to it. Their course will be determined at this week's conference. If they decide to reject it they will at the same time decide to pass the legislation necessary to the submission of another constitutional amendment next year. While fully realizing the hopelessness of this course, at the same time they believe that an amendment will serve for them, if not for anybody else, a useful purpose. It will, they believe, compel the Republicans to concentrate their efforts on the defeat of the proposition, to the neglect of their candidates, thus making possible the election of the Democratic candidates. It will also, they believe, serve another purpose. It will contribute to the defeat of the forthcoming amendment to increase Baltimore's representation in the General Assembly. They will pass Senator Price's increased representation bill, but they will not support it at the general election. Democrats argue that the opponents of the suffrage amendment will not be able to distinguish between it and the increased representation amendment, both of which will be printed on the ballot. In order to be sure that their veto work will hit the bulls eye they will vote against both propositions.

In fact, the expected happened at Annapolis last week when the Democrats brought forward another suffrage amendment. The man who stood for it, Senator Price, of Wicomico, is the floor leader of his party and more than usual significance must, therefore, attach to his connection with the proposition. It was Senator Price who was agreed upon by his party associates to bring forward the Baltimore city representation bill, which met the approval of a majority of the Senate without being submitted to a party caucus, which would have received its indorsement, at least that of a majority of the Democratic senators, as the vote on the open floor demonstrated.

It is more than probable that the new amendment will be known as the Price amendment, as distinguished from the Poe amendment, which was disastrously defeated in 1905, and from the Straus amendment, which was defeated last year, if not as disastrously as was its predecessor, certainly by a majority of about 16,000, which ought to have convinced the Democrats, individually and collectively, that Maryland did not want its suffrage rights regulated by an inexorable law.

The suffrage amendment proposed by the Democrats through Senator Price radically differs from that framed by Mr. Poe. It is a reproduction in great part of the defeated Straus plan with the educational clause eliminated. Under the Price plan an applicant for registration cannot be given credit for property owned by his wife. Otherwise the Price and the Straus amendments are twins. There is the grandfather's clause. There is also the property-owning clause.

These attempts of the Democrats to impose a restricted elective franchise upon Maryland are not in keeping with the early history of the state.

The Constitution of Maryland of 1776 gave the right of suffrage to all freemen above the age of 21 years having a freehold of 50 acres of land, and residing in the county in which they offered to vote, and to all freemen having property in the state of the value of 50 pounds and residing in the county in which they offered to vote one whole year preceding election.

Under the constitution all freemen of all colors, possessing the age, property and residential qualifications were entitled to vote in Maryland, even though they were not citizens of the United States. Maryland remained under this provision until 1810, when, recognizing that a property qualification was not right, and perhaps being bothered by women attempting to vote, the constitution was amended subsequently as follows: That every free white male citizen of this state above 21 years of age and no other, having resided 12 months in the state and 6 months in the county or city of Annapolis or Baltimore, shall have the right of suffrage.

Under this the unnaturalized free male foreigner, residing in the state as aforesaid, had a right to vote equally with the native-born citizen of the state and the citizen of the United States. This constitutional provision stayed in effect until 1851, when it was re-enacted substantially except that it restricted the right of suffrage to citizens of the United States.

In 1864, the Republicans, having charge of the state, adopted the same provisions confining the right of suffrage to the white male citizen of the United States.

But by Section 4 of Article 1 of this Constitution, they disqualified every person who had been in armed hostilities to the United States, or in any manner in the services of the Confederate States of America, or who had voluntarily left the state and gone within the military lines of said so-called Confederate states or armies, with purpose of adhering to same, or who had given any aid, comfort, countenance or support to those engaged in armed hostilities to the United States or adhered in any manner to its enemies by contributing to them, lawfully or unlawfully sending within their lines money, foods, letters or information, or who had disloyally held communication with the enemies of the United States, or advised or aided any person to enter the service of said enemies, or who by any open deed or word declared his adhesion to their cause, or his desire for their triumph, from voting or holding office in the state, unless he had since been in the United States military service voluntarily, and honorably discharged or restored to his full rights of citizenship by act of General Assembly by vote of two-thirds of all the members of each house.

This section prescribed what is known as the iron clad oath, to be administered by the officers of registration and judges of elections, as follows: "I do swear or affirm that I am a citizen of the United States, that I have never given any aid, countenance or support to those in armed hostilities to the United States, that I have never expressed a desire for the triumph of said enemies over the arms of the United States, and that I will bear true allegiance and faith to the United States and support the Constitution and laws thereof as the supreme law of the land, any law or ordinance of any state to the contrary notwithstanding; that I will in all respects demean myself as a loyal citizen of the United States, and I make this oath or affirmation without any reservation or evasion and believe it to be binding on me."

This clause in the Constitution was the logical sequence of the conditions existing at that time.

This remained in force until the Constitution of 1867 was adopted, which gave the right of franchise to every white male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years or upwards with same residential qualifications as had existed in 1851.

The Constitution of Maryland stands today as it stood since 1851, restricting the elective franchise to the white male citizens of the United States, except so far as it has been changed by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which amendment was not adopted, but unanimously rejected by the General Assembly of Maryland.

Notwithstanding the handicap under which they are working the Republicans are making a creditable record. They are on the right side of every important question and if the legislation they are advocating were adopted the city and state would have no reason for complaint. While buffeting the political waves which threaten to endanger their existence, they are fighting gallantly for those measures that would be helpful to the people and opposing others that would be oppressive.

This week promises to be a most important one and it behooves the Republicans to be watchful of their interests. Aside from the political measures that will come up for consideration are those of a business nature, to which both parties are committed. The public utilities bill framed by the Attorney General will come back from the House Ways and Means Committee, together with its numerous amendments. What the changes are no one knows except those who have been tinkering with the thing. The Republicans will support their own measure, which is safe and sane, accomplishing as it does the purpose it is designed to carry out without being handicapped by the extravagant provisions that characterize the Straus production.

The white slave bill has passed both houses and is now with the Governor. It will be signed.

The Reform League's bill providing for a uniform election law remains in committee and the indications are it will stay there until it suits the party managers to have it reported unfavorably.

T. R. MET WIFE AND DAUGHTER ON THE NILE

Cheered By Big Crowd and Escorted To the Sirdar's Palace.

KHARTOUM, March 14.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt and his party arrived here at 5 o'clock this afternoon. The former President of the United States received a most flattering reception.

The steamer Dal, upon which the American members of the Smithsonian African scientific expedition made the trip from Gondokoro, was delayed somewhat by the unusually turbulent waters of the White Nile, but the party was able to keep within one hour of the scheduled time for the arrival here. Earlier in the day the staff of the sirdar, Maj. Gen. Sir Francis Wingate, had proceeded up the river in a launch to meet the Dal and extend the first formal greeting to the distinguished visitor. The officials were taken on board the steamer and escorted their guest into the town.

When the Dal was sighted, the American, British and Egyptian flags could be made out flying above the vessel. As the sturdy craft, puffing and blowing, turned her nose into the harbor the thousands on shore were quick to recognize the figure of Col. Roosevelt standing on the bridge. He was dressed in a khaki hunting suit, and wore a white helmet. Surrounding him were the members of the sirdar's staff. Recognition of the American was the signal for a burst of cheering that continued as the vessel slowly found her pier. Col. Roosevelt acknowledge the greeting, raising his hat repeatedly and smiling.

A steam launch filled with newspaper correspondents who had been sent here from all parts of the world accompanied the Dal from the last part of the trip. Upon the pier Col. Roosevelt was pressed by an enormous and enthusiastic crowd, all anxious for the nearest possible view of the American, but his escort saved him from any possible discomfort. He was at once escorted to the palace of the sirdar, at the steps of which he was received by the high Sudan officials.

The passage from the steps to the palace door was lined with the members of the sirdar's bodyguard, and as Col. Roosevelt passed between the lines he again raised his hat, in response to the salutations of the throng.

Within the palace Mr. Roosevelt received the officials of the government, after which tea was served. The stay at the palace was brief, Col. Roosevelt hurrying away to the railroad station to meet Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Ethel Roosevelt, who were expected on the train due at 5 o'clock. Col. Roosevelt arrived at the station in time to meet his wife and daughter on their arrival.

With a keen appreciation of the situation, the official of the city had so arranged affairs that this family reunion after a year's separation was in strict privacy. After a few moments of seclusion a very happy appearing family emerged from the station and proceeded to the palace.

This evening no one was permitted to disturb the privacy of the Roosevelts. Tomorrow the round of entertainments and the sightseeing will begin.

Gen. Wingate will personally take charge of the distinguished American. There is a sort of kinship of some kind between the two men. Both have followed the art of war as soldiers. They have hunted big game and written books.

Gen. Wingate was in command of the British force which defeated and killed the Khalifi. He set free Slatin Pasha, who had been in prison fifteen years and who is here in person to greet Col. Roosevelt. Visits will be paid to the Gordon Memorial College and other noted institutions. There will be a big dinner at the palace Tuesday evening.

The Sirdar will personally conduct the Roosevelt party Wednesday to Omburmand and the hills of Kerreri, the scene of Gen. Wingate's most brilliant victories. An opportunity will be given Col Roosevelt to meet many celebrities. After witnessing a polo game at the Gymkahana, grounds Col. Roosevelt will visit the American mission, one of the most prosperous in Egypt. He has listened to all manner of brass bands attempt to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and one jungle drum and fife corps attempted to play "Yankee Doodle."

Col. Roosevelt will attend his first formal banquet Wednesday evening. The members of the Khartoum Club will be his guests. The most strenuous item on his Khartoum schedule is a Sudanese drill.

way to the castle grounds, accompanied by the short legged Mr. Hobbs.

Hobbs led him through the great park gates and up to the lodge of Jacob Fraasch, the venerable high steward of the grounds. Here, to King's utter disgust, he was booked as a plain Cook's tourist and mechanically advised to pay strict attention to the rules.

"It's no disgrace," growled Hobbs, redder than ever. "You're inside the grounds, and you've got to obey the rules, same as any tourist. Right this way, sir. We'll take a turn just inside the wall. Now, on your left, ladies and—ahem!—I should say—ahem!—sir, you may see the first turret ever built on the wall. It is over 400 years old. On the right we have"—

"See here, Hobbs," said King, stopping short, "I'm dashed if I'll let you lecture me as if I were a gang of hayseeds from Joshville."

"Very good, sir. No offense. I quite forgot, sir."

"Just tell me, old chap. Don't lecture. Hobbs, this is all very beautiful and very grand and very slow," said King, stopping to lean against the moss covered wall that encircled the park within a park, the grounds adjoining the grotto. "Can't I hop over this wall and take a peep into the grotto?"

"By no means!" cried Hobbs, horrified.

King looked over the low wall. The prospect was alluring. The pool, the trickling rivulets, the mossy banks, the dense shadows—it was maddening to think he could not enter.

"I wouldn't be in there a minute," he argued. "And I might catch a glimpse of a dream lady. Now, I say, Hobbs, here's a low place. I could jump"—

"Mr. King, if you do that I am ruined forever. I am trusted by the steward. He would cut off all my privileges"— Hobbs could go no further. He was prematurely aghast. Something told him that Mr. King would hop over the wall.

"Go and report me, Hobbs; there's a good fellow. Tell the guards I wouldn't obey. That will let you out, my boy, and I'll do the rest."

He strode off across the bright green turf toward the source of all this enchantment, leaving poor Mr. Hobbs braced against the wall, weak kneed and helpless.

"What are you doing in here?" demanded a voice.

Truxton, conscious of guilt, whirled with as much consternation as if he had been accosted by a voice of thunder. He beheld a very small boy standing at the top of the knoll above him, not thirty feet away. His face was quite as dirty as any small boy's should be at that time of day, and his curly brown hair looked as if it had not been combed since the day before. His firm little legs, in half hose and presumably white knickers, were spread apart, and his hands were in his pockets.

King recognized him at once and looked about uneasily for the attendants who, he knew, should be near. It is safe to say that he came to his feet and bowed deeply, even in humility.

"I am resting, your highness," he said meekly.

"Don't you know any better than to come in here?" demanded the prince. Truxton turned very red.

"I am sorry. I'll go at once."

"Oh, I'm not going to put you out!" hastily exclaimed the prince, coming down the slope. "But you are old enough to know better. You are the gentleman who picked up my crop yesterday. You are an American."

"Yes, a lonely American," with an attempt at the pathetic.

The youngster looked cautiously about. "Say, do you ever go fishing?" he demanded eagerly.

"Occasionally."

"You won't give me away, will you?" with a warning frown. "Don't you tell Jacob Fraasch. He's the steward. I—I know a fine place to fish."

The prince led the way up the bank, followed by the amused American, who stooped so admirably that the boy, looking back, whispered that it was "just fine." At the top of the knoll the prince turned into a little shrub lined path leading down to the banks of the pool almost directly below the rocky face of the grotto.

The prince scurried behind a big rock and reappeared at once with a willow branch from the end of which dangled a piece of thread. A bent pin occupied the chief end in view. He unceremoniously shoved the branch into the hands of his confederate and then produced from one of his pockets a silver cigarette box, which he gingerly opened to reveal to the gaze a conglomerate mass of angleworms and grubs.

"A fellow gets awful dirty digging for worms, doesn't he?" he pronounced.

The prince took the branch and gingerly dropped the hook into the dancing pool. In less time than it requires to tell it he had a nibble, a bite and a catch. There never was a boy so excited as he when a scarlet nibbler flew into the shrubbery above.

On the opposite bank of the pool suddenly appeared two rigid members of the royal guard, intently watching the fishers. King was somewhat disturbed by the fact that their rifles were in a position to be used at an instant's notice. He felt himself turning pale as he thought of what might have happened if he had taken to flight.

A young lady in a rajah silk gown, a flimsy panama hat tilted well over her nose, with a red feather that stood erect as if always in a state of surprise, turned the bushes and came to a stop almost at King's elbow. He had time to note in his confusion that she was about shoulder high alongside him and that she was staring up into his face with amazed gray eyes. Afterward he was to realize that she was amazingly pretty; that her teeth were very white and even; that her eyes were the most beautiful and expressive he had ever seen, that she was slender and imperious and that there were dimples in her cheeks so fascinating that he could not gather sufficient strength of purpose to withdraw his gaze from them. Of course he did not see them at the outset. She was not smiling, so how could he?

The prince came to the rescue. "This is my Aunt Loraine, Mr.—Mr."— He swallowed hard and looked helpless.

"King," supplied Truxton—"Truxton King, your highness." Then, with all the courage he could produce, he said to the beautiful lady: "I'm as guilty as he. See!" He pointed ruefully to four goldfish which he had strung upon wire grass and dropped into the edge of the pool.

"Please put those poor little things back in the pool, Mr. King," said the lady in perfect English.

"Gladly, with the prince's permission," said King, also in English. The prince looked glum, but interposed no imperial objection.

It must be confessed that King's composure was sorely disturbed. He glanced up to find her studying him, plainly perplexed.

"I just wandered in here," he began guiltily. "The prince captured me down there by the big tree."

"Did you say your name is Truxton King?" she asked somewhat skeptically.

"Yes, your—yes, ma'am," he replied, "of New York."

"Your father is Mr. Emerson King? Are you the brother of Adele King?" she asked.

"I am."

"I've heard her speak of her brother Truxton. She said you were in South America."

She was regarding him with cool, speculative interest. "I wonder if you are he?"

"I think I am," he said, but doubtfully. "Please pardon my amazement. Perhaps I'm dreaming. At any rate, I'm dazed."

"We were in the convent together for two years. Now that I observe you closely you do resemble her. We were very good friends, she and I."

"Then you'll intercede for me?" he urged, with a fervent glance in the direction of the wall.

She smiled joyously.

"More than that," she said, "I shall assist you to escape. Come!"

He followed her through the shrubbery, his heart pounding violently.

"Say!" whispered the prince a few moment later, dropping back as if to impart a grave secret. "See that man over there by the fountain, Mr. King?"

"Bobby!" cried the lady sharply. "Goodby, Mr. King. Remember me to your sister when you write. She"—

"That's Aunt Loraine's beau," announced the prince. "That's Count Eric Vos Engo." Truxton's look turned to one of interest at once. The man designated was a slight, swarthy fellow in the uniform of a colonel. He did not appear to be particularly happy at the moment.

"SHE WILL KNOW IF YOU MERELY CALL ME LORAINE."

The American observed the lady's dainty ears. They had turned a delicate pink.

"May I ask who"— began Truxton timidly.

"She will know if you merely call me Loraine."

They parted company at once, the prince and the lady in the rajah silk going toward the castle, King toward the gates, somewhat dazed and by no means sure of his senses.

CHAPTER V.

THE COMMITTEE OF TEN.

It has been said before that Truxton King was the unsuspecting object of interest to two sets of watchers. The fact that he was under the surveillance of the government police is not surprising when we consider the evident thoroughness of that department, but that he should be continually watched by persons of a more sinister cast suggests a mystery which can be cleared up by visiting a certain underground room unknown to the police scarce two blocks from the Tower of Graustark.

There were two ways of reaching this windowless room, with its low ceilings and dank airs. If one had the secret in his possession he could go down through the mysterious trapdoor in the workshop of William Spantz, armorer to the crown, or he might come up through a hidden aperture in the walls of the great government sewer which ran directly parallel with and far below the walls of the quaint old building. One could take his choice of direction in approaching this hole in the huge sewer—he could come up from the river, half a mile away, or he could come down from the hills above if he had the courage to drop through one of the intakes.

It is of special significance that the trapdoor in Spantz's workshop was reserved for use by the armorer and his more fastidious comrades, of whom three were women and one an established functionary in the royal household.

The committee of ten represented the brains and the activity of a rabid coterie in Edelweiss, among themselves styled the Party of Equals. In plain language, they were "reds."

The nominal leader was William Spantz, he who had a son in the prince's household, Julius Spantz, the master of arms. Far off in the hills above the Danube there lived the real leader of this deadly group—the Iron Count Marlanx, exile from the land of his birth, hated and execrated by every loyal Graustarklan, hating and execrating in return with a tenfold greater venom.

Olga Platanova was the latest acquisition to this select circle. A word concerning her: She was the daughter of Professor Platanova, one time oculist and sociologist in a large German university. He had been one of the most brilliant men in Europe and a member of a noble family. Less than a year before the opening of this tale he was executed for treason and conspiracy against the empire.

His daughter, Olga, was recognized as one of the most beautiful and cultured young women in Warsaw. Her suitors seemed to be without number. Finally there came one who conquered and was beloved. He was the son of a mighty duke, a prince of the blood. The young prince pledged himself to marry her despite all opposition; he was ready to give up his noble inheritance for the sake of love. The all powerful ruler of an empire learned of this proposed mesalliance and was horrified. The will of the crown was made known to him and—he obeyed. Olga Platanova was cast aside, but not forgotten. He became the husband of an unloved, scrawny lady of diadems. When the situation became more than he could bear he blew out his brains.

When Olga heard the news of his death she was not stricken by grief. She cried out her joy to a now cloudless sky, for he had justified the great love that had been theirs and would be theirs to the end of time.

From a passive believer in the doctrines of her father and his circle she became at once their most impassioned exponent. She threw herself, heart and soul into the deliberations and transactions of the great red circle; her father understood and yet was amazed.

Then he was put to death by the class she had come to hate—one more stone in the sepulcher of her tender, girlish ideals. When the time came she traveled to Graustark in response to the call of the committee of ten; she came prepared to kill the creature she would be asked to kill. And yet down in her heart she was sore afraid.

She was there not to kill a man grown old in wrongs to her people, but to destroy the life of a gentle, innocent boy of seven!

There were times when her heart shrank from the unholy deed she had been selected to perform. But there was never a thought of receding from the bloodly task set down for her.

On a Saturday night, following the last visit of Truxton King to the armorer, the committee of ten met in the underground room to hear the latest word from one who could not be with them in person, but was always there in spirit, if they were to believe his most zealous utterances. The Iron Count Marlanx, professed hater of all that was rich and noble, was the power behind the committee of ten. The assassination of the little prince and the overthrow of the royal family awaited his pleasure. He was the man who would give the word.

Alas for the committee of ten! The wiliest fox in the history of the world was never so wily as the Iron Count. Some day they were to find out that he was using them to pull his choicest chestnuts from the fire.

The committee was seated around the long table in the stifling, breathless room, the armorer at the head. Those who came by way of the sewer had performed ablutions in the queer toilet room that once had been a secret vault for the storing of feudal plunder. What air there was came from the narrow ventilator that burrowed its way up to the shop of William Spantz or through the chimney hole in the ceiling. Olga Platanova sat far down the side, a moody, inscrutable expression in her dark eyes. At Spantz's right lounged Peter Brutus, a lawyer, formerly secretary to the Iron Count and now his sole representative among these people. He was a dark faced, snaky eyed young man, with a mop of coarse black hair that hung ominously low over his high, receding forehead.

Julius Spantz, the armorer's son, a placid young man of goodly physical proportions, sat next to Brutus, while down the table ranged others deep in the consideration of the world's gravest problems. One of the women was Mme. Drovnask, whose husband had been sent to Siberia for life, and the other Anna Cromer, a rabid red lecturer, who had been driven from the United States, together with her amiable husband, an assassin of some distinction and many aliases, at present foreman in charge of one of the bridge building crews on the new railroad.

Every man in the party, and there were eight, for Olga was not a member of the "ten," wore over the lower part of his face a false black beard of huge dimensions—not that they were averse to recognition among themselves, but in the fear that by some hook or crook Dangloss or his agents might be able to look in upon them.

Brutus was speaking. "The man is a spy. He has been brought here from America to Tullis."

"We shall continue to watch his every movement," said William Spantz. "Time will tell. When we are positive that he is a detective and that he is dangerous there is a way to stop his operations."

"Dangloss suspects more than one of us," ventured Brutus, his gaze traveling toward Olga. There was lewd admiration in that steady glance. "But we'll fool the old fox. The time will soon be here for the blow that frees Graustark from the yoke."

It appeared in the course of his remarks that Marlanx had friends and supporters in all parts of Graustark. Hundreds of men in the hills, including honest shepherds and the dishonest brigands who thrived on them, coal miners and wood stealers, hunters and outlaws were ready to do his bidding when the time was ripe. Moreover, Marlanx had been successful in his design to fill the railway construction crews with the riffraff of all Europe, all of whom were under the control of leaders who could sway them in any movement provided it was against law and order.

With a cunning that commands admiration, the Iron Count deliberately sanctioned the assassination of the little prince of the reds, knowing that the condemnation of the world would fall upon them instead of upon him and that his own actions following the regicide would at once stamp him as irrevocably opposed to anarchy and all of its practices!

In the course of his remarks Peter Brutus touched hastily upon the subject of the little prince.

"He's not very big," said he, with a laugh, "and it won't require a very big bomb to blow him to smithereens. He will"—

"Stop!" cried Olga Platanova, springing to her feet. "I cannot listen to you! You shall not speak of it in that way! Peter Brutus, you are not to speak of—of what I am to do! Never—never again."

"STOP!" CRIED OLGA PLATANOVA. "YOU SHALL NOT SPEAK OF IT IN THAT WAY!"

She shuddered violently as she stood there before them, her eyes closed as if to shut out the horrible picture her mind was painting.

"She will bungle it," sneered Anna Cromer.

Olga's lids were lifted. Her dark eyes looked straight into those of the older woman.

"No," she said quietly, her body relaxing, "I shall not bungle it."

The discussion went back to Truxton King. "Isn't it possible that he is merely attracted by the beauty of our charming young friend here?" ventured Mme. Drovnask.

"It is part of his game," said Julius Spantz. "He knows Olga's past. He is waiting for a chance to catch her off her guard. He may even go so far as to make pretty love to you, cousin, in the hope that— No offense, my dear, no offense!" Her look had silenced him.

"Mr. King is not a spy," she said steadily.

"Well," said William Spantz, "we are safe if we take no chances with him. He must be watched all the time. If we discover that he is what some of us think he is there is a way to end his usefulness. Now, Brutus, what does Count Marlanx say to this day two weeks? Will he be ready? On that day the prince and the court are to witness the unveiling of the Yetive memorial statue in the plaza. It is a full holiday in Graustark. No man will be employed at his usual task, and"—

Brutus interrupted him. "That is the very day that the count has asked me to submit to the committee. He believes it to be the day of all days. Nothing should go amiss. We conquer with a single blow. By noon of that day, the 26th of July, the committee of ten will be in control of the state; the new regime will be at hand. A new world will be begun, with Edelweiss as the center, about which all the rest shall revolve. We, the committee of ten, will be its true founders. We shall be glorified forever. The death of the prince is the signal for the overthrow of the present government and the establishment of the new order of equal humanity."

Up in the distant hills slept the Iron Count, dreaming of the day when he should rule over the new Graustark—for he would rule!—a smile on his grizzled face in reflection of recent waking thoughts concerning the punishment that should fall swiftly upon the assassins of the beloved Prince Robin.

He would make short shrift of assassins!

CHAPTER VI.

INGOMEDE THE BEAUTIFUL.

A LIGHT, chilling drizzle had been falling all evening, pattering softly upon the roof of leaves that covered the sidewalks along Castle avenue.

Almost in the center of the imposing line of palatial residences stood the home of the Duke of Perse, minister of finance, flanked on either side by structures as grim and as gay as itself, yet far less significant in their generation. Here dwelt the most important man in the principality, not excepting the devoted prime minister himself. Not that Perse was so well beloved, but that he held the destinies of the land in Midas-like fingers. More than that, he was the father of the far-famed Countess Marlanx, the most glorious beauty at the Austrian and Russian courts. She had gone forth from Graustark as its most notable bride since the wedding day of the Princess Yetive, late in the nineties. Ingomede, the beautiful, had journeyed far to the hymeneal altar. The husband who claimed her was a hated, dishonored man in his own land. There were those who went so far as to say that her father had delivered her into the hands of a latter day Bluebeard, who whisked her off into the high lands, many leagues from Vienna.

She was seen no more in the gay courts for a year. Then of a sudden she appeared before them all, as dazzlingly beautiful as ever, but with a haunting, wistful look in her dark eyes that could not be mistaken. The old count found an uneasy delight in exhibiting her to the world once more, plainly as a bit of property that all men were expected to look upon with envy in their hearts.

Then the Duke of Perse resumed his residence in Edelweiss, opening the old palace once more to the world. His daughter after the death of the princess began her extended visits to the home of her girlhood. So long as the princess was alive she remained away from Edelweiss, reluctant to meet the friend who had banished her husband long before the wedding day in Budapest. Now she came frequently and stayed for weeks at a time, apparently happy during these escapes from life in the great capitals.

Of late she came more frequently to Edelweiss than before. John Tullis was always to remember the moment when he looked upon this exquisite creature for the first time. That was months ago. After that he never ceased being a secret, silent worshiper at her transient shrine.

Ten o'clock on this rainy night a carriage has drawn up before the lower gates to the Perse grounds, and a tall, shadowy figure leaves it to hurry through the shrub lined walks to the massive doors.

Tullis had long since ceased to be a welcome visitor in the home of the Duke of Perse. The men were openly unfriendly to each other. The duke resented the cool interference of the sandy haired American; on the other hand, Tullis made no effort to conceal his dislike, if not distrust, of the older man.

The countess was alone in the long, warm tinted library.

"It is good of you to come," she said as they shook hands warmly. "Do you know it is almost a year since you last came to this house?"

"It would be a century, countess, if I were not welcomed in other houses where I am sure of a glimpse of you from time to time and a word now and then."

They both seated themselves before a glowing open fire.

"The duke has gone to Ganlook to play bridge with friends," she said at once. "He will not return till late. I have just telephoned—to make sure." Her smile did more than to reassure him.

How to Preserve an Umbrella Jar.

The housekeeper who has suffered from having her umbrella jar broken by hastily pushed in umbrellas should welcome the contrivance of a clever woman who declares she has learned how to prevent breaking. From an old rubber mat she cut two circles that just fitted the bottom of the jar. These were put one on top of the other, and when an umbrella was pushed in hurriedly it struck a soft surface instead of a breakable one. If one does not possess the rubber mat it will be found worth while to buy enough sheet rubber such as is used by plumbers. Its cost is nothing compared to a new umbrella jar.

How to Piece Lace.

To piece lace take the figure at the end of the lace and, commencing at the end of the scallop, cut around it close to the thread that outlines the figure, being careful not to cut this thread. If there is plain net at the top cut straight through it. Baste this figure over a similar one, being careful that every point and dot is exact. With a fine thread, silk or cotton, according to the lace, sew the cut edge of the lace down, sewing over the outline thread with fine stitches. Then cut away the extra lace on the wrong side, leaving only a very narrow seam. If carefully done the seam is almost

The Cooked Cock That Cr

At the first of all Christmastide od, the king, was seated at dinner his steward saw the star shining Bethlehem.

The steward, whose name was phen—he afterward became St. Steph the Martyr, the patron saint of ston cutters—knew at once that a greate king than his master had come on earth.

So he said to King Herod, "I will no longer be thy servant, for now a greater king is born."

At this the king was wroth.

"What aileth thee?" he cried angrily. "Do you lack meat or drink that you would leave me?"

"Nay, I lack not meat nor drink," answered Stephen, "but henceforward I serve only the king born this night that is greater than all of us."

"That is as true," cried Herod, greatly enraged, "as that this cock on my plate shall crow before me."

No sooner had he said these words than the cock, stretching out his neck, crowed aloud, though he was dead and cooked, "Christ is born!"

Herod, on this, ordered that Stephen should be stoned to death outside the walls of Jerusalem, so that to this day St. Stephen the Martyr is the patron saint of stonecutters.—London Answers.

Why We Hang Up Stockings.

The custom of hanging up the stocking on Christmas eve arose from an incident in the life of the good St. Nicholas. One day when he was overtaken by a severe storm he took refuge in a convent, and, the next day being Christmas, he preached a sermon to the nuns which they liked so much that they asked him to come the next year and preach to them again. On his second visit, which was also on a Christmas eve, before going to bed, he asked each of the nuns to lend him a stocking, and he filled the stockings with sugar plums in return for their hospitality.

In the making of mince pies, which form a part of a regular Christmas feast, mutton was the only meat formerly used, as a commemoration of the flocks that were watched on the holy night by the shepherds of Bethlehem. The spices were supposed to be suggestive of the wise men from the east—the land of spices.

Why the Sea Is Salt.

In the golden age, runs the old Norse legend, the earth was ruled by a god named Frodi, who, among other trifles, possessed a beautiful hand mill that ground out gold and happiness and peace and anything else that it was asked for. The grinders were two giantesses ruled over by Frodi, and all went well until a sea rover appeared on the scene. After this, however, all went badly, for the rover slew Frodi and carried the hand mill and the giantesses out to sea, where he ordered them to grind salt. This for a whole day they did, but when night came they awoke their new master from his sleep and asked if they had not ground enough. But the sea rover sternly bade them keep grinding till morning. The maidens took him at his word and worked with such a will that long before daylight the great load of salt they had made sank the ship.

Conundrums.

Why is coal the most contradictory article known to commerce? Because when purchased, instead of going to the buyer, it goes to the cellar.

In what sort of syllables should a parrot be taught to speak? In polly-silly-bills.

What grows bigger the more you contract it? Debt.

Why is Asia like a market in November? There is always a Turkey in it.

Why is an old person like a window? He is full of pains (panes).

What is smaller than a flea's mouth? That which goes into a flea's mouth.

What is the difference between photographing and measles? One makes facsimiles, the other sick families.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Lodgings to Let.

The company sit in a circle, and a player stands in the center. There is one spare chair, and the game is for this player to get possession of a vacant seat. When the game begins every one moves as quickly as possible to the chair next beside him or her, and as this is done all the time it is difficult for the person who is looking for "lodgings" to find a place by slipping in among them, and his attempts will cause much amusement.

Santa Claus.

Dear Santa is a jolly man.
He loves the girls and boys,
And once a year around he goes
With a great big bag of toys.

Down the chimney as quick as a flash,
With never a bit of noise.
And peeps to see if they're all asleep
While he fills up their stockings with toys.

Hurrah, hurrah, for Santa,
Who brings us Christmas cheer!
Three cheers for dear old Santa!
May he come again this year!

Odd Christmas Rhymes.

The happy sounds of Christmastide
Are heard again by all;
Old customs of the countryside,
With carols in the hall.

At Christmas play and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.

Be merry all, be merry all,
With holly dress the festive hall,
Prepare the song, the feast, the ball,
To welcome merry Christmas.

Heap on more wood! The wind is chill;
But, let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.

DVANCED FARM SCHEDULE

great increase in the accuracy e census returns from the rs, a considerable saving of working time of the farm enu- tors, and the removal of much whatever misapprehensions and judices may exist among farm- s with regard to the census are important results expected by the United States Census Bureau to follow the use of the Advance Farm Schedule, which has been adopted and will be circulated, through the rural postmasters, among the farmers short time before the actual census taking.

The employment of this advance schedule is a distinct innovation in census methods. It is the logical and practical outcome of the Census Bureau's persistent effort for some time past to give the farmers a clear and comprehensive preliminary knowledge of the Farm Census questions and to induce them to keep written records of their farm operations and equipment in readiness for the call of the enumerators, beginning April 15 next.

Four million copies of the schedules will be printed, and the distribution of them among farm owners and tenants soon after they are commissioned, about April 1.

Postmaster-General Hitchcock has promised the assistance of his department in the effective distribution of the schedules, and he will issue instructions relative thereto to the rural postmasters. They will be required to address and forward to the farmers receiving mail at their offices the advance farm schedules supplied them by the enumerators.

In a note to farmers on the front page of the schedules, Census Director Durand states.

"In accordance with the act of Congress, the census of the population and farms of the United States will begin on April 15, 1910. On or soon after that date an enumerator will call at your house for the purpose of obtaining the required information concerning your farm.

"Many of the questions which will be asked you concerning the equipment and operations of your farm can not be accurately answered by you without considerable thought and the making of careful calculations or estimate. Therefore, this form has been sent to you in advance, so you may study the questions at your convenience and have the answers written down before the enumerator comes.

"You are earnestly requested to read this form and instructions carefully, to write down the answers to all questions that apply to your farm, and to keep it until the enumerator comes. By doing this you can save yourself much time and contributed greatly to the success of the agricultural census.

"Besides the information concerning your farm, the enumerator will also ask you the names, ages, and other facts concerning the members of your household."

On account of the infirmities of age he had been in failing health for the last three months and several times during that time the members of the family had been summoned to his bedside expecting the end. Besides being one of the most extensive farmers in Jefferson county, Pa., he was up to a few years ago, largely engaged in lumbering and real estate business in each branch was eminently successful. Lesson XII.—First Quarter. For March 20, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. ix, 1-13. Memory Verse, 2—Golden Text, Matt. ix, 6—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In Luke viii, 40, we read that when Jesus returned from Gadara the people gladly received Him, for they were all waiting for Him. In Mark ii, 1, 2, we read that many were gathered together, filling the house and leaving no room even about the door, and He preached the word unto them. In Luke v, 17, we read that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law present from every town in Galilee and also from Judea and Jerusalem and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

Then came four men, bringing on a bed a palsied friend of theirs, and when they could not get even near the door because of the crowd they carried him to the roof, made an opening and let him down through the tiling, with his couch, into the midst before Jesus. Compare the records in Mark ii and Luke v with our lesson in Matthew, and in each you hear Jesus saying to the sick man, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Matthew adds that He said, "Son, be of good cheer." In Matt. ix, 22, He said to a sick woman, "Daughter, be of good comfort." Remember also His "Be of good cheer" of Matt. xiv, 27; John xvi, 33, and Acts xxiii, 11. It is the same word in each case, just one word, used only by our Lord and on these five different occasions. It is used once by the people to the blind man in Mark x, 49. The word used by Paul in Acts xxvii, 22, 25, is a different word, but one of great encouragement. There can be no lasting comfort or good cheer apart from the forgiveness of sins. Jesus did not treat symtoms, as many physicians do, but went at once to the root of the difficulty. The four men brought their friend that he might be cured of his palsy, but Jesus began by forgiving his sins. He saw the faith of those who brought him and determined to heal him, but He began by cleansing his soul. He once said to Simon Peter, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with Me" (John xiii, 8), and that is truly a saying of great import. If we are cleansed from our sins we shall in due time have perfectly whole bodies; so, having saved this man, He also gave him a healed body, and he arose and departed to his house. The four earnest men who brought their palsied friend to Christ to be healed of his disease were quite sure that if they could get him to Jesus they would not need to carry him away, and they were not disappointed.

The question of the Pharisees, "Who is this?" (Luke v, 21) repeated in Luke vii, 49; Matt xxi, 10, carries us back to Isa. lxiii, 1; Jer. xxx, 21. Moses said, "Who am I?" (Ex. iii, 11) but the only pertinent question is, "Who is He?" "Whom say ye that I am?" It is a blessed thing for all who know that He is the Son of Man who hath power on earth to forgive sins and that He has forgiven them. Luke says that Jesus perceived the thoughts of these men, or, as it is in our lesson, "Jesus, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" We do well to remember the words of Ezek. xi, 5, "I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them."

As Jesus went forth He saw a publican named Levi or Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom, and, having said to him, "Follow me," he left all, rose up and followed Him. Compare verse 9 and Luke v, 27, 28. Matthew speaks only of Jesus sitting at meat in the house, but Luke tells us that this was a great feast which Levi made for Jesus in his own house and that a great company of publicans and others sat down with them. Jesus calls whom he pleases (Mark iii, 13). The Father gives unto Him whom He will (John vi, 37; xvii, 2), and yet there are none among those who hear who may not come if they will (John iii, 16; Rev. xxii, 17). The fault finding, self righteous scribes and Pharisees are always on hand with their murmurings, but they said a fine thing one day when they said, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them" (Luke xv, 2). They were the destructive critics of their day, and those of our day would do well to lay to heart some things that Jesus said to them and of them. They considered themselves whole and righteous and had no use for such as Jesus, and He told them plainly that He had not come to call such as they, but that they had better go and learn the meaning of these words: "I will have mercy and not sacrifice." Christ Jesus came not to patch up an old and ruined nature nor to attempt to put new wine, the wine of the kingdom, into the old bottles of the carnal mind, but He came to give a new nature to penitent sinners and to make them new creatures from within outward. He came to have mercy upon the lost and to give Himself and His righteousness to those who receive Him. He does not ask anything from us until He has first given Himself to us. God gave His Son; the Son gave Himself; the Spirit also is given. The gift of God is eternal life. He gives the bread of life, the water of life, the word of life. Nothing in the matter of salvation can be obtained by money or merit on the part of human beings, but must be accepted as the free gift of Almighty God.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1910.

HERE'S AN HONEST TAX.

Those fellows who go about declaiming that every man has a right to a living must be made to understand the righteousness of the feminine dictum that every woman has a right to a man to make a living for her. If the truth were told the real reason for high prices is the scarcity of husbands. Just how this follows need not be dwelt upon, as the scoffing would be none less the if it were fortified by the best brand of logic that ever came from the Jevons Hill factory.

That bill which Mr. Willis, of Kent, has ready for the Marvland legsilature, to impose a graduate tax upon all able-bodied male citizens is fine; it is as logical as a proposition in calculus and its public merits is beyond all question. Why should not the man who denies the claims of the gentler sex and persists in paddling his own canoe be made to feel the obligation that rests upon him to discharge his duty to society or else to pay for the exemption he claims? Is there any other kind of discrimination so base as that which permits a bachelor to live his cynical career without fulfilling that duty of footing up domestic accounts that is the joy of all benedicts?

And let it be known that this is no new thing in Maryland, for in early days when the coffers were casting about for new sources of revenue the assembly came to the rescue of the community threatened with impoverishment and enacted a bachelor tax. With fine appreciation of the common associations of the "abled-bodied married male" these legislators placed the item in the tax list between the items of cigars and wines, thus giving a hint as to the luxuriousness of single life, which if it was enjoyable should be amerced.

Of course, there will be an outcry, sneers at apron-string legislation and cynical remarks about the fellows who are pulled about by their noses, but the state, after all, is but an enlarged family and only family men rightfully belong to it. Either disfranchise and deport the bachelors or else let them stand up and be counted when the man with the bachelor tax authority comes round to take their name and number.

CONSERVATION OF FORESTS.

There are two bills before the legislature in the interests of the State Forest Service that for the good of Maryland should be passed. One carries the annual appropriation for support of the work; while the other adds several necessary provisions to the forest law, such as empowering the forest wardens to make arrests in case of detected violations of the forest law, and, secondly, to summon help to fight fires. It is also provided, in addition, that the expense of extinguishing forest fires shall be divided between the state and the county in which the fire has occurred.

The Maryland State Board of Forestry was established in 1906, and its systematic study of the state's timber resources, together with its practical help along conservation lines justified the creation of the body. At the present time we have, approximately, 718,875,000 cubic feet of saw timber. We are using annually 77,500,000 cubic feet of wood, while the forests of the state grow approximately, 24,000,000 cubic feet per annum. As this is less than one-third of what we use, the need of an intelligent conservation policy is apparent. It is inconceivable, therefore, that there can be any hesitancy over the bill carrying the annual appropriation for the support for the Forestry Board.

The second of the bills referred to is for the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of the service, a desideratum that should appeal to all. The provision to divide the cost of fire-fighting between state and county would seem to be an improvement over the present method, whereby the county has to pay the entire cost and then has the power to collect the cost from the landowner on whose account the money was expended.

THE GRIP OF THE MACHINE.

There has never been a time in this state when a controlling party was more completely under the domination of a few men and more entirely subservient to their influence than is the so-called Democratic party at this time. The Democratic organization in Maryland is a political machine, operated by unscrupulous managers and through unscrupulous methods. It is a misnomer to speak of this organization as Democratic. Democracy implies a power derived from and expressive of the will of the people. The political bosses who have made the Democratic party a political machine are using this machine to subserve their own purposes; and not only so, but with indefatigable cunning and ingenuity are twisting and malforming the electoral system so as to insure the perpetuity of their control. Machine-controlled majorities were returned to the 1910 legislature through an unscrupulous ballot manipulation in eleven of the twenty-three Maryland counties.

The machine bosses understand—nobody understands better than they—that the desperate game which they are playing can only be maintained by playing with ever-increasing recklessness and defiance. And so, as the present legislative session draws to its close, there is a perfect deluge of proposed legislation having for its purpose the perpetuation and tightening of the grip of the banded politicians who operate the Democratic organization as a political machine. No discriminating observer who looks beneath the surface of things can fail to understand the significance of the political jugglery now under way at the state capital. It is now made quite apparent why sixty days of the session were wasted, why highly important measures introduced early in the session were pigeonholed in committee rooms, why committees having measures in charge demanding early consideration were indifferent about their responsibilities. When all matters of pending legislation are involved in the rush and confusion which has been made inevitable by the waste of two-thirds of the session, the trick political bills can be pushed through with a degree of certainty that public attention will be less directly focused upon them. In the clamor raised in connection with various pending civil bills the Democratic machine bosses anticipate pushing their own particular schemes through without attracting general attention or arousing open protest.

The bill of the Reform League providing for a uniform election law throughout the state and proposing as a means to that end the repeal of the special election law—the Wilson ballot law, under which trickery and fraud were rampant at the last election—is now in the hands of the Senatorial Committee on Elections. The Republican minorities in each branch will line up behind this fair and honest election bill—that is, they will support it if they are given the ghost of an opportunity. The protest which the minority will make will be, however, as everybody understands, a hopeless one. It will be as hopeless as would be the advocacy of the Golden Rule down in an unmentionable place where they don't shovel snow. The bosses who control the Democratic organization and run it as their own machine have no use for the Reform League bill, but will push through their own bills, which, when enacted, as they surely will be, will expand and amplify the possibilities of election trickery. Numerous and bad as the election trickery laws already introduced are, the intimations are that there are worse coming. The machine bosses are having everything their own way at Annapolis—and the people are looking on. Later the proposition will be straightly up to the people what to do next.

HOW OFTEN?

"Three times a year is not too often for a gentleman to get drunk," said a judge in New York the other day in deciding a case in which a will was contested on the ground that the testator was a habitual drunkard. While the courts have never passed upon the matter in a positive way, this decision, while of a negative sort, throws some light upon the problem.

How often a man may get drunk without ceasing to be a gentleman is a question that, in view of the wide divergence and great variety of opinions on the subject, seems to be difficult of determination. In the good old days it was deemed quite gentlemanly to get drunk every night. Indeed, frequent inebriety was one of the marks of male gentility. As defined in those days, a gentleman was a man who didn't have to work for a living; and as those who did could not keep the pace of breadwinning with the handicap of a "head" every morning, the daily "jag" was exclusively a habit for the well-to-do and its possession was akin to a crest.

Nowadays, the most daring defender of intemperance will not undertake to say that a man can get drunk oftener than once a week and remain a gentleman. The more conservative champion probably will place the limit at once a month. Public sentiment in general will not stand for more than two or three first-class "toots" a year. Indeed, most folks incline to an opinion opinion that a gentleman should limit himself to an annual "jag" on the Fourth of July. And there be folks bigoted enough to hold that no real gentleman gets drunk at all.

"Three times a year is not too often for a gentleman to get drunk," says the New York learned judge. From this, therefore, it is clear that we may hitch ourselves to a load of peaches once in each four months; but whether we may do so oftener is left in doubt by the court's decision. But, on second thoughts, that decision establishes nothing—positively nothing. The certainty as to this arises through the sudden recollection of the case of a friend of ours. At one New Year's approach he promised his wife, after urging of the most vigorous kind, that he would get drunk only once in the next twelvemonth. He insisted upon that "jag" as a compromise; and as it was plain that he would turn down the whole proposition unless his wife conceded something, she consented. Early on New Year's morning our friend went out and got drunk. He kept his word, though. He was drunk only once that year. His "jag," we may add, lasted until the last day of the following December.

It is obvious, then, that no decision as to the number of times a gentleman may get drunk will amount to anything unless it also declares how long a gentleman's "jag" may continue.

Fireman Figures in Romance.

A few years ago Fred Ringer was an extra fireman on the B. & O., but work got slack and he went back to his home and later embarked in the grocery business at Kitzmiller, on the Western Maryland railroad.

Recently Miss Alice M. Tremble, a pretty Trenton girl, distingiushed herself by riding a horse 20 miles in the dead of night to save her mother and sister from death and received at least 1,000 letters from all parts of the world congratulating her upon her daring and heroic deed. Among the letters were scores in which marriage was offered.

Ringer, now a prosperous merchant, sent his photo and the following letter:

"Dear Friend—I read an account of your bravery in riding on horseback 20 miles at night to save your mother and sister from death. A brave act, indeed!

"An admirer of feminine heroism—being also not ineligible matrimonially—I ardently yearn to hear more of you. Won't you do me one favor, just drop a line and tell me more about yourself. I am sending you a proof of my photograph, also my business card."

Miss Tremble was impressed with this letter and immediately responded and now it looks as if they will marry.

PATRON SAINT OF IRELAND

Brief Sketch of St. Patrick Honored in the Catholic World Today.

Today will be observed throughout the Catholic world in honor of Saint Patrick, "The Patron Saint of Ireland." To the average "man on the street," St. Patrick is a legendary being, vaguely associated with a serpent exodus from Ireland. But there are few historic characters more authentic and few whose influence has been more powerful and permanent.

When the great Roman empire began to feel the chill of death at its extremities, and its remotest northern garrison took the first backward step in Scotland, there went with the retreating troops, south of the great wall of Severus, a youth about fourteen years of age, who, in 396 A. D., had been born near Dumbarton, on the Clyde. The Picts, emboldened by the withdrawal of the Roman legions, made incursions into the territory of their foes. In one such raid they captured this young man and sent him as a slave to Ireland. After six years the prisoner escaped, espoused the Christian faith with ardor, and devoted himself to the priesthood, with the determination to convert the inhabitants of the island to Christianity.

The above may be called the prologue of St. Patrick's life. The second part begins in the year 428 A. D., the best established date in St. Patrick's history, when he addressed the king and friends on the royal hill of Tara. From that time on St. Patrick's wonderful success needs no eulogium. Suffice it to say that his life and labors laid the foundation upon which Ireland was presently to stand as the great center of religious influence in northern Europe. Whether or not his dust reposes in the shadow of the cathedral at Downpatrick, under the granite slab that bears his name, he is and ever will be the dominant figure in Ireland—the keystone in the bridge by which men passed from Irish paganism to Christianity.

So many new-born Irishmen have been named after the great saint that "Pat" has come to be a synonym for almost every son of Erin, and youthful Irish-Americans are prone to be ashamed of the fact that they bear the name of Patrick. They should be proud of it. There is no name on earth that in its own legitimate meaning is more aristocratic. It signifies patrician, as contrasted with plebian, and it is quite presumable that the young monk thus named was worthy of the title. Most men are glad to trace their lineage to old Norman conquerors. But who among them all stands out more prominently on the stage of history than St. Patrick? The conquest he made was not of this world; but which of the mailed robbers from the north achieved such glorious triumphs and such bloodless victories, and left such blessings to posterity?

CUMBERLAND HAD BIG FIRE.

Municipal Building and All Its Contents Destroyed Monday Morning.

The city of Cumberland experienced a disastrous fire Monday morning between the hours of 8 and 10 o'clock when the stately city hall was burned to the ground with all the contents of the building, including numerous lodge equipment, the city records and other property valued at about $200,000.

The building was insured for $41,000. It was erected about thirty-five years ago at a cost of $97,000 and in it were located the city market, the Academy of Music, the municipal offices, Masonic, Odd Fellows and various other fraternal lodge rooms. The heaviest loser, with the exception of the city, was the Masonic lodge, whose loss will total about $12,000. The quarters occupied by this fraternity were probably the handsomest in the State and the furnishings were as elaborate as could be procured.

Germs on a Dollar Bill.

Germs—92,000,000 of them, of manifold variety—were found on a one dollar bill microscopically examined at the request of Representative Wiley, of New Jersey, according to his statement before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, in support of his bill to provide clean currency by burning all paper money returned to the Treasury.

Among the many diseases found to be circulating about this money were smallpox, scarlet fever, typhoid, tuberculosis and diphtheria. Another bill examined by the Agricultural Department, Mr. Wiley said, disclosed the presence of 13,518,000 living bacteria.

No germs were found on metal money. The dollar bills of constant circulation have the most bacteria about them, and it was found that the larger the denomination of the money, the fewer germs it contained.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF THE RAIL

Will Tibbits, of Bloomington, Killed Saturday Near His Home.

Will Tibbits, of Bloomington, was killed on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Bloomington and West Virginia Junction early Saturday morning.

The victim of the rail was returning to his home from Piedmont and it is supposed that he was walking along the track when he was run down by a locomotive His body was almost split in twain and for several hours after the accident it lay along the track and was not discovered until after daylight Saturday morning.

The deceased leaves a family at Bloomington. The funeral of the unfortunate man occurred Monday afternoon.

Mr. Clifton White, travelling representative for a Pittsburg electrical house, spent a few days in Oakland last and this week as the guest of relatives.

Today is an ideal St. Patrick's Day so far as the weather is concerned. The thermometer at eight o'clock registered thirty-five degrees and the snow was falling rapidly.

Mrs. E. Fundenberg and daughter, Miss Tecla, who were on an extended visit to relatives in Cumberland and Washington, returned to their home in Oakland last Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Hiram P. Tasker, who has been quite ill for two or three weeks, was taken to a Washington hospital Monday morning by his daughter, Mrs. Hanna, of that city, where he will receive treatment.

Mr. Elmer Green, at the north end of Second street, has been making a number of improvements during the past fall and winter. An extension to his heating plant and plumbing has just been completed by Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co.

Dr. John E. Legge has received and added an X-ray machine to his office equipment. The device is of the latest approved make and has been successfully operated by Dr. Legge in a number of cases since its arrival here a few days ago.

Dr. W. W. Davis, superintendent of the Park, accompanied by one of the assistant passenger agents of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, arrived in Oakland last Saturday and spent the day in this section on business connected with the road and also the Park.

Mr. George W. Loar, of Grafton, and his sister, Miss Lottie Loar, of Oakland, who have been in Florida for several weeks, are expected to arrive here Saturday. Their niece, Miss Ethel Loar, daughter of Mr. L. L. Loar, of Grafton, whose extreme illness at Miami, Florida, delayed the homecoming of Mr. and Miss Loar, is very much improved.

He also has some of the best Florida propositions on the market. Call on him for booklet describing these properties. You are sure of receiving courteous treatment and will be given every opportunity to see and investigate to your entire satisfaction. 2-1t.

Rev. G. R. Williamson, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, returned to Oakland Tuesday morning from Roanoke, Lewis county, W. Va., to which point he accompanied the remains of his sister, whose death occurred in Baltimore last Friday. The deceased lady was taken from Oakland to Baltimore last week by her brother to receive treatment in one of the hospitals there, her death occurring very suddenly and unexpectedly a day or two later.

Dr. Henry W. McComas returned to Oakland Tuesday night from Washington bringing with him his father, Dr. J. Lee McComas, whose illness in that city was noted in this paper two weeks ago. For several dsys after the arrival in Washington of Dr. McComas his father's condition was critical and delayed his return to Oakland until Tuesday. At present the patient is somewhat better but still confined to his bed at his son's residence on Second street.

An army officer, summoned as an expert in a New York shooting case, objected to taking the usual oath to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. He said he was willing to tell all he knew, but that it was quite possible also that he might be mistaken or that he was not acquainted with the whole truth. If all experts are as morbidly conscientious as this about their own fallibility, expert testimony is going to be revolutionized.

The thawing weather during the past several weeks has caused the water mains to settle in a number of places and four large leaks have broken out. This has probably been going on for some time and with the loosening up of the ground they came to the surface. However, we are glad to note that the firm of Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co. soon had a force of men on the work and within a short time had the leaks efficiently repaired without causing the people in that portion of town to be without water very long. We hope that no more breaks will appear and that in the future we may have an abundant supply of water.

COCKING MAIN AT KITZMILLER

Several Hundred Sports From Allegany County Present.

At Kitzmiller, this county, opposite Blaine, West Va., on the Potomac river, a cocking main of more than ordinary interest was witnessed by about three hundred sports from Allegany county, including an ex-Sheriff of that county, an ex-chief of police of one of the Creek towns, and about one hundred residents and near-sports of Kitzmiller and Blaine.

The cocking main was conducted in Warnick's hall on Friday night, when a dozen or more birds met their Waterloo and it is said hundreds of dollars changed hands as a result of the numerous fights.

The Kitzmillerites were backed by one of the sporting fraternity of that town and those of Allegany county had all sorts of money to bet.

A Surprise Party.

About twenty members of the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, gave one of the most enjoyable affair in the form of a "surprise party," at the home of Mrs. Benj. H. THREATENED JUDGE KEEDY.

Union Veteran Tried to Strike Jurist and Sent to Asylum.

A telegram from Hagerstown dated the 15th says:

Geo. W. Bond, a Union veteran of the civil war and one-time mayor of a Western town, who was adjudged insane by a jury about a year ago, but who has been permitted to remain at his home in the custody of his wife, tried to assault Judge M. L. Keedy as he was walking through the court house.

When Bond was found insane the Maryland Surety and Trust Company was appointed a committee to take charge of his estate, including a government pension which he receives. Bond approached Judge Keedy and charged him with being responsible for the appointment of the committee. Bond then raised his stick and was about to strike, when J. Scott Bower saw the movement, wrested the cane from him and turned Bond over to Sheriff Barber, who committed him to jail.

Judge Keedy immediately wrote out a commitment directing the sheriff to take Bond to the Springfield Hospital for the Insane at Sykesville.

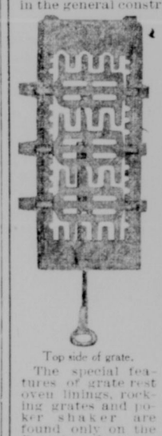
$32 BUYS DAVIS' PATENT STEEL RANGE.

Nothing Like It Ever Offered

After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old styles of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than is found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire box of any range is the part that always gives out first, and with this thought in view was planned in a way that the liners and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.



Top side of grate.

The special features of grate rest oven linings, rocking grates and poker shaker are found only on the Davis. It is the most durable Range ever offered to the trade at a reasonable price, and is in reach of all.

Davis No. 8. Steel Range, complete with reservoir, high closet heavy lined throughout; has oven thermometer.

Strong Points that Make Davis Steel Ranges Most Desirable.

Encased reservoir heated by patent process.

A grate rest with large openings next to oven, avioding accumulation of ashes.

Rocking grates with poker and hand shake, easy to operate, for wood and coal.

Extended lugs on the end of grate bars that act as guards to prevent cinders from clogging or wedging between the tilted bars.

Tilted Grate and Linings.

Poker-Shaker that extends through hand-hole.

Any one contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range cannot help but see themselves the many advantages and superior qualities in its construction. All we ask is a chance to show our ranges in comparison with others both as to price and quality.

Write for our booklet. It will tell you where it differs from all others.

GOOD COUNTRY ROADS

Things Essential For Building Rural Highways.

IDWAN'S VALUABLE LESSON.

With a Small Capital Donated by Fellow Townsmen He Improved Roads in Jefferson Township, Wayne County—Drainage a Big Factor.

An authority on the construction of highways has the following to say in regard to the construction of country roads. He says:

To have a good road in any country in the first place we must have drainage. You will all agree with me there, because a road must be kept dry or it will be soft. I have a system of road work which I have followed for the last five or six years. We must have a system by which to build our roads or we never can have good roads.

I know of no better way to give my system of road work than to tell how I worked half of a township for three years, then tell how I fixed and maintained certain pieces of road.

Five years ago I took one-half of the road work in Jefferson township, Wayne county, Ia., there being about thirty-six miles of road in very bad shape, ditched up and culverts in very bad shape and only about forty poll taxes and $380 to do this work with.

From Good Roads Magazine, New York.

GRADING THE HIGHWAY

I took two plows, right and left, went all over the roads, plowing furrows from twenty to twenty-two feet apart on the side of the road. Sometimes when the road was in trough shape I plowed as close as eighteen feet. And low places and near culverts where I had used scrapers I plowed three or four furrows on a side. By the time I got over the roads I knew just what had to be done and how to distribute my work. As soon as it was dry enough to scrape I went on the road with a small crew. I fixed the culverts and wherever I felt I had time filled in ditches and threw up low places and got it in shape for grader.

I mostly put on ten horses donated by the people. In the fall some wanted their roads graded again and donated the work. I got $150 donation work. Then I went on the roads again with the plows and plowed one furrow on each side of the road, then fixed culverts and put in the time throwing up low places and filling large ditches. I then went over the road with a grader, asking a little donation in some places where the roads needed a little more work. I got $50 donation and the roads in fine shape. Next year I went on the road and fixed culverts and places where water had made some large ditches and scraped in the sand that lodged in the low places and at the foot of the hills. When the ground got in good condition I took two King drags. I hitched to them so they ran at an angle of forty-five degrees, commenced at outside of road, and when I came to a hill where the banks needed cutting I hitched near the end, so it would cut the bank that was to move the ditch over from the road. We would go a few rounds, one drag cutting up hill and the other down.

Six years ago a steep hill east of my house was in a trough shape, and I plowed the sides and threw it in with the scraper until I had it highest in the middle and about twenty feet wide. It took about one-half day. Then I commenced dragging it, and quite a large ditch had got on one side. I widened it by running against the bank with the wagon wheel while driving to the field, using it for a lock and to wear out the bank.

A hill west of my place which I commenced to drag some time ago was lowest in the middle. I had ten acres of ground to plow, which took me about four days. I hitched on to my drag with three horses, put the plow on it and started to the field. I commenced the road about twenty feet wide. A part of the way there was sod. I would bring the drag home and take it back every time I went. By the time the field was plowed I had an impression on the road, so the water took to the side of the road where I had gone with the drag. Soon the ditches were a foot deep, and, of course, the middle was a foot the highest. I kept on dragging every time I went to the field and would set my drag into the bank wherever it would get mellow. The elements did at least 90 per cent of the work. You may sight across the banks and the middle of the road is no higher than the banks, so you see the water has done the work, and I smoothed up after it.

The two miles of road I keep up in fine shape around my farm, and it takes about one day in the year to keep it up.

CUPID'S DAY.

HERE they are,
The pretty pictures
And
The horrid ones as well
That the sweet
And ancient stories
To the hearts
Responsive tell.
You may purchase
For a penny
Or may get them
For a dime,
Some so tender
And artistic,
Some that almost
Seem a crime.
In the windows,
On the counter,
Everywhere
Before your eye
Are the valentines inviting
Boys and girls
To come and buy,
Some
So subtle
In their meaning,
With their verses
Trite, but quaint;
Some so rude
And inartistic
They must truly
Shock
The saint.
Here they are
In prices many,
Ranging
Up and down the line,
So to her
Who is the sweetest
Send a loving Valentine.

"How about Brown? When I went away five years ago he was hailed on every hand as a budding genius."

"Brown?"

"Yes."

"He is in full bloom now."

"Good! What did he turn out to be?"

"Idiot."

The Inference.

"I think Julia is showing awful bad taste in dress."

"Do you?"

"Yes; her hats are atrocious."

"I have noticed that."

"And her color schemes are horrid."

"Aren't they? By the way, she has cut me too."

Quite Safe.

"Aren't you afraid you will be married for your money, Harry?"

"What! I?"

"Sure."

"Not much."

"Why?"

"I am too handsome."

Flexible.

"Mrs. Boosky has her husband just where she wants him."

"Has she?"

"She can wind him around her little finger."

"I didn't suppose the rubber ran be low his neck."

Needed It.

"What are you doing these days?"

"Taking the rest cure."

"Were you as bad off as that?"

"Yes."

"What had you been doing?"

"Listening to my wife."

To Compel It.

"How are you getting along with Miss Emeline?"

"I can't get her to take me seriously."

"Why don't you try saying something funny?"

Level Headed.

"It is so hard to keep going."

"It is?"

"Yes."

"Then why do you keep going?"

"It is much more difficult to stop."

Certainly.

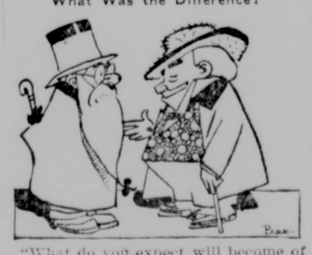
"Which would you rather?"

"What?"

"Marry for love or money?"

"Both."

What Was the Difference?



"What do you expect will become of you?"

"Me?"

"Yes, you."

"Didn't you know I was married?"

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Established customs are, of course, respectable—and deadly dull.

Remorse doesn't do any good, but it can render one vastly uncomfortable, so avoid it.

Success is a beautiful thing—when it is ours.

Sometimes we know less about ourselves than we do of any one else.

Cold weather, it may be, is helping the ice trust, and maybe it is putting its high price schedule out of business.

An old fashioned winter certainly ought to be accompanied by old fashioned ability to enjoy it.

MATTERS IN MAINE.

State Master Favors Direct Primaries and Hits Caucuses.

In the 433 Granges In the Pine Tree State There Are 56,000 Members. One Grange Has a Membership of 1,000—Maine Favors Proportional Representation and Commends Its Master's Attitude In National Grange.

State Master Stetson opened the annual meeting of the Maine state grange with a notably important address in which he emphasized the need of "a fine, strong, abiding sense of personal responsibility of all members in order to achieve the highest success in grange work." He hit the present caucus methods of the political parties a hard rap. The people should take this matter of nominating candidates for public office into their own hands. "We may continue to ratify party nominations made by the bosses or we may control the elections," he said. "We will choose the latter alternative when we come to a realizing sense of our power and duty."

Resolutions were adopted on a variety of subjects, but those of wider importance were the following: Opposing the reduction of the import duty on sweet cream from 5 cents per pound to 5 cents per gallon; opposition was expressed to the repeal of the law which places a tax of 10 cents on oleo colored in imitation of butter; parcels post was favored; the price of 2½ cents for corn sold to corn packing companies was demanded for the 1910 crop; it was recommended that the master's address and officers' reports be discussed in the various subordinate granges, and the Maine grange favored proportional representation in the national grange.

We quote from a Bangor paper on this point, which says: "The report of the committee on the good of the Order embodied in that report the principle which the largest of the state granges have endeavored unsuccessfully to get before the national grange—representation according to size or number of members. The attitude of the national grange in this matter and the disposition to retain in the offices the men who have held them for so long and who are accused of running affairs of that organization according to their own liking regardless of the consequences to the Order in general have been severely criticised, and a resolution was passed at this session upholding the attitude of C. S. Stetson when a delegate to the national grange. The officers of the national grange have a paper which supports their position in all matters and receives a large amount of money from the national grange treasury each year. In the state of Michigan, also in the insurgent list, there is published a paper which does not support those officers, and at the last day of the Maine state grange meeting this paper was adopted as the official organ of the Maine grange.

Secretary E. H. Libby reported for the year ended Oct. 1, 1909, that there were 433 granges in the state with 56,230 paid up members. Seventy-one granges have a membership of over 200 each, Houlton grange leading with 1,000. The receipts of the secretary's office were $12,116.10, and the balance in the treasury is $5,511.91.

THE KANSAS GRANGE.

Fire and Tornado Insurance an Important Feature In Kansas.

In various states different phases of grange activity are emphasized. In Kansas the Patrons' fire and tornado insurance stands well to the front. On Dec. 1, 1909, the total risks carried amounted to $9,404,705. The average cost of insurance per $1,000 was $2.41, the highest for many years. Among the things the Kansas state grange would like to see accomplished are these: Establishment of the office of state fire marshal, the teaching of the elements of agricultural training and domestic science in all consolidated rural schools, placing all state wide utilities, especially pipe lines and telephone and telegraph companies, under control of the railroad commissioners, the establishment of an experiment farm where seeds shall be grown and tested instead of issuing poor seeds to the people, as the government now does, and national aid for good roads.

This Paint Was Rubbed Off.

The paint manufacturers of the state of Ohio had the paint law requiring the formula of ingredients to appear upon the label of packages containing paint rubbed out during the closing hours of the last legislature. The grange has a work to do to have it put back at the coming session, says Mr. Strode.

Honey Creek grange, Indiana, still has the sheaf of wheat which O. H. Kelley, one of the founders of the Order, cut from a nearby field over forty years ago and which he used in teaching the lessons of the Order at its organization.

State Master Laylin of Ohio has been appointed a member of the Columbus centennial commission by Governor Harmon.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Choose Ye This Day Between Truth and Error.

"Choose You This Day Whom Ye Will Serve... If Jehovah Be God, Serve Him" (Joshua xxiv. 15).

Washington, D. C., March 13.—Pastor Russell of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, preached here twice today to splendid audiences. One of his discourses was entitled, "The Overthrow of Satan's Empire." We report the other one from the text above quoted. Pastor Russell said:—

As Christians in the light of this wonderful Twentieth Century we stand at the parting of the ways and must decide for right or for wrong, for truth or for falsehood, in respect to our religious convictions. Without questioning the sincerity of our forefathers, we all object to their theology. It is in vain that ministers and Bible class teachers longer deny the facts of the case. Nor will intelligent and honest people agree that it is right that through their creeds they should profess one thing, and in their lives and general conversation they should ignore or absolutely deny the teachings of those creeds. Yet this is the position of practically all the thinking people of Christendom. Their consciences will not stand for this much longer. If they refrain from telling the Truth and taking their stand for it, they will not only sear their consciences (I Timothy iv. 2) and correspondingly separate themselves from God's favor, but additionally their course will sooner or later bring upon them the disapproval and contempt of all honest people. For although the masses are not yet aroused on the subject, they are rapidly getting awake.

Do you wish me to illustrate what I mean? Do you wish me to show in what respect all denominations are ashamed of their creeds and anxious to hide the fact that they ever professed them or were anxious to give them some new interpretation more consistent with the broader thought and more generous sentiment common to civilized man in this Twentieth Century? I will do it.

Our Methodist friends are ashamed of that feature of their creed which declares that the Almighty is now doing everything that Divine Wisdom and Power can accomplish on behalf of our poor race to bring all to a full knowledge of Christ and to opportunity of faith and obedience. They realize that there is a weakness in this argument. And when they protest that God must work through means, and hence that the responsibility lies at the door of Christian believers to carry the Gospel to the heathen, they realize that this is an illogical argument too. For why should our Great Creator send to eternal torment millions of his creatures, because of an insufficiency of zeal on the part of some of their more enlightened fellow-creatures? Acknowledging the inconsistency of such a theory our good Methodist brethren tell us that they hope that God has some other way of saving the ignorant of heathen lands and, perhaps, of civilized lands.

We appreciate the loving heart which prompts this answer and we agree that it is true—that God has another way for these. But when we attempt to point out what that other way is, some of these dear friends inquire, Is it Methodism? Did John Wesley preach it? Our answer is, No. Brother Wesley did not preach it and did not know of it. Not because it is new, but because it is so very old and was lost sight of during the "dark ages" for fifteen centuries before Brother Wesley was born. He was feeling after it, yearning for it, hungering and thirsting for it, but the "due time" for it to be made known to God's people had not yet come in Brother Wesley's day. He preached the eternal torture of all mankind, except the sanctified believers in Jesus the Savior. But in his preaching of the love of God he was used of the Almighty to wondrously prepare the hearts of Christendom for the broader message of the Bible now due to be seen and understood. Wesley's Gospel of the love of God has mellowed the heart of Christendom, which once was frigid under the cold teachings of Foreordination, Predestination, etc., of the Westminster Confession of Faith—once the basis of nearly all Protestant Communions.

If we and our Methodist brethren could maintain the same degree of spiritual warmth that Wesley and their forefathers enjoyed we might do without further instruction. But we cannot do this! None can stand still; Christians today are losing their holiness, their sanctification—their zeal for God is giving place to zeal for a sect.

The light of the Millennial morning which for a century has been gradually breaking upon the world, stimulating thought in every direction, makes it necessary for our Methodist brethren, as well as for us all, to awaken to the wonderful privileges of our day for Bible study: to ascertain the real teachings of God's Word, which, in the dark past we all seemingly misunderstood and misrepresented. Already the most intelligent one-fourth of Methodism not only rejects Brother Wesley's theory, but alas, repudiates the Bible also! It accepts instead of Salvation that most dangerous form of infidelity known as Higher Criticism and that most un-Scriptural proposition of human Evolution, which denies the fall of our race and makes void Christ's redemptive work and the glorious result thereof—human restitution (Acts iii. 19-23).

Bury the Dead Past.

God forbid that we should bury any of the doctrines of Christ and his twelve apostles! On the contrary let us strive to resurrect these from the rubbish of human traditions which eighteen centuries have piled upon them. Let us instead bury our man-made creeds, of which we are all ashamed. Our Presbyterian friends some years ago set a noble example to all Christendom in the burial of their Confession of Faith and their substitution instead of a much simpler and much more rational statement.

But, No, I must correct myself here. This is what they should have done but did not do. Instead of burying the old creed, not only from sight, but also from odor, they have merely covered the corpse which is admitted to be dead and placed the briefer and better Confession atop the winding-sheet. They assuredly declare that it is not a substitute but merely a representative statement. Hence every time we read the re-statement, we must hold our noses to avoid contamination from the odors of the carcass beneath. Not all must do this, for, as the Apostle suggests, All have not their senses exercised to discern. But all intelligent Presbyterians are being rapidly driven not only away from Calvinism, but, alas, away from the Bible also, because of their erroneous supposition that the teaching of Calvin and the teachings of the Bible are one and the same.

These bright minds are not merely lost to the Christian forces. They become active agents in the promulgation of anti-Biblical teachings. They are engaged in pulling down the Bible and substituting for its teachings Darwin's Evolution theory. These sincere men are to be found in the faculties of all of the Colleges, in the highest pulpits throughout the land and in the most prominent positions in business and social life. Their loss of faith in the Bible has not made them murderers or thieves. Their noble inheritance from the past preserves to them an uprightness of character which the loss of a fear of hell-torment has not undermined. While they are no longer Christians from the Bible standpoint—no longer believers in Jesus as a Redeemer—they are still believers in Jesus as a great Teacher and a noble Leader of men. They fail to discern the fact that if he posed as the Son of God and the Redeemer of men, and was not such, instead of being a noble example, his life and teachings were most stupendous frauds and deceptions.

Baptists and Disciples Awakening.

When we say that this awakening is also reaching our Baptist and our Disciple brethren, let it not be understood to mean that all of these have been asleep until now. Perhaps it would have been better for them if some who have gotten awake during the past thirty years had slumbered longer. Those long awake have principally gone off into Darwinism and Higher Criticism. Baptist and Disciple schools and Colleges and Theological Seminaries, like those of other denominations, are manned with the brightest minds of the denominations, and all with one accord teaching Higher Criticism, Infidelity and Darwinian Evolution. With one accord all are engaged in overthrowing the Christian Faith of the rising generation. They are doing this intelligently, wisely, cunningly, but not with evil motive. Having gotten awake to the inconsistencies of their creeds these scholarly men, concluding that the creeds truthfully represented the Bible, abandoned faith in the Scriptures to the same degree that they have abandoned faith in the creeds which their intellects have repudiated. Now they are seeking to gradually help Christian people of all denominations to what they consider the higher plane of Truth. What they have—almost anything in fact—is better than the "creeds" they have repudiated. They are working hard and succeeding well in introducing their faith-destroying theory into the minds of the rising generation through the school books. From these they not only have eliminated everything sympathetic with Bible faith, but in the stead have introduced the subversive doctrine of Evolution.

As for the rank and file of Baptists and Disciples, probably three-fourths of them still hold vaguely and indefinitely to the Bible and their Confessions of Faith though both of these denominations in their innocency of mind think that they have no creeds—that they take the Bible only. As these dear friends awaken to the inconsistencies of their confession and teachings they are in great danger of following their leaders into a repudiation of everything pertaining to the past—into Higher Criticism-Infidelity and Darwinism.

"Choose You This Day Whom Ye Will Serve."

Joshua's words to the Israelites, after they had come into Canaan, constitute our text. Joshua perceived the Israelites were in a trying po and that it was their duty to promptly and thoroughly which they would take. So we may day that Christians of all den tions are in a trying position a a prompt decision to stand by the Bible is the necessary th those who would be delivered fr darkness of the past and avoid into the Adversary's great decept the present—into which their le are guiding them. Unless they r speedily, the blind leading the bli will fall into the ditch of Darwinis and the mire of Higher Criticism. There are not many ways to escape this threatening calamity! There is only one way—the Bible way. Many Baptist and Disciple ministers are becoming awake to the inconsistencies of their positions and drifting without foreknowledge of where their course will end. For instance, I have before me the words of the Rev. Dr. Mac Donald of my own city, Brooklyn, on February 27th. This gentleman speaks of the Baptist Confession of Faith as "these swaddling clothes of an ancient dogmatism." And respecting the Baptist doctrine which recognizes only immersed persons as members of the Church of Christ and heirs of salvation, he says, "Henceforth it can be regarded to be as dead as the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, and as worthily buried." The gentleman rejoiced that recently a Baptist minister had been ordained to the Sixth Avenue Baptist Church of Brooklyn who affirmed in advance that he would invite all to communion and Church membership who loved the Lord Jesus. He urged that "associate members" should be received into Baptist communions "without imposing baptism upon them."

This courageous brother fails to see wherein the course he advocates is illogical. What he needs to see is the real teaching of the Bible on the subject of Baptism—that it is baptism into Christ's death, and thus into the real Church of Christ—not the Baptist Church, nor any other human organization, but the Church of God—"The Church of the firstborns, whose names are written in heaven." That roll contains the names of all the saintly, faithful, consecrated believers in the Redeemer—of all denominations and outside of all denominations.

"Sanctify Them Through Thy Truth."

It is not sufficient that we get rid of the errors and superstitions of the past. We must supplant those with the Truth, that "We may be able to withstand in this evil day" (Ephesians vi. 13). It alone will constitute the armor of God. Christian people hold much precious Truth, but hold it in so illogical and confused a manner that it fails to give them the needed strength. God permitted us to come to this very hour and has permitted the present tests for the purpose of developing the characters of the Israelites indeed, in whom is no guile, and for the purpose of gathering out from them all the tares, all the chaff, and all not at heart copies of his dear Son. Let me now briefly summarize the errors of our creeds and briefly indicate the Bible remedy.

None of our Creeds were too strict in defining the saintliness of the Church class, invited to become the Bride of Christ and his Joint-heirs in his Kingdom. On the contrary, in many respects they were too loose—they were not nearly up to the standard of the Master's word, "If any man will be my disciple, let him take up his cross and follow me." "Strait is the gate and narrow the way which leadeth unto life; and few there be that find it" (Matthew vii. 14). Jesus taught that his followers must drink of his cup of suffering and be baptized into his death—and not merely into water. Our too-low standards have admitted to membership in all denominations millions who are far below the Master's standards.

Our error and deception was the supposition that all who are not saintly, all who would not become the Bride of Christ, all who are not baptized into his death, all who do not drink of his cup of ignominy will be eternally tortured. This great mistake common to all Protestants (and in the much modified form of Purgatory shared also by Catholics) must be displaced by the Bible teaching that as soon as the elect Church shall be completed and glorified the antitypical Year of Jubilee will begin; that then for the thousand years of the reign of Christ and the Church as the spiritual Seed of Abraham, the non-elect, of all the families of the earth will be blest by the elect (Galatians iii. 16, 29; Acts iii, 19-23). Let us, dear brethren, choose this day to stand by the Word of God, to reject all human traditions contrary to it and to hold fast the things that are true, just, loving, good.

If occasionally a thoughtless friend asks, Why do you believe in a Millennium? answer that it is one of the oldest doctrines of Christendom and, above all, the Bible doctrine. Answer that he who does not believe in the Millennium and the resurrection then of the world of mankind—"All that are in their graves"—must account for the dead in some other way—must claim that they have been experiencing pain or pleasure for thousands of years, or must claim that they are extinct as the brute beast and will have no resurrection or must believe in universal salvation regardless of a knowledge of Christ or obedience to him. On next Lord's Day, we will discuss the Millennium and show its absolute necessity, not only from a Bible standpoint but also from a scientific standpoint. "Choose ye this day"—to stand for the Bible and reason and to oppose the Creeds of the dark ages and their unreason!

NATCH OAKLAND GROW.

ern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

and, the county seat of Garrett Maryland, is situated in a mag- farming country. Agriculture the true basis of all continued rity, this industry alone could rt a city or several thousand peo- where most crops of the temperate e are produced and where total fail- es are wholly unknown. In addition o the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, ye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, healthy climate, where hay fever and any ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

Washington's Road To The West.

By JAMES H. MOFFATT
In Sports Afield

It makes little difference whether you call it Gist's Route, or Nemacolin's Trail, or Washington's Road, or Braddock's Road, or the Old Pike. No matter what the name, the old road that leads from the junction of Will's Creek and the Potomac River in Cumberland, Maryland, on out Green Street and up Will's Mountain, through Sandy Gap to the West, is an interesting old road. Yet nowadays only a few people go over it: boys of the town, seeking adventure; old residents, reviving early memories; historians, tracing the paths of their heroes, a few parties in search of arbutus in the spring; an occasional picnic in the summer; a scattered hunter in the fall. Seventy-five years ago a better route was chosen for the Western travel before the days of railroads. The new road through the Narrows was a little longer, but almost level: wagons could move over the six miles of its gentle grade at a trot, instead of toiling for four miles up the mountain and down again over the many curves of the old road at a slow walk to where the old and the new roads meet at the Six Mile House. But, after seventy-five years of neglect and no repairs, the old road (locally called the Old Pike or Mount Nebo Road) still shows how well it was built.

Long before the coming of the White Man, this was the main trail used by the Indians in crossing the Alleghenies from the Valley of the Potomac (the River of the Burning Pine), to the Ohio. Countless moccasined feet had worn deep the path, over which the Shawnees and the Delawares traveled West away from the White Man. It was the chief route of traders. The first record of any white man crossing the Alleghenies is found in the rude journal of Christopher Gist, who, in November, 1750, was commissioned by the Ohio Company to journey from its store house at Cai-uc tu cuc (Will's Creek) across the mountains, to establish trading posts with the Indians on the Company's lands along the Ohio. This Company had, the year before, been chartered by the Crown, with twenty stockholders, among whom was Lawrence Washington, the half-brother of George Washington. Gist followed the Indian trail, almost the present route of the Old Pike—crossing Will's Mountain at Sandy Gap, which, he says, "is the nearest to Potomack River of any in the Allegany Mountains, and is accounted one of the best, tho' the Mountain is very high. The Ascent is no where very steep but rises gradually near 6 M. It is now very full of old Trees & Stones, but with some Pains might be made a good Waggon Road. This Gap is directly in the Way to Mohongaly (Monongahela River)."

A year later Col. Thomas Cresap was commissioned by the Company to lay out this road to the West. He secured the aid of Nemacolin, a friendly Indian, and together they blazed out the trail known as Nemacolin's Road. For over sixty years this was the thoroughfare over the Alleghenies. From the cross-roads, about a mile west of Will's Creek, it "ran in almost a perfectly straight line to nearly the top of Will's Mountain, involving a very heavy grade. . . Yet in many respects the road was admirably chosen; it avoided the ravines, so as to obviate the necessity of bridges or culverts, until the valley beyond was reached; and much of the distance on the higher part of the mountain was smooth and comparatively clear of rocks. . . The descent from the highest point on the mountain is easy enough for safety, and from the point of passage through Sandy Gap was quite gentle. The road is as plain today as it was a hundred years ago, notwithstanding trees of more than a foot in diameter are growing thickly in its bed."

It was over this same road that, on November 15, 1753, Gist led Major George Washington, who, though not yet 21 years old, had been sent by Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia to deliver a letter to the Commandant of the French forces on the Ohio, stating that the lands along the Ohio belonged to Great Britain, demanding by whose authority the French had marched from Canada into British territory, and summoning him to retire to Canada. After a long delay, the French Commandant gave Washington a reply, saying that, as he was acting under the orders of the Marquis Duquesne, he could merely forward Dinwiddie's letter to him in Canada. So Washington's long, perilous journey seemed a failure; but he had become familiar with the lay of the land and the number of the French forces, and had made some Indian friends.

Six months later, in April, 1754, Major Washington led a small band of militia over this same road, which they widened as they went; but it was slow work—20 miles in ten days. On May 28, after a night's march of five miles in ten hours, Washington surprised a small scouting party of twenty-four Frenchmen from Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburg), killed the commander and took all but one of the others prisoners. On June 1 he built a small fort in Great Meadows, which he called Fort Necessity. Here he left part of his command. With the rest he pushed his road on further west. Four weeks later scouts informed him of the approach of a large body of French troops—sent from Fort Duquesne to avenge the capture of the first small band. Washington retreated to Fort Necessity, where, on July 4, he was compelled to surrender. Five days later he reached Will's Creek, after a dreary march over the Old Road. No longer was it called Nemacolin's Trail. It was now known as Washington's Road.

The name of the road was soon changed again—this time to Braddock's Road. The Crown sent General Edward Braddock, with some English companies, to capture Fort Duquesne and to drive the French from the British territories along the Ohio. He reached Will's Creek on May 10, 1755—being greeted by a salute of 17 guns from the fort, which he renamed Fort Cumberland, in honor of the Duke of Cumberland, Captain-General of the English Army. Fort Cumberland (as described in the journal of a "seaman" who accompanied Braddock) "is situated within 200 Yards of Will's Creek, on a Hill 400 Yards from the Potomack. Its greatest length, from East to West, is 200 Yards, and breadth 40. It is built with Loggs, drove into the Ground, and 12 feet above it Embrazures are cut for 12 Guns, which are 4 Pounders—though 10 only are Mounted with Loop-holes for small Arms."

Here Braddock staid for a month, drilling his forces—attempting to reduce the rough Colonial militia to the discipline of the English regulars. He was anxious to push on, but he found it almost impossible to procure provisions and horses from Maryland and Virginia. Benjamin Franklin finally appealed to the settlers of Pennsylvania, who, in fear of a raid, furnished some horses and supplies. Thus poorly equipped, Braddock hastened to march on; but the odds were greatly against him, for he was entirely ignorant of the methods of Indian fighting, and, neglecting the advice of his aide, Major Washington, failed to conciliate them. And it was the Indians, rather than the French, that defeated him.

On May 29, he sent forward over Washington's Road Major Chapman with a detachment of 600 soldiers, two field pieces and 50 wagons of provisions — Lieutenant Spendelow and six seamen, with some Indians, being ordered to clean the road for them. But the horses were so poor and the road so bad that they made only three miles a day. Lieut. Spendelow returned on the fourth day, impressed with the need of a less difficult road over the mountain. After several days' search, he convinced Gen. Braddock that a more desirable road could be built along the east bank of Will's Creek, through the Narrows—meeting the old road about six miles from the fort. With one hundred and twenty men, he constructed this new section around the mountain, at the rate of a mile a day. On June 7, Braddock marched from Cumberland, to meet his death on July 9, near the Monongahela River—his troops being routed by the Indians who lay concealed in ravines alongside his road on the top of a narrow ridge.

For the thirty years following Braddock's defeat little is known of the road. But in 1784 Washington, desirous of connecting the West with the East by river navigation and roads, went over it a third time. The result was the formation of the Potomac Company, of which Washington was long President. This company spent a half million dollars in a vain attempt to make the Potomac navigable from Alexandra to Cumberland. In the spring flatboats, loaded with freight and coal, could be floated down with the floods; a few of them were poled back. But this was so slow and hard that most of them were broken up at Alexandria for lumber. A mile or so below Cumberland are the remains of a rough wall of rock, now covered with bushes, built by the Company in its effort to deepen the channel.

In 1806 Congress decided to use part of the proceeds of the sale of public lands along the Ohio for building a National Highway to the West—the only highway of its kind ever wholly constructed by the Government of the United States. President Jefferson appointed the commissioners, and in 1811 the first contract was awarded for the ten miles west of Cumberland. The route followed was that of Washington's Road, over Will's Mountain by Sandy Gap. The ascent of the mountain was made more gradual by means of many curves and culverts, but the new Pike was never out of sight of Nemacolin's original trail. The entire road to Wheeling was completed in 1818, at a cost of $13,000 per mile; but from Cumberland to Uniontown, Pa., so much of Washington's or Braddock's Road was used that the cost per mile, for that section, was only $9,745. Its total cost, from 1806 to 1844, was $6,800,000.

By 1832 it had fallen into bad condition, despite its continuous use. Then, under the direction of United States Engineers, it was rebuilt. But this time the Old Pike over the mountain was abandoned, and Spendelow's plan for a road through the Narrows was adopted. At the entrance to the Narrows, it crossed the creek on a massive stone-arched bridge; thence along the west bank, protected from the floods of the creek by a stone wall. Iron mile-posts were erected, marking both the distance to Wheeling and to Cumberland. Every fifteen miles, round or hexagonal toll-houses of brick or stone were built, with massive iron gates. These gates were seldom used, for the road was so good and the toll so small that drivers were content to pay. The average gate took in $1,800 a year. The most profitable year was 1839, when the tolls amounted to $61,496. "As early as the year 1822, it is recorded that a single one of the five commission houses at Wheeling unloaded one thousand and averaging three thousand five hundred pounds each, and paid for freightage of goods the sum of ninety thousand dollars."

The travel over the Pike was greatly increased by the building of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal from Washington to Cumberland, a distance of 189 miles—begun in 1825 and completed in 1850 after an expenditure of $11,000,000. But the death knell of the national usefulness of the Pike was sounded when the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was completed to Wheeling. From the time it was thrown open to the public in the year 1818, until the coming of railroads west of the Allegheny Mountains in 1852, the National Road was the one great highway, over which passed the bulk of trade and travel and the mails between the East and the West. Its numerous and stately stone bridges with handsomely turned arches, its iron mile-posts and its old iron gates, attest the skill of the workmen engaged on its construction and to this day remain enduring monuments of its grandeur and solidity. Many of the most illustrious statesmen and heroes of the early period of our national existence passed over the National Road to the Capital and back, at the opening and closing of the sessions of Congress. Jackson, Harrison, Clay, Sam Houston, Polk, Taylor, Crittenden, Shelby, Allen, Scott, Butler, the eccentric Davy Crockett, and many of their contemporaries in public service, were familiar figures in the eyes of the dwellers by the roadside. Once a coach in which Henry Clay was proceeding to Washington was upset on a pile of limestone. Mr. Clay was unhurt, and upon being extricated from the grounded coach, remarked facetiously: "This is mixing the Clay of Kentucky with the limestone of Pennsylvania!"

The ten-mile walk from Cumberland over the Old Pike and back by the National Pike is more than worth the trouble. As you leave the bridge over Will's Creek, you pass under the foot of Fort Cumberland, around to the north bank of the Potomac; on the opposite bank, in West Virginia, begins the the long range of Knobley Mountains, where lurked the Indian maidens who seduced so many of Braddock's red-coated soldiers. A little farther on you pass the old Dent House, where in 1787 was born the first white child in the town of Cumberland, who grew up to be the father-in-law of President Grant. A mile more and the road begins the ascent of the mountain, just after passing an old vineyard—for years the source of local grape wine. The top dressing is all washed away and the large heavy stones of the foundation appear—each a little less than seven inches in diameter, as the contract required. The best foot-path is at the side, in the gutter of the old road, now filled up with its washings.

A half-mile up you reach an old house—in the early days of the Pike a fashionable boarding school, but now occupied by tenants who supply the milk for the family of Lloyd Lowndes, the late Governor of Maryland. Here is where you may trace the original Washington's Road as it turns to the right, straight up the mountain, returning to the Pike half-way through Sandy Gap. Barely out of sight of this house you pass over one of the splendid culverts crossing one of the numerous mountain brooks; it still stands—solid and graceful—despite ninety years of inattention. Around it hover many traditions of crime, as terrifying as those

> "Where Mungo's mither hanged herself,
> Wi' mair of horrible and awful
> Which even to name would be unlawful."

On up you mount by even grade and sloping curves, through scrub pines and laurel, noticing that sometimes a row of small pines has sprung up in the middle of the road, as if the forest glories in its triumph over the road builders. Such growths make you realize the noble width of the Pike—four rods by contract or sixty-six feet. Half-way up, you pause on one of the outward curves to gaze across the valley of the North Branch of the Potomac (or Cohongaronta in Indian tongue) to the unending ridge of Knobleys, with the precipice two hundred feet high at Seymour's Rocks.

A few curves more and you are surprised to find yourself at the top of Will's Mountain—600 feet above Cumberland. The road drops easily, upheld by a massive side-wall, to a glade a half-mile long. On the left is a small knob, famous for its arbutus, and in the marsh between are many small pools where boys may catch frogs or "bluddies." At the far end is a small clearing and log cabin, once a wagon and blacksmith shop and more recently a charcoal burner's home—where a few years ago boys could watch in awe the blackened men guarding the mound of wood, covered with leaves and mould, that, slowly burning and half smothered, charred itself to charcoal.

From this the Pike drops quickly round a dangerous bend, where you easily imagine upsets—for the sharp curve overlooks a deep ravine. At such places experienced wagoners would tie a drag log to their wagons, for neither horses nor brakes nor locked wheels could hold back a loaded wagon when the hill was icy. Then on, past a sand quarry, and another valley comes in view—the Valley of Braddock's Run, where the new route of the National Pike lies. Soon on the left appears an old log watering trough, filled by a clear stream running in a V of boards from a rough house. This is Sand Spring—the clearest and coldest spring a traveler has ever tasted. A quarter of a mile below, the Pike reaches the level through a noble avenue of trees; then on by the home of McKenzie, an old wagoner, a small slope leads to the Haunted House (though no one knows why it is so called) and on through orchards to the Six Mile House, where the National Pike through the Narrows joins the Old Pike.

From here you may return by trolley. The road is a gentle grade, parallel to Will's Mountain. Suddenly the rocks on your right seem to open themselves, and there is the narrow twisting gap called the Narrows, which one of Washington's officers has described, in Thackeray's words, as "that wild, magnificent pass of Will's Creek, a valley lying between cliffs near a thousand feet high—bald, white and broken into towers like hugh fortifications, with eagles wheeling around the summits of the rocks and watching their nests among the crags."

As you return down Mechanic Street, along which many taverns clustered in the old stage-coach days, you pass the oldest log house which is still standing in good repairs.

* * * *

You have trod in the paths of Indians, of frontiersmen, of Colonial militia, of British troops; you have traced the wheels of traders' wagons, mail coaches and Presidential carriages. And even in this age of the railroads, you can appreciate how this road to the West was the difficulty of Washington's youth and the hope of his later years.

How to Keep Ferns In Good Condition.

Ferns should not be placed in halls or situations exposed to drafts. They require great care in watering. People often think they have watered their plants when the water has only gone over the surface and around the sides of the pots, the center of the ball being still quite dry. This is especially the case when the pots are filled with roots. It is necessary that the ball should be thoroughly soaked. There is no regular rule as to the time for watering. Plants in vigorous growth require more frequent watering. Evaporation also has much to do with it. On dry, warm days, when evaporation is great, water may be needed twice a day, while if the air is cool and moist two or three days might intervene without water. A healthy, vigorous plant absorbs much water, while a delicate one can absorb but little. The soil should be examined always and if dry watered; if not, refrain from watering. When leaves shrivel and turn yellow the soil has been too dry. If they turn yellow without shriveling it indicates too much water has been given. In either case the roots have been abused and lost their power of absorption.

How to Make Oatmeal Cakes.

Three cupfuls boiling water, one cupful of oatmeal, one scant teaspoonful salt. Pour the water on the oatmeal, add the salt and cook three hours in double boiler. While still warm add one large tablespoonful of butter and one-half cupful of sugar. When cool add one-half cupful of yeast and flour to make stiff dough. Let it rise over night. In the morning bake in gem pans twenty minutes, or until brown.

THIRTEENTH CENSUS

President Taft's Proclamation To the People.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS by the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1909, the Thirteenth Decennial Census of the United States is to be taken, beginning on the fifteenth day of April, nineteen hundred and ten; and

WHEREAS a correct enumeration of the population every ten years is required by the Constitution of the United States for the purpose of determining the representation of the several States in the House of Representatives; and

WHEREAS it is of the utmost importance to the interests of all the people of the United States that this census should be a complete and accurate report of the population and resources of the country:

Now, therefore, I, WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare and make known that under the aforesaid, it is the duty of every person to answer all questions on the census schedules applying to him and the family to which he belongs, and to the farm occupied by him or his family, and that any adult refusing to do so is subject to penalty.

The sole purpose of the census is to secure general statistical information regarding the population and resources of the country, and replies are required from individuals only in order to permit the compilation of general statistics. The census has nothing to do with taxation, with army or jury service, with the compulsion of school attendance, with the regulation of immigration, or with the enforcement of any national, state, or local law or ordinance, nor can any person be harmed in any way by furnishing the information required. There need be no fear that any disclosure will be made regarding any individual person or his affairs. For the due protection of the rights and interests of the person furnishing information every employee of the Census Bureau is prohibited, under heavy penalty, from disclosing any information which may thus come to his knowledge.

I therefore earnestly urge upon all persons to answer promptly, completely, and accurately all inquiries addressed to them by the enumerators or other employees of the Census Bureau, and thereby to contribute their share toward making this great and necessary public undertaking a success.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States be be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this fifteenth day of March, A. D., one thousand nine hundred and [SEAL] ten, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fourth.

P. C. KNOX,
Secretary of State.

Demonstration Woodlot Forests.

In order to promote by object lessons the practice of forestry throughout the State, the Board of Forestry makes an offer to woodlot owners and should meet with general approval. Under the plan proposed anyone who is interested may apply to the State Forester, Baltimore, Maryland, for an examination of his woodlot with a view of making it one of the model demonstration forests. The State Forester will then examine it and if found suitable for the purpose, a plan of management will be submitted to the owner for his acceptance or rejection. There is no expense to the land owner on account of the examination. If the plan is mutually satisfacrory, work begins. The general scheme is indicated by the following extract from a circular that has just been issued:

"Since the object of this work is to demonstrate practical forestry in all of its phases, the aim will be to treat each woodlot in the most approved manner to secure its greatest productiveness, thereby meeting the needs of the owner and showing his neighbors, who may be similarly situated, what they can do for themselves. The general plan will be for the forester to outline the work in detail and to organize and superintend it, when possible. Where thinnings and improvement cuttings are to be made he will mark the trees to be cut; where fire lines are to be constructed he will lay them out; where planting is to be undertaken he will locate the areas to be planted and recommend the species of trees to be used and show how the planting is to be done and so with all parts of the work that may be agreed upon. The owner will be required to furnish all the labor that may be needed and he will have full control of the disposal of the products of the woodlot, and receive all revenues derived therefrom. In consideration of the advice and assistance given and in order that the woodlot may serve its full purpose as a demonstration forest, the owner shall agree to carry out in good faith the plans agreed upon and to permit the State Forester to give public demonstrations of practical forest operations, while the improvement work is in progress and to publish such results of the work from time to time as he may think proper."

How to Make Bedroom Coverings.

Pretty coverings for a bedroom may be made of heavy unbleached muslin. For the bedspread buy cloth of double width to avoid a seam in the middle. Turn a two inch hem and hem lightly by hand. Then from soft colored cretonne or sateen cut wreaths of flowers or figures and fell them on to the cotton in any way that appeals to your taste. Curtains, pillows and bureau covers may be made in the same way. The materials are cheap, and the effect is pretty.

Good Road Mottoes.

Good roads promote rural optimism.

Mudholes are the forerunners of good roads.

Many a "good enough" road is not a good road at all.

It takes more than talk to make a good road, though talk is necessary to start it.

Drag, Brother, Drag!

[The road drag has proved so valuable in improving poor highways that even the poets have turned their attention to it. Here is what a Missouri bard advises farmers burdened with bad roads to do.]

Then "If at first you don't succeed,"
Drag, brother; drag.
And once or twice don't fill the need,
Drag, brother; drag.
When a shower of rain has passed,
And the sun shines out at last,
While the roads are drying fast,
Drag, brother; drag.

And Gabe will come along and see—
Drag, brother; drag—
Just how a good road ought to be.
Drag, brother; drag.
When he gets home he'll take his pen
And write you up the best of men,
And you'll be mighty famous then (?).
Drag, brother; drag.

Order of Publication,

No. 1696 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ettie Hamilton vs. Alexander Hamilton.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states that the parties were married in the town of Oakland, Garrett County, State of Maryland, on the first day of January, 1899, and that they lived together for a period of three years, at and after which time the defendant deserted the plaintiff and has remained away ever since, which desertion has now lasted for over eight years, is final, uninterrupted and without any reasonable hope of reconciliation.

The plaintiff asks for the custody of the child, and the bill alleges the non-residence of the defendant and prays for an order of publication against him.

It is thereupon, this 9th day of March, in the year nineteen hundred and ten, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting as a Court of Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, give notice to the defendant, who is alleged to be a non resident of the State of Maryland, of the object and purpose of this suit by publishing said notice once a week for four successive weeks before the 11th day of April, 1910, and warning the defendant to be and appear in this Court in person or by attorney on or before the 28th day of April, 1910, to show cause, if any he may have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

McMillan and Elizabeth McMillan, his wife, Margaret Bell, Agnes Young, Margaret Chapman and Charles Chapman, her husband, Elizabeth Johnson and John Johnson, John McMillan and Mary McMillan, his wife, Hugh McMillan and Susan McMillan, his wife, Jane L. Green and Frank P. Green, her husband, James Henry McMillan and George McMillan.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Garrett County, Maryland, of which Margaret S. McMillan died, seized and possessed.

The bill states:

1. That Margaret Smith McMillan, late of Garrett county, deceased, was in her life time, and at the time of her death, seized and possessed in fee simple of a certain parcel of land, situate and lying in Garrett county, Maryland, being a part of Lot No. 4908, and which was conveyed to said Margaret Smith McMillan, by deed from Frank P. Green and wife, dated 31st day of March, 1894, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 24, folio 159 one of the land records of Garrett county, a certified copy of said deed is hereby filed, marked Plaintiffs Exhibit A, and is made a part of this bill.

That being so seized and possessed, the said Margaret Smith McMillan, departed this life on or about the 10th day of August, 1903, and leaving surviving her Hugh McMillan, her husband, who has since departed this life, and the following children, viz: Annie Weir, a daughter, who intermarried with James Weir, now deceased; Mary G. 3. That all of the said parties are of full age and reside in the State of Maryland, except John McMillan and Mary McMillan, his wife, who reside in the State of Pennsylvania, and George McMillan, who resides in the State of Delaware and Margaret Chapman and Charles Chapman, her husband, who reside in the State of West virginia.

4. That the said real estate estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein as above stated, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

The bill then prays for the sale of said real estate and that the proceeds of the sale be distributed between the plaintiffs and defendants, according to their respective rights and interest, general relief, and order of publication against the non resident defendants.

It is thereupon this 28th day of February, 1910, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 4th day of April, 1910 give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear it this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 21st day of April next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1910. NUMBER 4

COURT HOUSE GROUNDS WILL BE BEAUTIFIED

Contracts Called For by the Board of County Commissioners.

By reference to the advertising columns of this paper today it will be noticed that the Board of County Commissioners will receive bids at the office of the Commissioners at the court house on April 11, at 2 o'clock p. m., for "the labor and material required for the completion of certain walks, approaches and steps as described in specifications and shown by plans" to be on file at the office of the Commissioners after April 1st.

The contract above refers to the contemplated improvements to be made to the court house grounds, approaches and walks surrounding its outlines.

While the plans and specifications have not yet been received from the architects, an outline plan was exhibited to THE REPUBLICAN at the board room of the Commissioners yesterday afternoon. The plan contemplates a concrete entrance to the court house grounds from Third street with a series of steps leading to the front entrance of the building. The entrance to the grounds will be twenty feet in width and circular in form with a reservation in the centre for a fountain or other ornament. The steps will be twelve feet in width and will be broken by two or three landings as they ascend to the building.

The Commissioners very wisely decided to carry the retaining wall, which will be included in the general plan of improvement, back to the property line and not allow the wall to abut on the street. This will allow the walk to be about twelve feet wide, which will also be of concrete. The contemplated improvement will cost in the neighborhood of two thousand dollars.

Third Track Being Built.

A large force of men and many teams ranging to local people are at work along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Mountain Lake Park and Deer Park making the necessary fills and cuts to accommodate a third track to be built by the railroad company between the two points mentioned.

The third track system may also be extended westward from the Park through Oakland to Rinard's, east of Terra Alta, thus making the road a three track system from Rowlesburg to Deer Park. Should the improvement be made through Oakland there is a probability that the route may be laid through the Oakland Hotel grounds, thus eliminating the reverse curves at the station and west of that point.

SERIOUSLY BURNED BY EXPLODING GAS

Stanley Kildow, Helper in Lauer's Bakery, Painfully Injured.

Stanley Kildow, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kildow, of Oakland, was very painfully burned about his head and face last Friday afternoon at the Oakland Model Bakery where he is employed as a helper, by exploding gas which ignited as he opened the door of the oven.

From the young man's account it appears that he had been instructed to light the gas to fire the oven and was in the act of doing so when the explosion came without warning. It seems that the usual custom in firing the gas is to light a piece of paper and throw it inside the oven and then turn on the gas. By some means gas had escaped into the oven where it had accumulated in large quantities and when the lighted paper was thrown inside the door the explosion followed. Young Kildow's injuries were exceeding painful for a number of days. His entire face was blistered and his eyes were somewhat burned but fortunately no permanent injury will result.

GARRETT COUNTY SPOT IDEAL FOR CAMP SITE

Army Officer Favorably Impressed With Lay of Land Near Mt. Lake Park.

Sent out by the War Department to inspect sites for the big instruction camp for the National Guard of the Middle States, which will be held during the coming summer, Capt. B. H. Wells, quartermaster in the United States Army, after looking over the country surrounding Oakland and Mountain Lake Park, expressed himself as being very favorably impressed with the surroundings.

Viewed from every standpoint the land inspected by Capt. Wells is ideal for the purpose, with just hills enough for the successful maneuvering of cavalry, infantry and artillery, and large level spaces for drill grounds for all branches of the service.

Capt. Wells came to Oakland yesterday morning on train No. 3, being accompanied by a general passenger agent of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company, and was met at the train by Lieut. E. S. West, who accompanied the visitors over the ground in the forenoon. In the afternoon the party was augmented by the addition of Messrs. D. E Offutt, S. T. Jones and G. S. Hamill.

About 2,000 regulars of the United States Army will be in the camp during the entire time, including infantry, cavalry and artillery, with about 1,500 horses. The militia of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, New Jersey and the District of Columbia will be sent to the camp in detachments and each spend about two weeks. In all about 12,000 troops will be encamped, though the highest number in camp at any one time will be about 5,000.

Following the visit here of Capt. Wells yesterday a meeting of the Board of Trade was held last night for the purpose of getting property owners and others interested in the plan to have the soldiers camp here. The Board of Trade instructed its secretary, Mr. Samuel Lawton, to send out notices to farmers and all other land owners within the proposed camp zone, and requested this paper to make the announcement of a meeting of the property owners to be held at the court house Saturday at 2 o'clock which time terms of agreement covering damage to crops, etc., between the government and land owners are to be discussed and satisfactory arrangements made for the occupation of such ground as may be required by the troops.

THE DEATH RECORD.

LEE FAIRCHILD.

Lee Fairchild, at one time president of the Pleiades Club, of New York, and later editor of a Frostburg (Md.) paper, well known as a poet, humorist and for many years a familiar figure in Republican campaigns here and elsewhere, died penniless in a hospital in New York Saturday from pneumonia. He was 50 years old. Fairchild appeared at the hospital Thursday and asked for treatment.

Potatoes Badly Frozen.

Garrett county farmers near Lonaconing buried hundreds of bushels of potatoes in pits last fall, as is their custom, and put as much cover on them as usual. They are opening the pits now and find the potatoes frozen. Turnips and cabbage put under ground for the winter were also frozen.

This denotes the severity of the winter. Where straw was used to cover the vegetables before the earth was thrown on only the vegetables nearest the surface were frozen. Geo. Beeman lost 40 bushels in one pit and fears that all his pit potatoes are frozen.

Says Secret Is Out.

The Lonaconing Star of March 17 publishes a statement in bold type to the effect that the incendiary who set the fire that destroyed the Star printing plant on October 13, 1905, has been discovered, and that he has made a confession. In explaining why no arrest has been made the Star says:

"Readers of the Star and the community in general will at once wonder why we do not publish the name of the incendiary-murderer in large bold letters and bring about his arrest. We have decided to postpone the last act of the great drama until we receive orders from Editor Robinson, who has been apprised of the facts, and who may decide to start for Lonaconing immediately.

RADICAL STEP IN LIBEL AND SLANDER LAW PROPOSED

Senator Speicher Wants Both Offenses Within Cognizance of Criminal Law.

A radical step in the institution of statute law relating to slander and libel in Maryland depends upon the passage or rejection of a bill introduced in the Senate Monday by Senator Speicher of Garrett county. The proposed bill, for the first time in this state, makes libel and slander a criminal offense, and punishable as such with heavy fines or imprisonment, or both, the bill following closely the Pennsylvania law for punishment of these offenses. The measure adds for this purpose four new sections to article 27 of the Code of Public General Laws, title "Crimes and Punishments," to follow section 650 and to be known as sections 651, 652, 653 and 654.

Senator Speicher's interest in having the criminal law take cognizance of libel and slander, instead of leaving the only resource of the plaintiff in this state to the civil law, is to some extent the result of the last legislative campaign in Garrett county.

The proposed law is sweeping in character. It includes a clause which will cover specifically black-hand cases, which at present can only be prosecuted under the charge of conspiracy. It provides against furnishing or sending to newspapers libellous statements, and the publishing of posters and cartoons directed against political candidates except under certain restricted conditions. Finally, it prohibits anonymous communications of a libellous or scurrilous nature.

Article 651 provides that the author of malicious and defamatory libel, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, or the author of a letter threatening bodily injury or destruction of property shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $2,000 nor less than $1,000, or undergo imprisonment not exceeding three years nor less than 12 months, or both.

Article 652 provides that any person wilfully stating, delivering or transmitting, by any means whatever, to the manager, editor, publisher or reporter of any newspaper, magazine, etc., any libelous statement concerning any person or corporation shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, for which the same penalties as in the foregoing section may be imposed.

Section 653 in regard to the vilification of candidates for public office provides that:

"Whoever writes, prints, posts, or distributes, or causes to be written, printed, posted or distributed, a circular or poster, cartoon or other written or printed paper, which is designed or tends to injure or defeat any candidate for nomination or election to public office by reflecting upon his personal character or political actions, unless the same shall be published in a newspaper avowedly responsible therefor, or unless there appears upon such circular, poster or paper, in a conspicuous place, either the names of the chairman and secretary, or at least the names of two officers of the political or other organization issuing the same, or the name of some duly registered elector with description of his election district, as responsible therefor, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or less than $200, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year or less than six months, or both; and if the statements are untrue the person so offending shall also be deemed guilty of libel and may be prosecuted in the civil or criminal courts, or both."

Improvements at Deer Park.

Mayor W. W. Hennen and the town council of Deer Park, Messrs. John Speicher, C. A. Ashby, Lorenzo Thrasher and Emmanuel King, have again taken up the question of road building and street improving within the corporate limits. They believe and maintain that the town authorities should do everything possible to make it attractive and that the building of, and improving the entrances to the town, is bound to be productive of good. This work will now be taken up and accomplished and without any appreciable cost to the taxpayers. Mayor Hennen is full of energy, and the council are aiding him in the work. Harmony has prevailed since the present administration came into power, and there is a deep seated feeling among a great many voters of both parties that these gentlemen should be invited to serve another term.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

Some Measures Tied Up In Committee, Others Having Plain Sailing.

With the near approach of the time for adjournment of the General Assembly of Maryland, local legislation is being side tracked in order that bills affecting the state at large may have the right of way, and it is an open question as the passage or non-passage of hundreds of local measures, some of them of importance to Garrett county.

The local bill incorporating the municipality of Mountain Lake Park, giving the people of that town the right to elect a mayor and members of a town council, has passed the Senate and on Monday was read the first time in the House. It was referred to the Committee on Corporations instead of to the local delegation as was expected by the sponsors of the measure. The bill confers powers upon the residents of Mountain Lake Park the same as any other municipal government. It is being opposed by some of the property owners and the entire board of directors of the Mountain Lake Park Association, while its champions include property owners and residents of the Park in general.

Mr. Bolden's bill dividing Election District No. 8 into two voting precincts has passed the House and is now in committee in the Senate. There is no opposition to the passage of the measure.

Senator Speicher's bill incorporating the Castleman Basin Coal Company, has passed the Senate and is now in the House. This measure if a private one creating the above corporation and confers powers upon the stockholders to mine and develop coal lands in Districts Nos. 12 and 3 of Garrett county.

We have received from Senator Speicher the original draft of the primary election law for Garrett county introduced in the Senate by the author this week. The measure is one which has many commendable features and should become a law.

Mr. Bolden's measure limiting the franchise within the municipality of Oakland to owners of property, is quietly resting in its grave.

Other local measures, among them being the Garrett County Road Law, have passed both houses and have received the approval of the Governor.

Probably the most important measure locally that is being delayed in passage is the special act appropriating a sum of money for the use of the School Board in extending the term of school. For a time this bill had rough sledding but since the State Board of Education has stamped it with approval there is every possibility that it will be passed and receive the approval of the executive.

Tuesday Senator Speicher introduced a bill to incorporate the Citizens' Banking and Trust Company of Oakland, which was referred to the Corporations Committee.

He also introduced a bill amending the law relating to attorneys at law and attorneys of fact, which was referred to the Committee on Judicial Proceedings.

Also, a bill incorporating the Garrett County Railway Company, with Messrs. Gideon J. Gnagey, of Grantsville; Henry M. Speicher, of Accident; Webster Ravenscroft, of Oakland, and George Padgett and Charles Lighthiser, whose places of residence are not given, as incorporators. The measure grants the incorporators the right to build an electric road from Oakland to Mountain Lake Park, Deer Park, Thayerville, Accident, Grantsville and Frostburg; also from Accident to Friendsville and from Grantsville to the Pennsylvania line, in order to be continued to such points in Pennsylvania as the directors may determine. Capital stock is to be $200,000, which may be increased to such amount as may be deemed necessary.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

With all members of the court present the semi-monthly session of the Orphans' Court convened Monday morning and was in session an hour or two when the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were granted to Samuel Snyder on the personal estate of the late Mary A. Snyder, of near Red House; to Lincoln Callis on the personal estate of the late Sarah Spiker, of Loch Lynn Heights.

First and final account of Jacob W. Ringler, administrator of Anthony W. Ringler, was ratified and confirmed.

Notice.

Mr. J. W. Gephart, the agent for Porter's Pain King is now in this county. Mr. Gephart hopes to call on his regular customers promptly and will appreciate their continued patronage.

GREAT REFORMS WILL TERMINATE IN PROMISES ONLY

Democrats Have not Made Good In Legislature.

It begins to look as though the roseate promises of the Democrats in their platform as well as those embodied in Governor Crothers' message will turn into ashes. Ten days only of the General Asssembly remain in which to enact into laws the great reforms promised by the dominant party. This is a short time in which to accomplish most important and far-reaching results.

The people at large will probably fare much better if most of the Democratic promises are not redeemed, including the costly, unnecessary and cumbersome Straus bill creating a public utilities commission, the direct and mandatory primary election bill and an amendment restricting the elective franchise. Among the recommendations of Governor Crothers in his message are several which would be beneficial to the state if they should become laws.

Here are some of the recommendations of the Democrats in their state platform and of Governor Crothers in his message to the General Assembly, their present status and probable fate:

To abolish the system of "continuing" appropriations; that is, institutions which receive state aid annually under old acts will have to submit to new acts. The bill has been pigeon-holed in the Senate Finance Committee.

To curb corporations by the creation of a public utility commission, which will probably furnish desirable berths for Democratic politicians and handicap capital seeking investment in Maryland. The Straus bill will be relegated to the rear and a more sensible proposition substituted.

To enlarge the powers of the state auditor, and to give him assistance so that he can delve more deeply into the accounts of sheriffs, clerks of court and other officials handling state funds to ascertain if the state gets all that is due it; sleeping.

To create a state purchasing board, which shall buy staple supplies for state institutions in bulk after advertising specifications and receiving bids; sleeping.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1910. NUMBER 4

COURT HOUSE GROUNDS WILL BE BEAUTIFIED

Contracts Called For by the Board of County Commissioners.

By reference to the advertising columns of this paper today it will be noticed that the Board of County Commissioners will receive bids at the office of the Commissioners at the court house on April 11, at 2 o'clock p. m., for "the labor and material required for the completion of certain walks, approaches and steps as described in specifications and shown by plans" to be on file at the office of the Commissioners after April 1st.

The contract above refers to the contemplated improvements to be made to the court house grounds, approaches and walks surrounding its outlines.

While the plans and specifications have not yet been received from the architects, an outline plan was exhibited to THE REPUBLICAN at the board room of the Commissioners yesterday afternoon. The plan contemplates a concrete entrance to the court house grounds from Third street with a series of steps leading to the front entrance of the building. The entrance to the grounds will be twenty feet in width and circular in form with a reservation in the centre for a fountain or other ornament. The steps will be twelve feet in width and will be broken by two or three landings as they ascend to the building.

The Commissioners very wisely decided to carry the retaining wall, which will be included in the general plan of improvement, back to the property line and not allow the wall to abut on the street. This will allow the walk to be about twelve feet wide, which will also be of concrete. The contemplated improvement will cost in the neighborhood of two thousand dollars.

Third Track Being Built.

A large force of men and many teams ranging to local people are at work along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad between Mountain Lake Park and Deer Park making the necessary fills and cuts to accommodate a third track to be built by the railroad company between the two points mentioned.

The third track system may also be extended westward from the Park through Oakland to Rinard's, east of Terra Alta, thus making the road a three track system from Rowlesburg to Deer Park. Should the improvement be made through Oakland there is a probability that the route may be laid through the Oakland Hotel grounds, thus eliminating the reverse curves at the station and west of that point.

SERIOUSLY BURNED BY EXPLODING GAS

Stanley Kildow, Helper in Lauer's Bakery, Painfully Injured.

Stanley Kildow, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kildow, of Oakland, was very painfully burned about his head and face last Friday afternoon at the Oakland Model Bakery where he is employed as a helper, by exploding gas which ignited as he opened the door of the oven.

From the young man's account it appears that he had been instructed to light the gas to fire the oven and was in the act of doing so when the explosion came without warning. It seems that the usual custom in firing the gas is to light a piece of paper and throw it inside the oven and then turn on the gas. By some means gas had escaped into the oven where it had accumulated in large quantities and when the lighted paper was thrown inside the door the explosion followed. Young Kildow's injuries were exceeding painful for a number of days. His entire face was blistered and his eyes were somewhat burned but fortunately no permanent injury will result.

GARRETT COUNTY SPOT IDEAL FOR CAMP SITE

Army Officer Favorably Impressed With Lay of Land Near Mt. Lake Park.

Sent out by the War Department to inspect sites for the big instruction camp for the National Guard of the Middle States, which will be held during the coming summer, Capt. B. H. Wells, quartermaster in the United States Army, after looking over the country surrounding Oakland and Mountain Lake Park, expressed himself as being very favorably impressed with the surroundings.

Viewed from every standpoint the land inspected by Capt. Wells is ideal for the purpose, with just hills enough for the successful maneuvering of cavalry, infantry and artillery, and large level spaces for drill grounds for all branches of the service.

Capt. Wells came to Oakland yesterday morning on train No. 3, being accompanied by a general passenger agent of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company, and was met at the train by Lieut. E. S. West, who accompanied the visitors over the ground in the forenoon. In the afternoon the party was augmented by the addition of Messrs. D. E Offutt, S. T. Jones and G. S. Hamill.

About 2,000 regulars of the United States Army will be in the camp during the entire time, including infantry, cavalry and artillery, with about 1,500 horses. The militia of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, New Jersey and the District of Columbia will be sent to the camp in detachments and each spend about two weeks. In all about 12,000 troops will be encamped, though the highest number in camp at any one time will be about 5,000.

Following the visit here of Capt. Wells yesterday a meeting of the Board of Trade was held last night for the purpose of getting property owners and others interested in the plan to have the soldiers camp here. The Board of Trade instructed its secretary, Mr. Samuel Lawton, to send out notices to farmers and all other land owners within the proposed camp zone, and requested this paper to make the announcement of a meeting of the property owners to be held at the court house Saturday at 2 o'clock which time terms of agreement covering damage to crops, etc., between the government and land owners are to be discussed and satisfactory arrangements made for the occupation of such ground as may be required by the troops.

THE DEATH RECORD.

LEE FAIRCHILD.

Lee Fairchild, at one time president of the Pleiades Club, of New York, and later editor of a Frostburg (Md.) paper, well known as a poet, humorist and for many years a familiar figure in Republican campaigns here and elsewhere, died penniless in a hospital in New York Saturday from pneumonia. He was 50 years old. Fairchild appeared at the hospital Thursday and asked for treatment.

Potatoes Badly Frozen.

Garrett county farmers near Lonaconing buried hundreds of bushels of potatoes in pits last fall, as is their custom, and put as much cover on them as usual. They are opening the pits now and find the potatoes frozen. Turnips and cabbage put under ground for the winter were also frozen.

This denotes the severity of the winter. Where straw was used to cover the vegetables before the earth was thrown on only the vegetables nearest the surface were frozen. Geo. Beeman lost 40 bushels in one pit and fears that all his pit potatoes are frozen.

Says Secret Is Out.

The Lonaconing Star of March 17 publishes a statement in bold type to the effect that the incendiary who set the fire that destroyed the Star printing plant on October 13, 1905, has been discovered, and that he has made a confession. In explaining why no arrest has been made the Star says:

"Readers of the Star and the community in general will at once wonder why we do not publish the name of the incendiary-murderer in large bold letters and bring about his arrest. We have decided to postpone the last act of the great drama until we receive orders from Editor Robinson, who has been apprised of the facts, and who may decide to start for Lonaconing immediately.

RADICAL STEP IN LIBEL AND SLANDER LAW PROPOSED

Senator Speicher Wants Both Offenses Within Cognizance of Criminal Law.

A radical step in the institution of statute law relating to slander and libel in Maryland depends upon the passage or rejection of a bill introduced in the Senate Monday by Senator Speicher of Garrett county. The proposed bill, for the first time in this state, makes libel and slander a criminal offense, and punishable as such with heavy fines or imprisonment, or both, the bill following closely the Pennsylvania law for punisnment of these offenses. The measure adds for this purpose four new sections to article 27 of the Code of Public General Laws, title "Crimes and Punishments," to follow section 650 and to be known as sections 651, 652, 653 and 654.

Senator Speicher's interest in having the criminal law take cognizance of libel and slander, instead of leaving the only resource of the plaintiff in this state to the civil law, is to some extent the result of the last legislative campaign in Garrett county.

The proposed law is sweeping in character. It includes a clause which will cover specifically black-hand cases, which at present can only be prosecuted under the charge of conspiracy. It provides against furnishing or sending to newspapers libellous statements, and the publishing of posters and cartoons directed against political candidates except under certain restricted conditions. Finally, it prohibits anonymous communications of a libellous or scurrilous nature.

Article 651 provides that the author of malicious and defamatory libel, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, or the author of a letter threatening bodily injury or destruction of property shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $2,000 nor less than $1,000, or undergo imprisonment not exceeding three years nor less than 12 months, or both.

Article 652 provides that any person wilfully stating, delivering or transmitting, by any means whatever, to the manager, editor, publisher or reporter of any newspaper, magazine, etc., any libelous statement concerning any person or corporation shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, for which the same penalties as in the foregoing section may be imposed.

Section 653 in regard to the vilification of candidates for public office provides that:

"Whoever writes, prints, posts, or distributes, or causes to be written, printed, posted or distributed, a circular or poster, cartoon or other written or printed paper, which is designed or tends to injure or defeat any candidate for nomination or election to public office by reflecting upon his personal character or political actions, unless the the same shall be published in a newspaper avowedly responsible therefor, or unless there appears upon such circular, poster or paper, in a conspicuous place, either the names of the chairman and secretary, or at least the names of two officers of the political or other organization issuing the same, or the name of some duly registered elector with description of his election district, as responsible therefor, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or less than $200, or by imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year or less than six months, or both; and if the statements are untrue the person so offending shall also be deemed guilty of libel and may be prosecuted in the civil or criminal courts, or both."

Improvements at Deer Park.

Mayor W. W. Hennen and the town council of Deer Park, Messrs. John Speicher, C. A. Ashby, Lorenzo Thrasher and Emmanuel King, have again taken up the question of road building and street improving within the corporate limits. They believe and maintain that the town authorities should do everything possible to make it attractive and that the building of, and improving the entrances to the town, is bound to be productive of good. This work will now be taken up and accomplished and without any appreciable cost to the taxpayers. Mayor Hennen is full of energy, and the council are aiding him in the work. Harmony has prevailed since the present administration came into power, and there is a deep seated feeling among a great many voters of both parties that these gentlemen should be invited to serve another term.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

Some Measures Tied Up In Committee, Others Having Plain Sailing.

With the near approach of the time for adjournment of the General Assembly of Maryland, local legislation is being side tracked in order that bills affecting the state at large may have the right of way, and it is an open question as the passage or non-passage of hundreds of local measures, some of them of importance to Garrett county.

The local bill incorporating the municipality of Mountain Lake Park, giving the people of that town the right to elect a mayor and members of a town council, has passed the Senate and on Monday was read the first time in the House. It was referred to the Committee on Corporations instead of to the local delegation as was expected by the sponsors of the measure. The bill confers powers upon the residents of Mountain Lake Park the same as any other municipal government. It is being opposed by some of the property owners and the entire board of directors of the Mountain Lake Park Association, while its champions include property owners and residents of the Park in general.

Mr. Bolden's bill dividing Election District No. 8 into two voting precincts has passed the House and is now in committee in the Senate. There is no opposition to the passage of the measure.

Senator Speicher's bill incorporating the Castleman Basin Coal Company, has passed the Senate and is now in the House. This measure if a private one creating the above corporation and confers powers upon the stockholders to mine and develop coal lands in Districts Nos. 12 and 3 of Garrett county.

We have received from Senator Speicher the original draft of the primary election law for Garrett county introduced in the Senate by the author this week. The measure is one which has many commendable features and should become a law.

Mr. Bolden's measure limiting the franchise within the municipality of Oakland to owners of property, is quietly resting in its grave.

Other local measures, among them being the Garrett County Road Law, have passed both houses and have received the approval of the Governor.

Probably the most important measure locally that is being delayed in passage is the special act appropriating a sum of money for the use of the School Board in extending the term of school. For a time this bill had rough sledding but since the State Board of Education has stamped it with approval there is every possibilty that it will be passed and receive the approval of the executive.

Tuesday Senator Speicher introduced a bill to incorporate the Citizens' Banking and Trust Company of Oakland, which was referred to the Corporations Committee.

He also introduced a bill amending the law relating to attorneys at law and attorneys of fact, which was referred to the Committee on Judicial Proceedings.

Also, a bill incorporating the Garrett County Railway Company, with Messrs. Gideon J. Gnagey, of Grantsville; Henry M. Speicher, of Accident; Webster Ravenscroft, of Oakland, and George Padgett and Charles Lighthiser, whose places of residence are not given, as incorporators. The measure grants the incorporators the right to build an electric road from Oakland to Mountain Lake Park, Deer Park, Thayerville, Accident, Grantsville and Frostburg; also from Accident to Friendsville and from Grantsville to the Pennsylvania line, in order to be continued to such points in Pennsylvania as the directors may determine. Capital stock is to be $200,000, which may be increased to such amount as may be deemed necessary.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

With all members of the court present the semi-monthly session of the Orphans' Court convened Monday morning and was in session an hour or two when the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were granted to Samuel Snyder on the personal estate of the late Mary A. Snyder, of near Red House; to Lincoln Callis on the personal estate of the late Sarah Spiker, of Loch Lynn Heights.

First and final account of Jacob W. Ringler, administrator of Anthony W. Ringler, was ratified and confirmed.

Notice.

Mr. J. W. Gephart, the agent for Porter's Pain King is now in this county. Mr. Gephart hopes to call on his regular customers promptly and will appreciate their continued patronage.

GREAT REFORMS WILL TERMINATE IN PROMISES ONLY

Democrats Have not Made Good In Legislature.

It begins to look as though the roseate promises of the Democrats in their platform as well as those embodied in Governor Crothers' message will turn into ashes. Ten days only of the General Asssembly remain in which to enact into laws the great reforms promised by the dominant party. This is a short time in which to accomplish most important and far-reaching results.

The people at large will probably fare much better if most of the Democratic promises are not redeemed, including the costly, unnecessary and cumbersome Straus bill creating a public utilities commission, the direct and mandatory primary election bill and an amendment restricting the elective franchise. Among the recommendations of Governor Crothers in his message are several which would be beneficial to the state if they should become laws.

Here are some of the recommendations of the Democrats in their state platform and of Governor Crothers in his message to the General Assembly, their present status and probable fate:

To abolish the system of "continuing" appropriations; that is, institutions which receive state aid annually under old acts will have to submit to new acts. The bill has been pigeon-holed in the Senate Finance Committee.

To curb corporations by the creation of a public utility commission, which will probably furnish desirable berths for Democratic politicians and handicap capital seeking investment in Maryland. The Straus bill will be relegated to the rear and a more sensible proposition substituted.

To enlarge the powers of the state auditor, and to give him assistance so that he can delve more deeply into the accounts of sheriffs, clerks of court and other officials handling state funds to ascertain if the state gets all that is due it; sleeping.

To create a state purchasing board, which shall buy staple supplies for state institutions in bulk after advertising specifications and receiving bids; sleeping.

To develop in state institutions, where it is possible, small, simple industrial plants looking to the employment, under medical advice, of the afflicted, and to furnish revenue to the state; sleeping.

The refusal by the state to grant any appropriations for building on land to which the state has not a clear title; sleeping.

To create the office of state architect, so as to avoid payment to private architects by the state of large fees, and to have for this purpose a state official whose interest will be to save the state money; sleeping.

To employ prisoners and convicts on public roads; sleeping.

To obtain compensation for the state's water powers; in committee room.

To derive greater income from leases of oyster bottoms by increasing the number of leases; amendments unfavorably reported; to be voted upon by Senate this week.

To compel automobile owners to pay more taxes in order that the improvement of public roads may go on without imposing too onerous burdens on real estate; pending in the Senate.

Direct and mandatory primary election bill; sleeping.

Bill increasing Baltimore's representation in the General Assembly; amended in the Senate; pending in the House.

Reserving for state power to impose tax on income; joint resolution ratifying amendment to federal Constitution giving general government power to impose the tax; adopted by the House.

Reassessment of property in the counties; pending in the Senate.

Uniform game and fish bills; sleeping.

Pure food and drug bill; pending in the Senate; will pass with amendments.

Partial care of the indigent insane by the state; bill pending in the Senate.

Retrenchment of legislative expenses; sleeping.

Abolishing fees of public officials and substituting salaries; sleeping.

Bill to reform state working system; pending in the Senate.

Insurance reforms, sleeping.

Many of the propositions were recommended by the commission appointed by the Governor. He will reappoint many of these commissions, and others to consider additional subjects. He hopes that beneficial propositions recommended by the commissions, which will not be acted upon favorably by this legislature, will receive favorable consideration at the hands of some future legislature.

A Story of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

"Of course you will understand how impossible it is for me to come here, countess. Your father, the duke, does not mince matters, and I'm not quite a fool."

"It is of the prince that I want to speak, Mr. Tullis," she said. "I do want to talk very seriously with you concerning his future—I might say his immediate future."

He looked at her narrowly.

"Are you quite serious?"

"Quite. I could not have asked you to come to this house for anything trivial. We have become very good friends, you and I. Too good, perhaps, for I've no doubt there are old tabbies in Edelweiss who are provoked to criticism. You know what I mean."

"The prince is a sturdy little beggar," he began, but she lifted her hand in protest.

"And he has sturdy, loyal friends. That is agreed. And yet"— She paused, a perplexed line coming between her expressive eyes.

John Tullis opened his own eyes very wide. "You don't mean to say that he is—he is in peril of any sort?"

She leaned nearer to him, dropping the ash from her cigarette into the receiver as she spoke slowly, intensely. "I think he is in peril—in deadly peril."

He stared hard. "What do you mean?" he demanded, with an involuntary glance over his shoulder. She interpreted that glance correctly.

"The peril is not here, Mr. Tullis. I know what you are thinking. My father is a loyal subject. The peril I suggest never comes to Graustark."

"Never comes to Graustark?" he almost whispered. "You don't—you can't mean your—your husband?"

"HE MEANS EVIL TO PRINCE ROBIN?"

"I mean Count Marlanx," she said steadily.

"He means evil to Prince Robin? Good heavens, countess, I—I can't believe it. I know he is bitter, revengeful and all that, but"— "He is all that and more," she said. "First you must let me impress you that I am not a traitor to his cause. I could not be that, for the sufficient reason that I only suspect its existence. I am not in any sense a part of it. I do not know anything. I only feel. I dare say you realize that I do not love Count Marlanx—that there is absolutely nothing in common between us except a name. We won't go into that. I"—

"I am overjoyed to hear you say this, countess," he said very seriously. "I have been so bold on occasion as to assert—for your private ear, of course—that you could not by any freak of nature happen to care for Count Marlanx, whom I know only by description. You have laughed at my so called American wit, and you have been most tolerant. Now, I feel that I am justified. I'm immeasurably glad to hear you confess that you do not love your husband."

"You have never tried to make love to me," she went on. "That's what I like about you. I think most men are silly, not because I am so very young, but because my husband is so ridiculously old. Don't you think so? But, never mind! I see you are quite eager to answer. That's enough. Take another cigarette and—listen to what I am going to say." He declined the cigarette with a shake of his head.

After a moment she went on resolutely: "As I said before, I do not know that my suspicions are correct. I have not even breathed them to my father. He would have laughed at me. My husband is a Graustarkian, even as I am, but there is this distinction between us—he despises Graustark, while I love her in every drop of my blood. I know that in his heart he has never ceased to brew evil for the throne that disgraced him. He openly expresses his hatred for the present dynasty and has more than once said in public gatherings that he could cheerfully assist in its utter destruction. That, of course, is commonly known in Graustark, where he is scorned and derided. But he is not a man to serve his hatred with mere idle words and inaction.

"I am seeing you here in this big room openly," she went on, "for the simple reason that if I am being watched this manner of meeting may be above suspicion. We may speak freely here, for we cannot be heard unless we raise our voices. Don't betray surprise or consternation. The eyes of the wall may be better than its ears."

"You don't mean to say you are being watched here in your father's house?" he demanded.

"I don't know. This I do know—the count has many spies in Edelweiss. He is systematically apprised of everything that occurs at court, in the city or in the council chamber. Day before yesterday I saw his secretary in the streets, a man who has been in his employ for five years or more and who now pretends to be a lawyer here. His name is Brutus. I spoke with him. He said that he had left the count six weeks ago in Vienna, determined to set out for himself in his chosen profession. He knows, of course, that I am not and never have been in the confidences of my husband. I asked him if it was known in Edelweiss that he had served the count as secretary. He promptly handed me one of his business cards on which he refers to himself as the former trusted and confidential secretary of Count Marlanx. Now, I happen to know that he is still in my husband's service, or was no longer ago than last week. He is here for a purpose, as my husband's representative. I have not been asleep all these months at Schloss Marlanx. I have seen and heard enough to convince me that some great movement is on foot. My intelligence tells me that it has to do with Graustark. As he wishes the prince no good, it must be for evil."

"But there is nothing he can do. He has no following here. The prince is adored by the people. Count Marlanx would not be such a fool as to"—

"He is no fool," she interrupted quickly. "That's why I am afraid. If he is plotting against the crown, you may depend upon it he is laying his plans well. John Tullis, that man is a devil—a devil incarnate!" She turned her face away. A spasm of utter repugnance crossed her face.

"I am afraid of Peter Brutus. He is here to watch—everybody."

She leaned against the great carved mantel post, a tall, slender, lissom creature, exquisitely gowned in rarest Irish lace, her bare neck and shoulders gleaming white against the dull timbers beyond, the faint glow from the embers creeping up to her face with the insistence of a maiden's flush. He gazed in rapt admiration, his heart thumping like fury in his great breast. She was little more than a girl, this wife of old Marlanx, and yet how wise, how clever, how brilliant she was!

She was well named Ingomede the Beautiful.

"Does Baron Dangloss know this man Brutus?" asked Tullis, arising to stand beside her.

"I don't know," she said thoughtfully. "I have not spoken to him concerning Brutus. Perhaps he knows. The baron is very wise. Let me tell you how I happen to know that Peter Brutus is still serving Count Marlanx and why I think his presence signifies a crisis of some sort."

Her voice, always low and even, seemed lower still. "In the first place, I have a faithful friend in one of the oldest retainers at Schloss Marlanx. His daughter is my maid. She is here with me now. The old man came to see Josepha one day last week. He had accompanied Count Marlanx to the town of Balak, which is in Axphain, a mile beyond the Graustark line. Peter Brutus was with my husband in Balak for two days. They were closeted together from morning till night in the house where Marlanx was stopping. At the end of two days Brutus went away, but he carried with him a vast sum of money provided by my husband. It was given out that he was on his way to Serros, in Dawsbergen, where he expected to purchase a business block for his master. Marlanx waited another day in Balak, permitting Josepha's father to come on to Edelweiss with a message for me and to see his daughter. He"—

"And Josepha's father saw Brutus in Edelweiss?"

"No. But he did see him going into Balak as he left for Edelweiss that morning. He wore a disguise, but Jacob says he could not be mistaken. Moreover, he was accompanied by several men whom he recognized as Graustark mountaineers and hunters of rather unsavory reputation. They left Brutus at the gates of Balak and went off into the hills. All this happened before I knew that Peter was living in Edelweiss. When I saw him here I knew at once that his presence meant something sinister. I can put many things together that once puzzled me—the comings and goings of months, the secret reports and consultations, the queer looking men who came to the castle, the long absences of my husband and my—my own virtual imprisonment—yes, imprisonment. I was not permitted to leave the castle for days at a time during his absences."

"Surely you will not go back again!" he began hotly.

"Sh!" She put a finger to her lips. A manservant was quietly crossing the hall just off the library. "He is a new man. I do not like his appearance."

The servant disappeared through a door at the end of the hall.

"Then there were the great sums of money that my husband sent off from time to time," she continued, "and the strange boxes that came overland to the castle and later went away again as secretly as they came. Mr. Tullis, I am confident in my mind that those boxes contained firearms and ammunition. I have thought it all out. Perhaps I am wrong, but it seems to me that I can almost see those firearms stored away in the caves and cabins outside of Edelweiss, ready for instant use when the signal comes."

"God! An uprising! A plot so huge as that!" he gasped, amazed. It is fortunate that he was not facing the door. The same servant, passing once more, might have seen the telltale consternation in his eyes. "It cannot be possible! Why, Dangloss and his men would have scented it long ago."

"I have not said that I am sure of anything, remember that. I leave it to you to analyze. You have the foundation on which to work. I'd advise you to waste no time. Something tells me that the crisis is near at hand."

CHAPTER VII.

AT THE WITCH'S HUT.

In the meantime our excellent young friend, Truxton King, was having a sorry time of it. It all began when he went to the cathedral in the hope of seeing the charming aunt of the little prince once more. Not only did he attend one service, but all of them, having been assured that the royal family worshiped there quite as regularly and as religiously as the lowliest communicant. She did not appear.

More than all this, he met with fresh disappointment when he ambled down to the armorer's shop. The doors were locked and there was no sign of life about the shuttered place.

The next day King made a purely business call at the shop of Mr. Spantz. He looked long, with a somewhat shifty eye, at the cabinet of ancient rings and necklaces, and then departed without having seen the interesting Miss Platanova.

At his room in the hotel he found a note addressed to himself. It did not have much to say, but it meant a great deal. There was no signature, and the handwriting was that of a woman.

"Please do not come again." That was all.

He laughed with a fine tone of defiance and went back to the shop at 5 o'clock, just to prove that nothing so timid as a note could stop him. On the occasion of this last visit to the shop he did not stay long, but went away somewhat dazed to find himself the possessor of a ring he did not want and out of pocket just $30, American. Having come to the conclusion that knight errantry of that kind was not only profligate, but distinctly irritating to his sense of humor, he looked up Mr. Hobbs and arranged for a day's ride in the mountains.

Mr. Hobbs led his patron into the mountain roads early the next morning, both well mounted and provided with luncheon.

It is a good three hours' ride to the summit of Monastery mountain. And after the height has been attained one does not care to linger long among the chilly, whistling crags, with their snow crevasses and bitter winds. The utter loneliness, the aloofness of this frost crowned crest appalls, disheartens one who loves the fair, green things of life.

It was 3 o'clock when they clattered down a stone road and up to the forbidding vale in which lurked, like an evil, guilty thing, the log built home of the witch of Ganlook gap, that ancient female who made no secret of her practices in witchcraft.

A low thatched roof protruded from the hill against which the hut was built. As a matter of fact, a thin chimney grew out of the earth itself, for all the world like a smoking tree stump. The single door was so low that one was obliged to stoop to enter the little room where the dame had been holding forth for threescore years, 'twas said. This was her throne room, her dining room, her bedchamber, her all, it would seem, unless one had been there before and knew that her kitchen was beyond, in the side of the hill. The one window, sans glass, looked narrowly out upon an odd opening in the foliage below, giving the occupant of the hut an unobstructed view of the winding road that led up from Edelweiss.

The two horsemen rode into the glen and came plump upon a small detachment of the royal guard, mounted and rather resolute in their lack of amiability.

"Soldiers, I'd say," remarked Mr. King. His eyes brightened and his hat came off with a switch.

"Hello! There's the prince!"

Farther up the glen—in fact at the very door of the witch's hut—were gathered a small but rather distinguished portion of the royal household. It was not difficult to recognize the little prince. He was standing beside John Tullis, and it is not with a desire to speak ill of his valor that we add he was clutching the slackest part of that gentleman's riding breeks with an earnestness that betrayed extreme trepidation. Facing them, on the stone doorstep, was the witch herself. Behind Tullis and the prince were several ladies and gentlemen.

Truxton King's heart swelled suddenly. Next to the tall figure of Colonel Quinnox of the royal guard was the slim, entrancing lady of his most recent dreams, the prince's aunt, the lady of the goldfish conspiracy!

The Countess Marlanx, tall and exquisite, was a little apart from the others, with Baron Dangloss and young Count Von Engo, whom Truxton was ready to hate because he was a recognized suitor for the hand of the slim young person in gray. He was for riding boldly up to this little group, but a very objectionable lieutenant barred the way, supported in no small measure by the agitated defection of Mr. Hobbs.

The way was made easy by the intervention of the alert young woman in gray. She caught sight of the restricted adventurers—or one of them, to be quite accurate—and, after speeding a swift shaft of astonishment, turned quickly to Prince Bobby.

The prince broke the ice.

"Hello!" he cried shrilly.

"Hello!" responded the gentleman readily.

John Tullis found himself being dragged away from the witch's door toward the newcomer at the bottom of the glen. Mr. Hobbs listened with deepening awe to the friendly conversation which resulted in Truxton King going forward to join the party in front of the hut.

Truxton was duly presented to the ladies and gentlemen of the party by John Tullis, who gracefully announced that he knew King's parents in New York. Baron Dangloss was quite an old friend, if one were to judge by the manner in which he greeted the young man. The lady in gray smiled so sweetly and nodded so blithely that Tullis, instead of presenting King to her as he had done to the Countess Marlanx and others, merely said:

"And you know one another, of course." Whereupon she flushed very prettily.

Truxton King, scarcely able to believe his good fortune, crowded into the loathsome, squalid room with his aristocratic companions.

Never had Truxton looked upon a creature who so thoroughly vindicated the lifelong reliance he had put in the description of witches given by the fairy tale tellers of his earliest youth. She had the traditional hook nose and peaked chin, the glittering eyes, the thousand wrinkles and the toothless gums. He looked about for the raven and the cat, but if she had them they were not in evidence. At a rough guess he calculated her age at 100 years.

"Grewsome lady, isn't she?" whispered King.

"I shall dream of her for months," whispered the lady in gray, shuddering.

"Would you mind telling me how I am to address you?" whispered King. They were leaning against the mud plastered wall near the little window side by side. "You see, I'm a stranger in a strange land."

"You must not speak while she is gazing into the crystal," she warned after a quick, searching glance at his face.

Although it was broad daylight, the low, stuffy room would have been pitch dark had it not been for the flickering candles on the table beside the bent gray head of the mumbling fortune teller, whose bony fingers twitched over and about her crystal globe like wiggling serpents' tails. The window gave little or no light, and the door was closed, her grinning grandson leaning against it limply.

The witch began by reading the fortune of John Tullis, who had been pushed forward by the wide eyed prince. In a cackling monotone she rambled through a supposititious history of his past, for the chief part so unintelligible that even he could not gainsay the statements. Later she bent her piercing eyes upon the prince and refused to read his future, shrilly asserting that she had not the courage to tell what might befall the little ruler, all the while muttering something about the two little princes who had died in a tower ages and ages ago. Seeing that the boy was frightened, Tullis withdrew him to the background. The Countess Marlanx came next. She was smiling derisively.

"GREWSOME LADY, ISN'T SHE?" WHISPERED KING.

"You have returned from some one whom you hate," began the witch. "He is your husband. You will marry again. There is a fair haired man in love with you. You are in love with him. I can see trouble"—

But the countess deliberately turned away from the table, her cheeks flaming with the consciousness that a smile had swept the circle behind her graceful back.

"Ridiculous!" she said and avoided John Tullis' gaze. "I don't care to hear any more. Come, baron! You are next."

Truxton King, subdued and troubled in his mind, found himself studying his surroundings and the people who went so far to make them interesting. His eye had fallen upon a crack in the door that led to the kitchen, although he had no means of knowing that it was a kitchen. To his amazement, a gleaming eye was looking out upon the room from beyond this narrow crack. He looked long and found that he was not mistaken. There was an eye glued close to the opposite side of the rickety door, and its gaze was directed to the Countess Marlanx.

Without pausing to consider the result of his action, he sprang across the room, shouting as he did so that there was a man behind the door. Grasping the latch, he threw the door wide open, the others in the room looking at him as if he were suddenly crazed.

There was instant commotion, with cries and exclamations from all. Quick as the others were, the old woman was at his side before them, snarling with rage. Her talonlike fingers sunk into his arm, and her gaze went darting about the room in a most convincing way.

Baron Dangloss was convinced that the young man had seen the eye. Without compunction he began a search of the room, the old woman looking on with a grin of glee.

"Search! Search!" she croaked. "It was the spirit eye! It is looking at you now, my fine baron! It finds you, yet cannot be found. No, no! Oh, you fools! Get out! Get out! All of you! Prince or no prince, I fear you not, nor all your armies. This is my home, my castle! Go! Go!"

"There was a man here, old woman," said the baron coolly. "Where is the man?"

She laughed aloud, a horrid sound. The prince clutched Tullis by the leg in terror.

"There is no window, no trapdoor, no skylight," remarked the baron, puzzled. "Nothing but the stovepipe, six inches in diameter. A man couldn't crawl out through that, I'm sure. Mr King, we've come upon a real mystery—the eye without a visible body."

Suddenly the old woman stepped into the middle of the room and began to wave her hands in a mysterious manner over an empty pot that stood on the floor in front of the stove. Then before their startled eyes a thin film of smoke began to rise from the empty

"I FEEL AS IF A GRAVE PERSONAL DANGER HAS JUST PASSED ME BY."

pot. It grew in volume until the room was quite dense with it. Even more quickly than it began it disappeared, drawn apparently by some supernatural agency into the draft of the stove and out through the rickety chimney pipe.

A deafening crash as of many guns came to their ears from the outside. With one accord the entire party rushed to the outer door, a wild laugh from the hag pursuing them.

"There!" she screamed. "There goes all there was of him! And so shall we all go some day. Fire and smoke!"

Just outside the door stood Lieutenant Saffo of the guard.

"Good Lord!" shouted Tullis. "What is the matter? What has happened?"

"The storm, sir," said Saffo. "It is coming down the valley like the wind." A great crash of thunder burst overhead, and lightning darted through the black, swirling skies.

THE BUFFET LUNCHEON.

How to Give a Delightful Affair at Home With Little Trouble.

If you have too many guests to seat at a regular luncheon and do not care to give a tea or afternoon card party, why not give a buffet luncheon? It is rather novel, can be easily managed, and every one has an informal time, says the Chicago News.

One given recently for seventy-five guests was quite a delightful affair and as quickly served as if but a dozen guests had been present.

Small chairs were rented and put close together around the dining room and back hall so that every one had a seat. The table was set in the middle of the dining room arranged for serving only. In the center was a great oblong plateau of sweet peas and mignonette. Silver candelabra with pink shades were used at either end of the square table, and dotted around were bonbon dishes with nuts, cakes and candy; also plates of bread and butter sandwiches.

The menu consisted of oyster cocktails, bouillon, croquets and browned oysters, fruit salad with crackers baked with Parmesan cheese and paprika, fresh strawberry ice cream served in sherbet glasses, with strawberries on top, and coffee.

Everything was served from the kitchen, and there were enough waiters not to have delays. Several members of the family did not sit down, but moved from group to group to break up any stiffness and see that all were served promptly. Coffee was passed after the guests had risen from their chairs. This was more informal and gave an opportunity to meet friends not seen before.

The special charm of such a luncheon is that there is no formal arrangement, so guests and friends could easily manage to sit in a group.

While it saves much trouble to the hostess if everything is put into the hands of a caterer, such a lunch could easily be got up at home. The two essentials to its success are that there be plenty of waiters and that everything be ready promptly for them to pass as each course is taken out.

CHANGE OF ANGLE.

You may have noticed that the man
For law has great respect
And wants to see it all enforced,
Though fortunes should be wrecked,
Unless in getting these results
He tumbles in its net,
And then he isn't quite so sure
It's safe on that to bet.

If he can see his neighbor trimmed
In very proper style
Because he cracked an ordinance
He's pretty apt to smile,
But when the tall policeman comes
And says, "Old man, you're it"—
At such officiousness as that
He almost throws a fit.

It all depends, as you may guess,
On where his interests rest
Just how he wants the law enforced
When brought down to the test.
The man who robs his chicken coop
The deepest dregs should drink,
But when he breaks a law himself
He thinks it ought to wink.

Though he should organize a trust
Or go in a combine,
He doesn't think the law should rise
And soak him with a fine.
But if a highwayman should say,
"Hold up your hands, old sport!"
He'd want to see the limit fixed
By some discerning court.

A Speculator.

"What is the matter with you?"
"I dunno."
"Let me give you a pill."
"What is it good for?"
"I dunno."
"Then why should I take it?"
"If you don't know what ails you and I don't know what this pill is good for it seems to me that the two would go well together."

Paradoxically.

"He has money to burn."
"Indeed!"
"You bet."
"And does he burn it?"
"Never."
"Why?"
"He wouldn't have it if he did.

Hard to Please.

"It is so hard to pay a compliment to a fat woman."
"Tell her she is getting so thin that she ought to call a physician."
"No; she would know that was flattery."
"Then say that she is all wool and a yard wide."

Best of All.

The golfing girl is pretty,
There isn't any doubt.
In country or in city
She turns all heads about.

The skating maid is charming
As o'er the ice she darts.
It really is alarming—
She breaks so many hearts.

These maidens all are fleeing
And never are at rest.
We cannot help agreeing
The hired girl is best.

Their Usefulness.

"Many fools get into trouble."
"I have noticed that myself."
"What is the good of them?"
"Other fools help them out."

No Use For Them.

"I am always looking out for cheap things."
"Well, when I run across cheap people I always avoid them."

Infant Perception.

"Ma, are you and pa one?"
"Of course we are."
"Then does that make yourself two?"

Justified.

That she should cackle as she does
Occasions no surprise.
No wonder that she makes a fuss
When eggs are in the skies.

Unpleasant.

"I should hate to be always right."
"Why?"
"It puts one in such disagreeable company."

NEW WIRELESS APPARATUS.

Features of Selective System Invented by Oklahomans.

Lee and Ray Clark, young men living near Mutual, Okla., have invented an electrical apparatus which is now being exhibited before officials of the war department at Washington which makes possible private communication by wireless telegram and enables the operator to propel, guide and control any boat, carriage or other vehicle driven by electricity, steam or gasoline. The system is known as the "wireless selection," and the inventors say it is destined to become as useful as and probably far more wonderful in the variety and extent of its power than the wireless telegraph system.

Under the Marconi system of wireless messages can be heard by any one with the proper instruments for receiving the waves, but with the Clark wireless the operator can select his receiver. He calls up any instrument desired and it records his message automatically, rendering the communication as private in nature as under the present telephone system, where the operator calls a certain number by means of certain wire connection. This is true also in the operation of any machine run by electricity, steam or gasoline. By this same "selective" power one or any number of machines can be operated in any direction or at any speed at will.

To demonstrate the powers of their machine the Clarks constructed in a little shop on their farm two small boats driven by propellers and guided by rudders. These boats were fitted out with electric lights, placed in a lake about a quarter of a mile away, but in view of the operators, and from that distance they were guided with ease in any direction desired. The electric lights were lighted and extinguished at will, the demonstration being made by moonlight.

A heavy farm wagon was fitted out with the new appliance, and the Clarks sat in their room and guided the wagon with the same precision as a man's hands are guided by the forces of his mind. An automobile was similarly handled, and many other demonstrations of like nature were made, thoroughly establishing the success of the invention.

Aside from actual demonstrations made by the Clarks at their farm, they claim to be able to send out any given number of torpedo boats and operate them at will. These boats can be made to maneuver far out at sea and brought back one at a time or in any number desired. War balloons, airships and all other like craft can be governed in like manner. Distance will not serve to diminish the power or efficient operation of the machine any more than in wireless telegraphy.

A few weeks ago several friends of the Clarks were invited to the Clark farm to see the invention demonstrated. Responding to the invitation, several Mutual residents spent the greater part of a day observing the workings of the new invention, the patent for which had been applied for at that time, that being their first public exhibition. Responsible men of Mutual returned that night declaring that the invention was a perfect success.

Juvenile Good Roads League.

A town in New Jersey saw the economical necessity of road improvement as a means of recapturing scholars who had gone to the city schools. A Vermont farmer declares that improved roads mean larger districts and a better grade of teachers. But good roads are costly and most costly when lack of timely care allows them to go to pieces. A suggestion comes from Washington that junior road leagues be formed in country districts for the reason that country roads are "actually patrolled twice a day by schoolboys old enough to give the necessary attention to throwing out stones, opening ditches and sluices, draining off storm water, filling ruts and holes and giving notice to proper authorities of anything needing prompt attention on their part."—Harper's Bazar.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XIII.—First Quarter, For March 27, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xvi, 1-8. Memory Verses, 6, 7—Golden Text, Rev. i, 18—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Having the option of a review or a resurrection lesson, we choose the Easter lesson, as there is nothing so grand as His resurrection, by which He was declared to be the Son of God, with power and without which preaching and faith are vain and no one ever has been or can be saved. The resurrection, however, must include all of His earthly life that preceded His death, His life as the Son of Mary, the seed of David according to the flesh. Matt. i gives the royal line of David's descendants through Solomon to Joseph, who became the husband of Mary, while Luke iii gives David's descendants through Nathan to Heli, whose son-in-law Joseph became by his marriage to Mary, and thus Jesus became heir to David's throne.

The quarter's lessons might be outlined as, first, the genealogy and birth of the King; second, the visit of the Magi and the flight of Joseph and Mary to Egypt and their return to Nazareth; third, the herald of the King and the declaration of the Father concerning Him; fourth, the King's victory over the great adversary, His testimony and the calling of some disciples; fifth to seventh, the laws of the kingdom; eighth and ninth, some samples of the nature of the kingdom.

Now, as the kingdom was postponed by the rejection and murder of the King we in this age must know the power of His resurrection if we would walk worthy of Him and manifest His life in these mortal bodies. The resurrection of the Messiah was plainly foretold in Ps. xvi and xxii, Isa. liii and elsewhere. It was wondrously foreshown in Isaac being given back to Abraham from the dead in a figure (Heb. xi, 17-19). In His teaching the Lord Jesus Himself many times spoke plainly of His death and resurrection, and the great truth of Christianity is that we have at the right hand of the Father in heaven a risen living Christ, truly a Man and truly God, in whom alone is salvation, the only Judge of all mankind and the only One who can set up a kingdom of righteousness on the earth.

The most horrible thing that ever happened on this earth and that which shows the desperately wicked nature of the human heart was the cruel murder of the Son of God, but God raised Him from the dead and gave Him glory and will yet give Him dominion over all the earth, and His redeemed shall share the kingdom with Him.

His disciples never received His words that He was to be crucified and rise from the dead the third day (Matt. xx, 17-19), but some of His enemies remembered them (Matt. xxvii, 62, 63). His mother and some of the other women who ministered to Him remained by His cross to the last, and some of them after His body was buried returned and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment, intending on the first day to bring the spices and anoint His body (Luke xxiii, 55, 56; xxiv, 1). When they come to the tomb on the first day morning early they find the stone rolled away; they see an angel, who tells them that He is risen and that they must go quickly and tell His disciples. When Mary Magdalene saw the stone rolled away she ran to tell Peter and John, who ran to the sepulcher and saw for themselves and returned, but Mary remained near the sepulcher, weeping, till Jesus Himself, whom she thought at first to be the gardener, spoke to her and called her by name. When she and the other women told the disciples that He was risen from the dead they believed not, and some thought it an idle tale (verses 11, 13, 14; Luke xxiv, 11), giving Him occasion to upbraid them with their unbelief and hardness of heart. Many who now are told that the same Jesus is coming again think it an idle tale and believe not, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God and perhaps forgetting that Jesus said, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken" (Luke xxiv, 25). The angels believe and desire to look more fully into these things (verses 5-7; I Pet. i, 12). Dr. Scofield gives in the margin of verse 6 this rendering: "Jesus ye seek—the Nazarene, the crucified. He arose. He is not here." He also gives in his notes on Matt. xxviii the order of the events of that morning and also the order of the different appearances during those forty days. Note in verse 7 of our lesson how Peter is mentioned by name, the true disciple who had treated Him the worst, denying with oaths that he knew Him. How true it is that weakest lambs have largest share of this tender Shepherd's care! However weak and unworthy you may be, remember that "having loved His own He loved them unto the end" (John xiii, 1).

A mere knowledge of the facts of His life and death and resurrection will benefit us nothing unless, knowing these things, we truly receive Him as our own personal Saviour and place our whole trust as lost people in the efficacy of His great sacrifice. Then the joy of being redeemed will lead us to obey with gladness His command in verse 15, counting upon a fulfillment of verse 20. Our daily life will be "serving the living and true God" and our attitude "waiting for His Son from heaven" (I Thess. i, 9, 10).

GOOD GYPSUM ROAD.

Successful Experiments With the Mineral Made by Kansas Experts.

W. S. Gearhart, state highway engineer of Kansas, who recently returned from an inspection tour through the southwestern part of that state, says the county commissioners in that part of the state believe in permanent roads and permanent bridges. Mr. Gearhart is well pleased with the results of the experiment in road building through the sand hills near Garden City.

"A little more than a year ago," he said, "the commercial club and the county commissioners requested the office of public roads to send a man out to investigate possibilities of improving this road. Mr. Spoon, the sand clay expert, made them a visit and found that there were large deposits of gypsum all along the road. Tests were made on the gypsum, showing that it would make a good binder for the sand. The people decided to construct 700 feet of road under the direction of Mr. Spoon, and it was so satisfactory that they have now finished six miles of road at a total cost of $3,500. The 700 feet constructed first is smoother now than the remainder because the sand and gypsum were thoroughly mixed by plowing, disking and harrowing. The remainder was constructed by placing six inches of gypsum on the sand for a width of twelve feet and then a few inches of sand were placed on top of this and left for the traffic to do the mixing.

"It requires about two years to get a road in first class condition when constructed in this manner, but it is much cheaper than the other construction. Hot, dry weather is the worst enemy of this type of road, but despite the drought it is now in excellent condition and compares very favorably with the best macadam roads. The surface is hard and smooth and shows no signs of wear.

"The only complaint any one has to make is that the road is so smooth that locks must be placed on the wagons so that they can be safely taken down the hills. Some still refuse to get a lock and in going down drive with one wheel out in the sand and the other on the hard road. One year ago the sand on the road was so bad that people living ten miles south of Garden City, just beyond the hills, hauled their grain forty miles south to a railroad station, while at present grain and produce are being hauled twenty-eight miles north to Garden City.

"It is a place to go to be 'shown' if one has any doubt in his mind about the possibility of successfully constructing a sand, gypsum or clay road."

ROAD REPAIRER ENJOINED.

Physician Who Tried to Improve Highway Served With Injunction.

Widespread interest has been created in good roads circles in the case of Dr. Donald McCaskey of Witmer, Pa., who has been restrained from making further improvements to the Witmer road, a much traveled thoroughfare of East Lampeter township.

The physician, after failing to get the road supervisors of his local township to fix a dangerous and unkept hill mile of yellow clay roadway, in desperation and at his own expense began to make repairs to the road himself. The doctor built King road drags and hired horses from farmers throughout the community who would rent them, and, not being able to induce anybody to repair the road for him, the physician drove the team and rode the drag himself. Occasionally a small boy was taken along to stand on the drag for ballast.

After fifteen hours of strenuous labor distributed over a period of six to eight weeks after each rain the neglected byroad was transformed into a substantial highway. All that was used was the simple wooden instrument termed the split log drag, which can be made by any farmer out of a log or a few boards.

The physician's efforts worked such a transformation in the minds of the incredulous inhabitants of his community that the road drag met with popular favor, and the road officials began to be critically censured for their alleged indisposition to fulfill the duties of their official office.

They promptly secured an injunction restraining the physician from doing any more work of the kind, alleging that he had done this work "to the injury of the road at times and to the inconvenience of the traveling public." The case is still before the courts.

Good Roads as Memorials.

W. W. Mitchell, one of the men of means at Cadillac, Mich., has offered a bonus, said to be as much as $300, for each mile of good road constructed in Wexford county in the next three years. Presumably one of the principal highways leading into the county seat will be known as the Mitchell road. Whether it is or not, the aid given in the creation of a county system of improved highways will cause Mr. Mitchell to be held in grateful remembrance by future users of the roads.

State Supports Good Road Cause.

The state of Rhode Island has taken in about $43,000 so far this year for automobile registrations. The money goes into the fund for repair and maintenance of roads.

Good Highways In Cuba.

General Carlos Garcia-Velez, minister from Cuba to the United States, says that Cuba has 1,300 miles of the most excellent macadam roads constructed of crushed coral.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24, 1910.

INCH by inch the bosses are trying to fix the election law so that it will be as it was in the good old days when they did'nt care who cast the ballots as long as they were allowed to count them. It is taking time, but they are very patient. They know what they are after, and have learned that the public is inclined to sleep on its rights. A rogue in the election booth is worth a host of workers outside.

A SCHEME TO MAKE RASCALS ELECTION OFFICERS.

The most cynical and the most sinister development at Annapolis at this session is the appearance of the same old disposition to tamper with and emasculate the election law. Year by year the Democratic leaders have attacked one safeguard after another which the people succeeded in placing about the suffrage after the sweeping victory of 1895. At the present rate it will not be long before it will be a perfectly simple matter to make our elections once more a travesty upon a free ballot.

The latest assault is by means of the bill of Senator Gorman, which has already passed the Senate and is now before the House. This bill proposes to make mandatory the selection of officers of election where heretofore the rights of the public have been protected by the veto power which one Supervisor of Elections has upon the nominations of another. We have seen no respectable argument advanced for making this change. The present plan has worked satisfactorily. Under it the voters could feel that some of the rogues and rascals who used to disgrace elections in this State could be kept out of the booths. Publication of their names, if nothing else, would insure objection against their selection. This plan is fair to both sides. All that is necessary is to name men whose records are respectable. But now, without warning, there bobs up a bill which compels the Supervisors of Elections to select officers of election from a list of three names which must be handed in for each place.

WHAT COMPETITION IS.

The Philadelphia attorney who made the closing argument for the Standard Oil Company before the United States Supreme Courts says that competition is what General Sherman said war was—what war still is, if the general was right, for war hasn't changed for the better since Sherman's day. Mr. Johnson didn't say it right out loud, that way. He circumlocuted thus: "Is there a kind of soft competition, a Pickwickian competition, a kind of glove variety, 'where they just compete so nicely that it won't hurt. General Sherman used a word in describing what war is; I won't use the word in your honors' presence, but that is what competition is." The inference is obvious. If competition is hell, then the lack of competition—as exemplified so wonderfully by the activities of the Standard Oil Company—must logically be the antithesis of that interesting but wholly undesirable state. Inasmuch as there is a very general belief to the effect that the gates of heaven cannot be commanded by any cash price, however, great, it will bring great surprise to many people to learn that a heaven on earth can be created by anyone with sufficient cash and cold-bloodedness to enable him to eliminate competition.

THE Governor is constantly reported as washing his hands of the work of the Legislature and as saying that if it does not fulfill the party promises he will not assume any of the blame. He needn't to. The public will properly assign him his share, unless he shows some slight interest in seeing that the Legislature does its duty. When he undertook to organize the House and the Senate it was understood that he could not evade the responsibility for what might be done and left undone.

TEN DAYS MORE.

To 90 per cent. of the people throughout the state it will be a most welcome relief when the legislative agony at Annapolis is over. The session is now nearing the finish, and it will not be long before a patiently enduring public will know the very worst that is to happen. Of course, it would be just as easy to put the proposition in another way and say the public will soon know the very best which is to happen. But is there anybody, at this point of the legislative game, who believes that anything properly classed as "best" is likely to be turned out as the result of the labors of the 1910 General Assembly? But on the other hand, no discriminating observer will be likely to dispute that a large amount of very bad, if not of the "worst," in the way of legislation has been introduced and is being pushed.

There is an unusually large amount of iniquitous political legislation now pending, and as the time limit for the introduction of bills does not expire until Saturday, it is within the possibilities that additional measures of this class may yet be introduced and rushed through. Whatever else may die in the committee rooms or be lost in the shuffle, it may be accepted as certain that no bill which the bosses of the Democratic machine need in their business, no matter how late it may be introduced, will fall by the wayside. The legislative expense fund deficit bill is expected to make its appearance this week. It is likely that $75,000 more will be added to the original $150,000 to meet the padded payroll costs. The city charter bill, the amendments to the oyster law, the bill providing for state care of indigent insane and other meritorious measures are in doubt and uncertain, but the spoils bills and the election juggling bills are not involved in the least uncertainty as to their fate at the end.

GATHERING SHEAVES.

The following poem, written by Miss Fannie J. Crosby and recited at Mountain Lake Park by her as a memorial to Dr. Updegraff, is published in these columns today by request, this being Miss Crosby's ninetieth anniversary Miss Crosby has been blind since infancy and is the author of more than eight thousand hymns and poems. Aside from her blindness she is in excellent health.

Gathering sheaves with a tireless hand,
Gathering sheaves at thy Lord's command,
Looking to Him for the power divine,
O, what a glorious work is thine;
Gathering sheaves in the morn's bright ray,
Bearing thy toil in the heat of day,
Lifting full many a broken vine,
O, what a labor of love is thine.

Love is thy watchword, and still shall be,
Love, on thy banner, inscribed I see,
Love is the keynote to every song,
How like a river it flows along;
Brother, the words from thy lips that fall,
Tenderly echo thy Savior's call,
Thou art inspired by a voice divine,
O, what a labor for souls is thine.

Yonder thy home and thy mansion fair,
Yonder the crown thou shalt win and wear,
Beautiful stars in that crown will shine,
O, What a meeting will soon be thine,
Meeting with friends who have gone before,
Waiting for thee on the Eden shore,
Meeting where trials and storms shall cease,
Meeting with Jesus the Prince of Peace.

SMALL MATTER OF FEW HUNDRED MILLIONS

Baltimore Land To This Amount Claimed By Price Descendants.

I. E. Price, of Terra Alta, son of the Rev. J. C. Price, pastor of the Albright M. E. church, Oakland District, has just received notice that within a few weeks a suit will be filed in the Maryland courts by the heirs of Mordecai Price, who was the grandfather of the Rev. Mr. Price, against the city of Baltimore, and a host of individuals in Baltimore, to recover about four hundred million dollars. If the heirs succeed in establishing their claims, the Price family will have more money than anybody besides Rockefeller and a few others.

Mordecai Price was a man of vast importance in his day. He came over from England with Lord Baltimore, and wasn't backward in picking out what he thought looked good to him in the way of real estate. Some time ago a Cleveland, Ohio, lawyer, Wellington H. Smith, discovered in an old Virginia mansion of the Colonial period a long lost document which was the one direct connecting link between the Mordecai Price of Lord Baltimore's time, and the Price heirs of the present. That the property in question never legally passed out of Mordecai Price's hands by deed is said to be certain, and the heirs have to fight chiefly the great elapse of time.

One of the evidences to be produced in the case is a huge solid gold watch of the seventeenth century mechanical type and containing engravings consisting of the name (Mordecai Price) together with the date of his sailing from England to America with Lord Baltimore.

W. F. Kydd, Simcoe, Ontaria, Canada. The Ontario Department of Farmers' Institutes says of Mr. Kydd, "He is one of our most acceptable Institute speakers." He is an authority on horses, dairy cattle and small fruits. He has a large practical experience in all these departments and also in fair matters, having been superintendent of the horse department of probably the largest purely agricultural show in the Province. He is an accepted judge of both light and heavy horses and as such has been invited to place awards in many parts of Ontario. Being an aggressive, forceful speaker, his words carry weight. His subjects are: "Am I Raising the Most Profitable Horse?" "The Dairy Cow, Her Summer Feed and Winter Care;" "Small Fruits and Grape Vines;" "Pruning and General Care of the Apple Orchard;" "Dropped Stitches."

Nicholas Schmitz, Maryland Experimental Station, College Park. Mr. Schmitz is a graduate of the Kansas Agricultural College, and a post-graduate of Cornell, where he specialized in Agronomy in general, and corn soils and soil fertility in particular. In 1906 he took up field work with alfalfa for the Department of Agriculture. Besides studying and experimenting with alfalfa, he made a study of forage crops in general, east of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. Schmitz left the Department to become the Agronomist for the Maryland Experiment Station. His subjects are: "Hay Crops;" "Small Grains;" "Corn;" "Alfalfa."

BALTIMORE & OHIO IMPROVEMENT

Extensive Freight Terminal To Be Erected at Chicago Junction, O.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has awarded a contract for the construction of an extensive freight terminal at Chicago Junction, Ohio, on the main line of the Chicago division, which will be the largest terminal west of Brunswick, Md., and the second in size on the system. The improvement will cost in round figures $1,500,000 and will include a gravity, or "hump," classification yard having a capacity of 3,900 cars, with necessary yard buildings, scales, etc., and a reservoir of 200,000,000 gallons capacity, perhaps the largest ever built for railroad use.

The new freight terminal will contain receiving and classification yards for eastbound and westbound traffic, the capacity of the former being 2,000 cars and the latter 1,900 cars.

Chicago Junction being the terminus of the Chicago and New Castle divisions and situated at the intersection of the Newark division lake line to Sandusky, is the most important locomotive terminal on the Baltimore and Ohio, and for this reason the reservoir will be constructed sufficiently large to supply water for the engines of all three divisions.

It is estimated that 95,000 cubic yards of excavation and 4,500 cubic yards of concrete will be necessary in constructing the terminal. The contract has been awarded to the Robert Grace Company, of Cleveland. Work will be commenced at once and completed as early as possible.

STRAUS ASKS FOR TIME

So Maryland-West Virginia Dispute Goes Over Again.

WASHINGTON, March 21.—Attorney-General Isaac Lobe Straus, of Maryland, and Mr. George E. Price, of West Virginia, met here today by appointment to take up the question of settling the decree and designate the three commissioners who are to run the boundary between the respective States in accordance with the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Attorney Straus asked for an extension of time, stating that since the Supreme Court had handed down its opinion on February 21 last his own time had been so fully occupied in connection with the present session of the Maryland Legislature that he was not ready to join today in the settlement of the decree and the appointment of commissioners. Attorney Price, representing the State of West Virginia, as a matter of courtesy between counsel, said he was perfectly willing to have the matter extended, and the result was the signing of a stipulation in which it was agreed to extend until May 1 next the time in which the counsel for the respective States are to present to the Supreme Court the decree and nominate their commissioners

Three Cent Rate.

Beginning March 20, the B. & O. R. R. Co. has taken advantage of the decisions of the courts in declaring the two-cent rate law unconstitutional and has increased the price in Pennsylvania for passage for points east from two to three cents per mile. The office of the B. & O. in the city had no information of the passenger rate being changed as far as that road is concerned.

BOND.

We are glad to note that Mr. N. U. Bond is out again after his illness. The father's death was keenly felt by the whole family, and we do not wonder that they hate to break up the old home at Brockwayville, Pa.

One of the most pleasing harbingers of approaching spring is the arrival of the robins and bluebirds. We feel sorry for their cool reception.

It is rumored that "Liz T" stopped talking long enough last week to take breath, but we suggest that such reports be taken cum grano salis until verified.

Garrett county and neighborhood is much interested in the new wigwam to be erected in Oakland, but the Tobasco sauce of the whole matter is—who is to be "the bird in the gilded cage?"

The revival is over and and Rev. Brumbaugh and wife did their best to make it a success, and thanks are also Bro. Sam Reckley, who surprised the meeting by the wonderful improvement he has made in two year. He can talk now in a way that would make a No Heller and and a Seventh Dayer turn green with envy.

We are also glad to note the change in Riley, who has given up the use of the deadly Latin language, finding that English is quite sufficient for either forcible or gentle expression.

The other Sam is also doing well and the anvil chorus is louder than ever. An eleven pound boy is enough to raise a smile that won't come off, and that is all wool and a yard wide.

There came near being a "hot time in the old town" early in the week. The mill caught fire, and only the chemical fire extinguishers saved it. No wonder the boys got excited and squitted on one another.

Our twentieth? of a ton doctor has gained three pounds per week, more or less, since he gave up the wheel for the motor, and no wonder John says "Oh, my poor machine," when he gets on, or that the track is in such poor shape. It is whispered that the genial doctor is not so liberal with his patients' diet as he is with his own, but maybe his wife's good cooking is to blame for that.

If some one in town had his head turned round he would have a chest on him that would make a recruiting sergeant's eyes bulge with delight. Straighten up young man, or you will soon have the distinction of being the only hunchback that was ever in Bond.

It is surprising that some people can not help getting their feet wet in Savage, and in winter time, of all seasons, but they are too late to help out the census man. We congratulate the store man on his reformation.

Boys, don't let the devil tempt you to gamble on Sunday or any other day, for it is one of the stepping stones to all kinds of vices. We have our eye on the ringleader.

Major Schrecengost is quite enterprising these days, going on the principle that if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, then Mahomet must go to the mountain. It's an ill wind, etc., and what the store losses the boarding people gain.

The dear teacher of the Deestric Skule will soon be shaking the dust of Bondtown from her feet, beg parding, we mean shoes, and it is regrettable that the Garrett county pocketbook will not permit her to continue until June. We congratulate her on the order she has kept, which Dame Rumor says is the best ever in Bond.

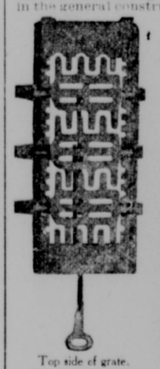
$32 BUYS DAVIS' PATENT STEEL RANGE.

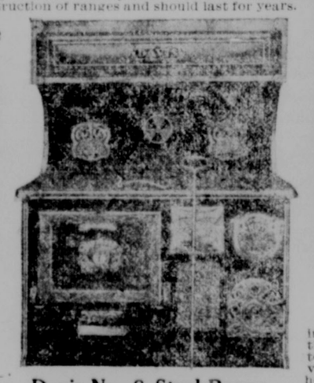
Nothing Like It Ever Offered

After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old styles of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than is found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire box of any range is the part that always gives out first, and with this thought in view was planned in a way that the liners and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.



Top side of grate.

The special features of grate rest oven linings, rocking grates and poker shaker are found only on the Davis. It is the most durable Range ever offered to the trade at a reasonable price, and is in reach of all.



Davis No. 8. Steel Range

complete with reservoir, high closet heavy lined throughout; has oven thermometer.

Poker-Shaker that extends through hand-hole.

Any one contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range cannot help but see themselves the many advantages and superior qualities in its construction. All we ask is a chance to show our ranges' comparison with others both as to price and quality.

Write for our booklet. It will tell you where it differs from all others.

Strong Points that Make Davis Steel Ranges Most Desirable.

Encased reservoir heated by patent process.

A grate rest with large openings next to oven, avioding accumulation of ashes.

Rocking grates with poker and hand shake, easy to operate, for wood and coal.

Extended lugs on the end of grate bars that act as guards to prevent cinders from clogging or wedging between the tilted bars.

As stated in the previous issues of this paper, Mr. Davidson will be assisted by some of the best local talent to be found in Oakland, and no expense will be spared in making this one of the best theatrical performances ever given in Oakland. The Department needs your aid badly as it is entirely without funds. We have a fire protection in Oakland, that is equal if not better than in any of the towns of Maryland of the same size, and all that is lacking to make it complete is some funds to aid the department in purchasing some highly necessary equipment.

The Fire Departments from Piedmont, Keyser, Lonaconing, Midland and Frostburg have been invited to attend. Quite a number of men from these departments will be on hand, and they with our own department headed by the Oakland band will give a big parade at four o'clock in the afternoon of April 8th. All the fire fighting apparatus of the Oakland Company will be seen in the parade.

The play will be produced in all its details, and a large number of specialties will be introduced.

An orchestra composed of Professors Robinson and Runten and Misses Bessie Hinebaugh, Agnes Rasche, Veronica Rasche and Denny Rasche will render beautiful music and accompany all the songs of the show.

A number of Italian workmen who will be employed on the State road leading north from Oakland, have arrived here and will begin work about April 1st when Mr. J. E. Francis, the contractor, is expected to arrive. Mr. Francis expects to have the work completed by the middle of the summer.

Prof. U. G. Palmer was at Grafton last Saturday where he went to confer with the Board of Trade of that city relative to an offer made Mr. Palmer to take the secretaryship of the Board of Trade. At the meeting Mr. Palmer was tendered the position but declined on account of certain restrictions.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation of Thomas, W. Va., has exchanged pastors with a Methodist church in the State of Florida. W. K. Stalnaker left Thomas with his family for the Florida charge the first of the week, and the pastor of the charge in the latter State, Rev. W. L. Barze, is on his way.

Rev. J. Ed. Kildow, representative of the State Humane Society, came down from his home at Elkins this morning having in charge two bright boys for whom the society had secured homes in Preston county to which place he was taking them. Mr. Kildow is one of the most faithful workers in the cause of humanity that the society has in its employ.—Grafton Sentinel.

Mr. William Tunney, of Joliet, Ill., who built the water works and sewerage system in Oakland last summer, was here a few days the early part of this week superintending the loading and shipping of his machinery, part going to Fort Hamilton, New Jersey, and the rest being shipped to a point in Missouri, he having contracts in both states this year.

Rev. A. J. Fristoe, of Norfolk, Va., state evangelist of the Baptist church for Maryland, has been holding evangelistic services at the Deer Park Baptist church. He began his series of sermons at Deer Park last Sunday morning. He is a convincing speaker, and his meetings have been largely attended. Previous to the beginning of his services at Deer Park, he held meetings at Hagerstown, and in that city as well as at Deer Park, throngs of people flocked to hear him.

Lieut. E. S. West, of Oakland, has the best line of real estate for sale in Maryland. A great variety of farms, town property, Park property, coal and timber lands. Prices and terms to suit. He also has some of the best Florida propositions on the market. Call on him for booklet describing these properties. You are sure of receiving courteous treatment and will be given every opportunity to see and investigate to your entire satisfaction. 2-tf.

The box supper held at the armory of Garrett Co. No. 9, Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, Tuesday evening, was quite liberally patronized by the people of Oakland and a tidy sum was realized from the sale of the boxes prepared by the young ladies of the town, which were auctioned off to the highest bidder, prices ranging from 60 cents to $3.25. The entertainment afforded by the Knights consisting of a series of moving pictures and the serving of ice cream, cake and coffee, was highly appreciated by their guests.

Mr. Ninian U. Bond, of Bond, accompanied by Mr. William Sigler, of Piedmont, was in Oakland last Saturday when Mr. Bond's proposed new residence to be erected on a lot near the head of Second street, was staked out, and the work of making the necessary excavations for the building was begun Monday morning by a number of men. The plans for Mr. Bond's home were shown us by that gentleman while here and they indicate that the building will be modern in design, structurally beautiful, convenient and roomy.

WANTED—Your Plumbing, Heating and Gas Fitting. S. Lawton & Sons.

Jonas E. Gnagey, of Baltimore, formerly of Grantsville, Md., was circulating among his old friends in Garrett county, Salisbury and Meyersdale, last week. He came up to attend his Uncle Jacob Gnagey's funeral. Jonas has disguised himself by cutting off his flowing beard which distinguished him for so many years. Many of his old friends failed to recognize him without his whiskers. Mr. Gnagey was the father of sixteen children, fourteen of whom are living and all are doing well, every one of them being a credit to their father and noble mother who died about sixteen years ago. Mr. Gnagey returned to Baltimore last Friday, where he is employed as a carpenter. Among the relatives he visited here were his uncle, Eld. Joel Gnagey, and the editor of the Republican who is his cousin.—Meyersdale Republican.

THE GRANGE

Conducted by
J. W. DARROW, Chatham, N. Y.,
Press Correspondent New York State Grange

BAY STATE ACTIVITY.

There Are 26,782 Patrons in Massachusetts.

Great Interest Shown In the Literary Work of the Grange by the Fact That Over 17,000 Members Took Part In the Discussions the Past Year. Over Forty Granges Held Grange Fairs.

The Massachusetts state grange held its annual session at Springfield, Mass., with a large attendance. State Master Richardson in his annual address urged, among other things, a more rigid enforcement of the seed and feed inspection law. In the matter of improving the highways he believed that the cost of maintenance should be equalized in proportion to the number of inhabitants served. He emphasized the importance of farmers co-operating in fighting insect pests. He looked upon the apathy of many as most serious. State Lecturer C. M. Gardner said that during the twelve months ended Oct. 1, 1909, 1,954 discussions were held and participated in by 17,402 Patrons, 1,047 papers had been read and discussed by over 2,300 members, 1,386 speakers had addressed granges on different topics, as entertainment features nearly 6,800 vocal and nearly 5,000 instrumental selections had been rendered and readings to the number of 6,117. The total attendance on subordinate grange meetings during the year was 270,265. In 180 granges some phase of town improvement had been considered, and 201 had devoted an evening to patriotic themes, and the children had been remembered in 194 grange evenings all their own. Over forty granges had held fairs of their own, and sixty-five have assisted in agricultural fairs in their vicinity. The secretary reported the total number of granges in the state at 232 and the total membership 26,782, a net gain of nearly 2,200.

The secretary of the Mutual Fire Insurance company, in which the grange is interested, reported 3,085 policies in force, carrying $3,046,410 in risks. The Patrons' Co-operative association organized a year ago, did a business of over $150,000 and shows a saving to Patrons of $30,000 on 15,000 tons of agricultural chemicals, 20,000 tons of grain and feed, 4,000 barrels of flour and other things used on the farm. The stock is held by 514 people. Worthy Lecturer Charles M. Gardner was elected to the office of master. The lecturers' conference was attended by 242 lecturers. The question of abolishing the milk standard set by law was up before the grange, and it was recommended to the legislature that the present standard be abolished. F. W. Rane, state forester, said that the state had lost $30,000 by forest fires, a large number of which could have been prevented had there been proper fire apparatus. He suggested that the legislature appropriate a sufficient amount for the purchase of fire equipment. Two hundred and ninety-six candidates took the sixth degree. Worcester, Mass., will be the place of meeting for 1910.

BUSINESS FARMING.

Producers and Consumers' Exchange In Maine—Insurance In Kansas.

A producers and consumers' exchange has been recently formed in Brunswick, Me., among the grangers for the benefit of farmers in marketing crops and buying supplies. The above name was chosen as the official name of the company. It was decided to fix the capital at $10,000, divided into 10,000 shares at $1 each, as originally suggested. It was thought that this would be better than to raise the price. It was also voted that the stockholders or members of the company should be confined to members of the Patrons of Husbandry, excepting those who had already subscribed for stock or did so before Nov. 10 last. Bylaws were adopted which fully protect the stockholders. The following were elected directors: Mandeville E. Hall of Turner Center, C. S. Stetson, master of Maine state grange; C. H. Blackwell, Skowhegan, master of Wesserunsett grange; Walter L. Warren of West Baldwin and E. G. Tilley of Ashland.

Eugene H. Libby, state grange secretary, was elected clerk, B. L. Stevens of Cushing treasurer and E. C. Patten, assistant steward of the state grange, auditor. At a directors' meeting later Mandeville E. Hall was elected president and C. S. Stetson vice president.

New York State Grange.

The thirty-seventh annual session of the New York state grange will be held at Watertown, Jefferson county, Feb. 1-4. The business meetings will be held in the City Opera House. At the public session on the evening of Feb. 1 President J. G. Schurman of Cornell will be the chief speaker. The biennial election of officers will occur this year. A class of 2,000 is expected to take the sixth degree on Feb. 3. The membership of the grange in Jefferson county exceeds 7,000 and in the state 93,000.

California state grange has a project on foot to secure permanent pleasure grounds for the use of members of the Order.

HOW SOME CITIES ADVERTISE

Unique Methods Adopted by Communities to Get Before the Public.

Ever hear of Seney?

Of course! That is the town in Georgia which passed a law forbidding any automobile to pass through or run anywhere within the village limits. But you never heard of Seney before that law was passed.

Now, Seney is not, as several thousand humorous paragraphers hastened to declare, a village of which Seneca was a leading citizen and which hasn't grown up. And that law was one of the cleverest pieces of municipal advertising ever devised in this land of advertisment. It is doubtful whether an automobile ever had passed through Seney and unlikely that one ever would, and none of the leading citizens were possessed of smell wagons, so the law hurt no one. By and by, when the leading citizens get the horseless carts and Seney is on a well established endurance contest route that law will be forgotten. Oh, any of the advertising cities of a thousand times her size can take lessons from Seney.

This business of city advertising is now a flourishing industry, and many of the leading villages employ press agents to inform the world generally of the marvelous advantages, political, social, financial and healthful, to be found just there and nowhere else.

Springfield, Mass., recently awarded a prize of $500 for a scheme to boom that city, the accepted plan calling for an expenditure of $25,000 a year and embracing every known form of advertising—reading notice advertisements in magazines and newspapers, personal letters, buttons, billboards and a monthly bulletin. Spokane, Wash., spent $60,000 in one year on advertising, and if the chamber of commerce gets a hint that you have read "Westward Ho!" or that you are fond of apples or anything like that you will have to hire a wagon to take away from the postoffice the pictures, pamphlets, posters, etc., that it will send you.

Greensboro, N. C., assures you that it is half Yankee and half southern, and Houston, Tex., declares that political grafting doesn't flourish under the Texas sun, and this is the only city of them all that has thought of advertising the fact that honest local government makes it a desirable place of residence. Galveston got all the advertising she needed when without assistance she rebuilt herself after the great tidal wave and ringed herself with a wall that defies the sea.

THE BACK YARD BEAUTIFUL.

Los Angeles Transforms Rear of Homes Into Veritable Parks.

A large newspaper, interested in the welfare of Los Angeles, sent a man on a tour of inspection up the back yards of that city, with the result that he found entire blocks in which the rear portion of every lot has been transformed into a veritable park, with walks lined with every manner of semitropical shrubs, flowers and trees, almost completely hidden from the roadway, while the individual instances of such character were found by the thousands. One industrious citizen said to the investigator:

"This is what I call my living yard. The front yard corresponds to the parlor, where we are supposed to go only on special occasions. But in the rear I have endeavored to arrange it as I would a living room—for comfort and pleasure—and where I can go, if I desire, in negligee costume for a quiet hour with a book beneath the shade of a tree or for a cigar in the open air, and occasionally we entertain our intimate friends with a luncheon on little tables brought from the house and at the same time enjoy the privacy which adds so much to the pleasure of meeting one's old acquaintances. Yes, I believe, now that you have mentioned it, that Los Angeles residents have improved the rear portions of their homes to a greater extent than in any other city of the country. But to tell the truth, it might be called either pride or selfishness or possibly both. At any rate, I believe that I get more real enjoyment out of this little space in the rear of my home than I do out of the front of it."

Many were found who expressed similar views and also have hesitated about declaring that the rule of keeping up the rear lots is more general here than elsewhere until they have paused to consider the question, when they would be forced to admit that the soft impeachment undoubtedly was a fact.

Standing Still.

Do you remember the story of the young lady who went into a well known establishment and said to the "aisle director," "Do you keep stationery?" "No, miss," replied the young man. "If I did I'd lose my job."

It's a good story because it is funny.

It is a better story because it makes you think.

How about yourself? Are you "stationary" or are you on the job and making things hum, even if it is a warm day?

More Truth Than Poetry.

He didn't have a dollar; he didn't have a dime.
His clothes and shoes were looking just as though they'd served their time.
He didn't try to kill himself and dodge misfortune's whacks.
Instead he got some ashes and filled five dozen sacks.
Then next he begged a dollar, and in the papers next morn
He advertised tin polish that would put the sun to scorn.
He kept on advertising, and just now, suffice to say,
His advertising has built a cottage out in California by the bay.

TOOTH CLEANING ADVICE.

How to Prevent the Accumulation of Tartar With Little Trouble.

Thoroughly cleansing the teeth once a month will do much to prevent the accumulation of tartar and keep them white and sound. For this purpose powdered pumice should be placed on every washstand, with the definite knowledge of the harm it can do if used too often, for applied frequently it will wear away the enamel. There is absolutely no danger of this, however, if it is not put on oftener than once a month.

To give this treatment properly a wooden stick like that used on the nails is necessary, and 5 cents' worth of pumice, powdered, is, of course, an essential. A bit of absorbent cotton improves the application, and a few drops of lemon juice are better than water.

That the work may be done to best advantage a person should stand before a mirror. The cotton, a mere wisp, must be twisted about the end of the stick, which is then dipped into the lemon juice. From that it is stuck into the pumice and rubbed directly upon the teeth.

It is useless to rub the centers of the teeth, for, almost without exception, they are white. It is on the edges, the sides and the tops at the gums and next to the other teeth that tartar and discolorations accumulate, and so it is these places that must be whitened. The stick, constantly put into lemon juice and pumice, should be confined to those regions as near the gums as can be without loosening the flesh. It must be understood that if this cleansing is done carelessly the gums will be loosened from their places and a diseased condition result.

When all the teeth have been rubbed in this way a careful rinsing must be given the mouth, as the teeth should not be brushed immediately. Rather should a weak solution of limewater be used, for lime counteracts the effect of acid. When all the grains are removed a soft brush may be applied, taking care that all cracks between the teeth are cleansed.

Nothing will do more to prevent the accumulation of tartar than the continued use of lime or soda water. The latter may be mixed as required, a teaspoonful of the bicarbonate to half a glass of water. After brushing the teeth at night the mouth must be rinsed with either of the preparations counteracting the effect of acid juices upon the enamel. It may be used also in the morning.

BABY'S OUTFIT BOX.

How to Make a Pretty Receptacle For the Infant's Clothes.

In order to make a baby's box get a clean, strong wooden box from the grocer, if possible one with a hinged top, or put the top on with two small hinges. The box should be about three feet long, two feet wide and two feet deep. Line it with unbleached muslin first, then with a pretty flowered denim. The inside of the lid should first be covered with muslin, then with denim, and a strip eight inches wide may be put on to form pockets to hold the articles of the baby. The outside of the box may be covered with denim or matting.

If you cover it with denim pad the top of the box well and it will make a comfortable seat. Fasten the covering on with brass headed tacks and get two brass handles for the ends of the box. The baby's slips may be kept in the box, its basket and other things. A strawberry crate makes a pretty box for holding a baby's outfit. Take a smooth new crate, paint it white or pale blue and line it inside with either blue gingham or white cambric. The lid of this may be finished inside with pockets and cushions outside. This box will not gather as much dust as the other one described and for that reason may be preferred.

How to Make a Hanging Bookshelf.

To make a hanging bookshelf cut three boards ten inches wide and two feet long. Bore a hole in each corner of the three boards, also in center ends, size of the cord which is to pass through them. Use eight yards of cord. To put the shelves together pass the cord through the holes and tie a good knot under each hole so that the knot will not slip through. Get the knots in just the right places to have the shelves hang even. Begin tying at bottom shelf and go up and around. The shelves are nice if stained with mahogany or cherry color. After stain has dried varnish.

How to Keep Fruit Cake Moist.

To keep a fruit cake moist fill the hole of the cake with brandy and cover the entire cake with paraffin paper. If the cake has not been baked in a turk's head mold, the liquor can be poured over the surface before the oiled paper is put on. When there is sign of drying out more of the brandy can be added from time to time. This treatment actually makes a fruit cake better at the end of a year than when first baked. To depend upon time alone for improved flavor means certain disappointment.

How to Train the Eyebrows.

Eyebrows may be trained more readily than is generally thought. If thin and scrawny, make it a matter of routine to rub olive oil into them thoroughly each night. Persistence is the price of success. If the hairs of the eyebrows do not lie smooth, gentle brushing with the use of sweet oil will soon coax them into order.

How to Check Severe Coughing.

It is said that severe paroxysms of coughing may be arrested by giving the patient a tablespoonful of glycerin to a wineglass of hot milk.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

PALM SUNDAY THE LOST OPPORTUNITY

Text, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes" (Luke xix, 42).

Little did the Jews understand the momentous importance to them of the event which Christians commemorate on Palm Sunday. It will be remembered that the incident occurred at the close of our Lord's ministry—three and a half years after his baptism at Jordan and five days before his crucifixion. The Jewish Sabbath had been spent in rest at Bethany. Lazarus, whom Jesus awakened from the sleep of death, with his sisters Mary and Martha, prepared for Jesus a banquet, and when the Sabbath closed the supper was eaten. It was at that time that Mary brought forth the box of perfume, spikenard very valuable, and therewith anointed our Lord's head and feet. It was the same occasion on which Judas, in a wrong spirit, had murmured against this expression of her loving devotion; that it was a waste; that preferably the money should have been given to the poor. It was then that the Master defended Mary and announced that the anointing was for his burial (which occurred later the same week), and suggested to the disciples, "The poor ye have always with you. And whensoever ye will ye do them good; but me ye have not always."

The next morning, the first day of the week, corresponding to our Sunday, Jesus made ready for his triumphal entry into the city of Jerusalem as the Jewish King, according to the custom of the Jewish kings riding upon an ass and hailed and acclaimed by the populace. The incident had been foretold by the Prophet Zechariah in great detail, saying, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass" (Zechariah ix, 9).

Prophecy Must Be Fulfilled.

When the apostles had brought the ass and Jesus sat thereon, the large concourse of people (which had come from Jerusalem to see Jesus because of his awakening of Lazarus) shouted aloud. They were filled with enthusiasm and, after the manner of the time, some broke off palm branches for the ass to step upon; others laid their garments in the way and thus formed, as it were, a carpet in the road leading to Jerusalem near by. The shout of the people was just as the prophet had declared. They hailed Jesus as the promised Son of David, the Messiah long waited for. On previous occasions, when they sought to make Jesus a king, after witnessing his marvelous works, he withdrew himself from them, to wait for their ardor to cool, knowing that the Father's time was not yet due. But now he knew that his hour was come and hence, instead of hindering, he helped on with the enthusiasm by sending for the ass, etc. Prominent sectarian Jews present, although unable to account for the miracle, were unprepared to think of Jesus as the true Messiah, or anything short of an impostor in that role. When these heard the multitude shouting and addressing Jesus as the Messiah they were offended and sent word to Jesus that he should restrain the ignorant people who were thus acclaiming him.

But instead of forbidding the ovation Jesus intimated that it was the proper thing, that because the Prophet Zechariah (ix, 9) said, "Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem!" therefore there must be a shout. If the people had not shouted, rather than have the prophecy go unfulfilled, Jesus said the very stones would have cried out.

Enroute to Jerusalem Jesus halted the ass and the procession at the top of the Mount of Olives and, overlooking the Holy City, wept while he pronounced his sentence upon it—Unworthy! Unappreciative! As the evangelist declares, "Israel knew not the time of her visitation." The time for Israel to receive the King had come and they were not only ignorant of the matter collectively, but they were not in the heart condition to understand or appreciate. Jesus cried, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" (Matthew xxiii, 37.) For three and a half years he and his faithful apostles had been declaring that the Kingdom of God was at hand; that the people should repent and believe the good message. And even six months in advance of this John the Baptist and his disciples had similarly preached.

After those four years of faithful preaching throughout the length and breadth of Palestine, the nation was apparently as unprepared for Jesus as at the first. Hence our Lord's following words, "Therefore I say unto you, Your house is left unto you desolate! Ye shall see me no more until that day when ye shall say—Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" That day has not yet come. Meantime the Jewish nation was there cast off from fellowship with God, as the prophet declares, "Because they knew not the time of their visitation."

Israel has been outcast from national favor for more than eighteen centuries. Thank God the day is near at hand, when, at the second coming of Messiah, his Kingdom shall be turned over to them. And then, as he declares, they will be glad to say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The long centuries of persecution and separation from God's favor will have brought that people to a humbler condition of heart, where they will be glad to receive of Divine grace upon Divine terms. To this great event St. Paul refers us in Romans xi, 27-34.

Although God foreknew all that had happened the offer of the Kingdom to Israel was just as bona-fide, just as genuine, as though he had not known it. God always does his part! Whatever failure there is in any matter of contract belongs to humanity.

If thus we have before our minds the origin of Palm Sunday and what it signified as the climax of the test of natural Israel in respect to Messiah, we are prepared to go further and to note that in God's providence there is a similar test for us Christians.

"Enemies For Your Sakes."

St. John emphasized particularly the fact that the rejection of the Jewish nation, because of their rejection of Messiah, did not apply to all the individuals of that nation. As the Prophet Isaiah had foretold (Romans ix, 27-33) there was a small, faithful section or "remnant." This remnant accepted Christ and were by him accepted and became the nucleus or foundation of Spiritual Israel on the Day of Pentecost. Thus we read, "He came unto his own (nation) and his own received him not (as a nation); but to as many as received him, to them gave he liberty (privilege) to become sons of God, even to them that believed on his name; which were begotten not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—at Pentecost (John i, 11-13).

Thus so far as the spiritual part of God's great promise to Abraham is concerned it has passed from the Jewish nation; but there still remains for them a glorious earthly portion, to which they will be introduced at our Lord's second coming. Then their sins will be cancelled, and as a people the Hebrews will return to Divine favor and will inherit the earthly features of the promise made to their fathers. Then, through them, God's blessing will be extended to all nations and peoples under Israel's New Covenant, which will then become operative at the hands of their great Mediator—the Christ, the Messiah in glory. But by that time the election of the saints of this Gospel Age will be complete and the Messiah in glory will include Jesus the Head and the Church his Body—joint-heirs with him in his Kingdom—joint-heirs with him in the spiritual features of the great Abrahamic promise (Galatians iii, 29).

All this is clearly stated by the Apostle in Romans xi, 25-32. But somehow our eyes of understanding as Christians have been holden so that, until of late, we have not seen these lengths and breadths, these heights and depths, of Divine Love and Wisdom and arrangement. The fact that we now see these things is a corroborative evidence that they are nigh at hand. Just so it was at our Lord's first advent. Many things pertaining to that time were completely hidden until the time of their fulfillment came, and then only the "Wise Virgins" were so blessed, so assisted, that they trimmed their lamps effectively and were enabled to see these beauties in the Divine Plan.

The Time of Our Visitation.

Apparently very few of God's people, until recently, have noted the fact that Spiritual Israel has had a parallel history to that of Natural Israel. Few have seen that these are dealt with all through the Scriptures as type and antitype. Few have noticed that from the death of Jacob to the death of Jesus finds its exact parallel of 1,845½ years between the death of Jesus and our day. Few have noticed that in both cases there is a nominal and a real Israel. The nominal Jewish system was tried and all but the "Israelites indeed" failed. Likewise will be the experience of Spiritual Israel. The nominal Christian systems will be tried, and all will fail except the spirit-begotten and faithful. As only a remnant or small number were found in the proper condition at the first advent, so the Scriptures clearly intimate that only a small number will be found sufficiently saintly and zealous and loyal to the Lord and the principles of his Truth by the end of this age, to graduate with first honors.

As there was a special period of testing and trying at the close of the Jewish Age, lasting for forty years, so the Scriptures clearly indicate there is a special sifting and testing Due to come to Christendom during the closing forty years of this Gospel Age before the inauguration of the glorious Millennial blessings. As the trials and tests came upon the Jews in a subtle manner, to test their faith and obedience, so even more subtlety must we expect will be connected with the trials and testings in the harvest time of this Gospel Age. Of this time the Lord through the prophet said, "Who may abide the day of his presence, and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire and like fullers' soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord acceptable sacrifices" (Malachi iii, 2, 3).

Both Houses of Israel.

Natural and Spiritual Israel are contrasted. The Lord through the Prophet foretold that Messiah would be "for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel"—to Natural Israel and to Spiritual Israel. We have seen how the first house stumbled on that Palm Sunday—celebrated today. They stumbled "because they knew not the time of their visitation"—they did not know that the time had come for the establishment of the Kingdom; hence they were not alert to their privileges and failed to be in the proper condition of heart to receive the blessings. Or, we might state the matter reversely and say that those who did not know and did not accept Messiah, were those whose hearts were not in the right condition, else they would not have been left in darkness (I Thessalonians v, 4).

Many things indicate to us, now, that we are living in a time corresponding to that Palm Sunday! Many things imply that Christendom is now undergoing its great test and that only the fully consecrated of heart and life will be accepted of the Lord as his "Jewels" and be granted a share with Christ in his Kingdom. Many things imply that we are now in the time when the true people of God are being divided into two classes, as pictured for us by our Lord in the parable of the Wise and the Foolish Virgins. As only the Wise Virgins were prepared to enter into the marriage, so only the consecrated ones, the polished jewels of the Lord, will be accepted as fit for the Kingdom and be granted a share in the glorious resurrection change which will precede the great time of trouble, in which the Foolish Virgin class, although not of the world, will participate with the world.

True, that great time of trouble will usher in the glorious Millennial dispensation, in which the Church in glory with the Great Redeemer will pour out upon all mankind the wonderful restitution blessings which God has promised by the mouth of all the holy prophets (Acts iii, 19-23). True, the Foolish Virgins may subsequently get the oil and subsequently have a glorious future, but they will lose the choice place of Divine favor and blessing. They cannot be of the "Bride" class, but will receive their blessing under the figure of "the virgins her companions that follow her" (Psalm xlv, 14).

It is in order for all of God's people who now get awake from the slumber of worldliness which has long stupefied them, to join hearts and voices in a great shout—the shout that the Kingdom is at hand! The shout of Hosanna to the Son of David! And that the time is at hand for the fulfillment of the passage, "Gather together my saints unto me, saith the Lord; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." They shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I come to make up my jewels" (individually) (Malachi iii, 17).

"See That Ye Refuse Not Him."

As the Jewish nation was not ready to receive Jesus as its King, on that first Palm Sunday, neither is Christendom now ready to receive him at his second advent. As it was, only the "Israelites indeed," in whom was no guile, that then knew the voice of the Shepherd, so it will be here an individual matter. The Laodicean period of the Church's history is upon us (Revelation iii, 17). The Nominalism of our day is fully portrayed by our Lord's words. Christendom boasts that she is rich and increased in goods and has need of nothing; and knows not that she is poor and miserable and blind and naked. The Lord now stands at the door and knocks. He offers himself to the "Israelites indeed." Ours is Palm Sunday in the highest sense of all. How are we receiving the great blessings which betoken the parousia of the Master? Do we hear his knock? Have we opened our hearts? Are we searching his Word and listening for his voice and seeking to know and to do his will in all things? To all such very shortly, we believe, will come the greater and fuller Pentecostal blessing:—the resurrection "change," from the glory of character merely to the glory of person as well, when we shall see our Redeemer as he is, and share his glory. As St. Paul says, "See that ye reject not him that speaketh from heaven!" Greater light, greater privilege, greater blessing everyway are ours than were those enjoyed by the Jews at our Lord's first advent. These privileges and blessings are our tests. Let us be faithful. Let us present our bodies living sacrifices and with renewed zeal seek to glorify our Lord in our bodies and our spirits, which are his (I Corinthians vi, 20).

Those who have the eyes to see and the ears to appreciate the voice now speaking from heaven should be alert to hail him Lord of all—to accept him as their Redeemer and King and voluntarily to present themselves to [illegible] and his service—not waiting for [illegible] time when he shall reveal himself in power and great glory to the world in general. The Lord is now looking for saints, for overcomers, valiant, faithful, persevering, and thoroughly devoted to him, to his Cause of Righteousness, and thoroughly opposed to sin and especially active in overcoming its domination in their own hearts, in their own minds, in their own bodies. Such the Master pictures as his joint-heirs, priestly kings, sitting with himself in his Throne of glory and world dominion.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

SHOULD PLAY SAFE.

Considering the deplorable condition in which seed corn is admitted to be for the coming season's planting, it will be the height of folly for any corn grower to plant seed from any ears that have not been given a careful individual test. There are several types of testing racks and boxes on the market which are very handy, but the homemade tester will answer the purpose very well if one hasn't the price. The idea to be carried out is to take at least six kernels from each ear, so arranging the testing box that one has an accurate reference between the six kernel groups and the ear from which the groups were taken. Perhaps the most convenient means of doing this is by fixing a shallow box as long and broad as desired and about five inches deep, spreading moist earth or sawdust in the bottom to the depth of two inches and on this placing a piece of white cloth about ten inches larger than the box all around, which has been marked off in squares of about two inches and a half and numbered in consecutive order. The ears from which the kernels are taken should be in such order that the operator will know from which ear each group of six kernels is taken. When the squares all have their quotas of six kernels each a piece of cloth of about the same size as the first should be placed carefully over the kernels, and when this has been placed so as to cover all the kernels and with edges extending outside the box a third cloth should be laid on, and on this should be spread the sawdust or other material which is to be used, and this moistened sufficiently so as to make germination possible. When loaded the testing box should be placed in a warm room, and when it has stood about a week the covering should be raised at the corner, and if the germination has proceeded far enough to tell the story the first cloth, with the sawdust, should be carefully removed. The cloth immediately over the seed can then be removed without disturbing or dislocating the kernels which lie beneath, when the story of the germinating power of the ears will be plainly told. In deciding which ears to eliminate it is just as necessary to discard ears whose kernels show weak vitality as those which fail to germinate at all. Only those should be selected which show vigorous root and shoot development in at least five out of six kernels. If the scarcity of seed corn necessitates the use of ears showing only four good kernels, this fact should be kept in mind in selecting plates for the planter boxes, as more seed will have to be used to secure the desired stand. Unless a careful method of testing individual ears like that outlined above is followed there will be thousands of fields of corn next season that will have half a stand of corn or less.

OPPORTUNITIES CLOSE BY.

With the present rapid movement of population to the western states and the quite complete occupation of the choicest areas, the writer is convinced, as are many others, that the young man seeking a new field would do well to look over carefully opportunities in the central and New England states, particularly along the line of twenty to thirty acre tracts, which may be worked intensively to garden truck, small fruits and poultry. The relative value of such tracts, which may be had at very reasonable prices, would depend chiefly upon the workable character and fertility of the soil and nearness to a market where the produce of the farm could be disposed of at good prices. Many an easterner is operating just such areas as these in the manner indicated and is not only making a living for himself and family, but is accumulating a snug bank account. One could readily get track of such a tract by sending a three line advertisement to any agricultural paper of general circulation published in the section in which one wishes to locate.

THE HOTBED.

It is none too early to begin making plans for the hotbed, which should be located in a sheltered, sunny spot. The bed can be started much earlier if the preliminary work—digging the pit, making the frame and laying by a supply of soil—was done last fall before freeze up. In such case all that will be necessary will be to put in the pit and pack down about ten inches of fresh horse manure, wet it with seven or eight pails of water, allow it to stand until the heating process gets well started and then put on four or five inches of earth. As soon as this becomes warm enough the seed may be sown. If the preliminary work was not done last fall, one would have to wait until the ground thawed sufficiently to permit the digging of the pit. If the work is delayed as a result of this, the early things may be started in boxes in the house and later transplanted to the hotbed.

Every farm worth $100 per acre should have a herd of dairy cows, a flock of fifty sheep, a silo and a manure spreader.

It is not only the height of cruelty, but bad management, to keep an active, full lived horse, or, for that matter, an old plug, tied up in a stall week after week without driving it or giving it opportunity for exercise by cavorting about in a yard.

The housewife who takes a just pride in a clean kitchen and dining room floor will doubtless appreciate it if the muddy boots or overshoes are left in the back room and some lighter, cleaner footwear put on when the men enter the living rooms.

A housewife who has given it a trial recommends a lotion of equal parts of turpentine, ammonia and raw linseed oil as a ready means of relief from frosted feet and chilblains. The liniment should be applied three or four times a day, as conditions seem to demand.

Rotation as a principle of soil culture is not only good for the field crops, but for those raised in the garden patch as well. Such rotation not only rests the soil, but tends to check the development of fungous and other pests which are likely to infest the ground if the same crop is produced on the same plot year after year.

There are many farmers who could have or carry out no more practical New Year's resolution than the purchase and use of a good manure spreader. It will not only mean fewer blisters and callouses on the hands through freedom from forking the stuff off the wagon, but will likewise mean a great many dollars more in pocket as a result of a more economical handling of the farm fertilizers and from realizing a larger per cent of their value in increased crop returns.

As a result of three years of careful testing in the seeding of oats at the Illinois experiment station it has been found that when drilled oats produce on an average 53 bushels per acre more than when sown broadcast in the common slipshod fashion. The increased yield is attributed to more uniform germination and stand and more even growth and maturity. It was also found in this connection that clover drilled with oats seemed much better able to withstand the dry weather just following harvest.

If there is any ground for the statement alleged that many a farmer in dairy sections is selling his butter fat at 30 to 35 cents per pound and buying butterine—beef suet and cottonseed oil, etc.—at 16 to 20 cents a pound to grease his pancakes with very little enthusiasm will be aroused on his behalf on the part of the day laborer who is buying butter or some other kind of fat all of the time and has none to sell. Country people should use creamery butter or go without if they expect to win public favor in their war on the oleogargarine trust.

A lot of feeders should realize more fully than they seem to the difference in revenue between the scrub, ill favored steer that has a hard time fetching $5 per hundredweight on the market and the quickly grown, blocky Hereford, Angus or Shorthorn grade that weighs 1,300 to 1,450 pounds and brings $8.50 per hundredweight. The chances are that the scrub, pound for pound, has cost more to produce than the fat, sleek grade, yet he has brought 3½ cents a pound less. Another feature of the situation worth remembering is that the market is usually flooded with the five dollar stuff, while the good grade steer is always at a premium and buyers are anxious to get them.

Why does one fruit tree of the same age, size and apparent thriftiness as others in the same orchard tract yield a larger quantity of fruit as well as a better quality? Many horticulturists believe that such a trait is due to tree individuality in the same way that exceptional milk capacity is an individual trait in dairy cows and vigor and large size and symmetry traits of representatives of beef types. Moreover, the horticulturist believes that, just as characteristics may be transmitted in the animal kingdom, so tree traits may be through bud or scion to its descendants. The Colorado and some other horticultural stations are experimenting along this line and in the near future hope to furnish conclusive proof of what seems to be a very reasonable hypothesis.

Southern corn belt and cotton belt states are coming to look upon soy beans as a legume of exceptional value for use in crop rotations as a soil renovater, in this respect being a desirable substitute for clover and alfalfa. It thrives under the same general conditions as does corn, though flourishing on much thinner soils. The soy beans not only serves the purpose well as a pasture and makes good hay if cut before the vines are too ripe, but makes excellent silage when sown with corn or a fine green manure if plowed under. In sections where the conditions are favorable and the season long enough the soy bean will produce from fifteen to twenty bushels of beans per acre, these making an excellent ration when ground with corn and having twice the feeding value of that cereal. In getting a start with the legume best results are secured by inoculating the field with soil from an established field or by inoculating the seed with cultures which one can secure fresh and reliable from the department of agriculture at Washington.

Russia's 1909 crop of winter wheat aggregated a little over 200,000,000 bushels. The production of rye, the cereal on which the nation relies for its food supply, is placed at 884,000,000 bushels.

A fact that it is well for the one just starting in orchard work to remember is that winter pruning, as a general thing, tends to induce production of wood, while pruning in the late spring and early summer encourages a setting of fruit buds.

Not all western fruit ranchmen are wise, as one we came across the other day neglected a thirty acre ranch which would have increased in value at the rate of $150 per acre during the year to handle an automobile agency through which he got a $200 commission on a $1,500 machine. He lost just about $4,300 by the deal.

The reason why tuberculosis as a bovine ailment afflicts the dairy cow more seriously than the steer in the feed lot seems largely traceable to the fact that the steer rarely lives beyond the age of three, while the dairy cow may be doing service at the pail when ten or twelve. The average steer doesn't live long enough to be sick.

While the volcanic ash soil to be found in some sections of the west makes a fearful dust during the summer months, the fact remains that it is marvelously rich in fertilizing elements. This is especially noticeable in the Yakima valley, where in places this soil, as fine as bolted flour, is said to extend to a depth of seventy feet.

In all agricultural communities our standards of good citizenship should more and more come to give high place to the man, whether owner or tenant, who at the end of a season leaves the soil which he has tended in as fertile and productive a condition as when he found it. And it should class as very real traitors to the country's best interest and welfare the very large class who despoil and rob the soil ruthlessly.

The English potato crop for the year 1909 averaged 238 bushels per acre as against an average in the United States of about 105 bushels. It is well to remember, too, in this connection that the English average was secured on lands which have been tilled for 700 or 800 years, while here the land has not been cultivated on an average sixty or seventy years. There ought to be a suggestion in these figures for the American agriculturist.

The agricultural department is continuing its vigorous warfare against the weevil pest, which has exacted such heavy toll from southern cotton growers, and as a result of its efforts parasitic enemies have been introduced which are greatly lessening the damage sustained. In some fields in Louisiana as high as 77 per cent of the boll weevils have been destroyed by these insect enemies, and at various points in Texas from 21 to 48 per cent of the weevils have been destroyed by the same agency.

Investigations which have been made by the Nebraska experiment station into the causes of sorghum poisoning show that this result is due to the presence of prussic acid in the green leaves of young and old sorghum plants and Kaffir corn. The poisons seem always to be present in minute quantities, but is developed in dangerous quantities when the plant is arrested in certain stages of its growth by dry weather. It is more than likely that to this same poison is due the frequent death of stock which has eaten of the green shoots and suckers in a field of corn following a period of retarded development.

The present session of congress promises to have on its hands another seance with the oleomargarine question. The present tax on this hog fat, beef fat, cottonseed oil mixture when uncolored is but one-fourth of a cent per pound, but if colored to imitate butter the tax is 10 cents per pound. It is this little tax that the oleo chaps are trying to get reduced in order that they may have a still larger profit on the sale of the product, which is disposed of at a handsome profit even with the present tax, at from 10 to 12 cents a pound less than is asked for best grades of butter. On the one hand the laboring man contends (or the oleo producer contends for him) that butter at 35 cents a pound is decidedly a luxury and out of his reach, that if he wants to buy a fatty product colored to imitate butter it is nobody's business but his own and that if he chooses to purchase it he ought not to have to pay a tax to the government any more than the more well to do citizen should who elects to eat butter. There is much force to his argument. The dairymen, on the other hand, contend that the coloring of this oleo product is done so that it may be sold under the belief on the part of the purchaser that it is butter or that when eating it it will be easier for him to think that it is butter, which the farmer contends is essentially a fraud and works a hardship on his industry in that with feed stuff so high it is impossible for him to produce butter at lower prices without actual loss. It looks very much as if the controversy involved a conflict of interest between the packing house owners and the dairymen, with the chances that the dairymen will win out, because they are in a majority.

CAUGHT IN HER OWN TRAP.

A Girl Sent a Valentine to a Fellow She Didn't Know.

By HORACE HILL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

My brother Tom is fifteen years older than I and a very different fellow in every way. Tom never cared anything about the girls, while I confess I always had a fancy for them. When I was fourteen I went away to boarding school and stayed until I was eighteen. I had left Tom single, and single he remained.

On my return I could see, over a high hedge that separated our place from the one adjoining, that during my absence a family had moved in there, among the members of which was a girl as pretty as a peach. She was about sixteen years old, wearing her skirts to the tops of her boots. I rather fancied she was not averse to practicing any kind of mischief that might occur to her.

This was a mere inference till St. Valentine's day came round; then it became a certainty. The girl, whose name was Mary Blake, gave herself away by a very simple process. A cousin, Maud Blake, considerably older than herself and a very proper old maid, was visiting at the house. A valentine came through the mail for Mr. T. Etherton and was delivered to me. My brother's name is Tom and mine is Theodore, both initials letters being "T." Since I considered Tom too old a fogy to receive a valentine, I took the benefit of the doubt, opened and read it. There were some verses in it referring to the warmth of a middle aged heart, which convinced me that it was intended for Tom. Opening a little pocket built in it, I took out a bit of paper on which had been scrawled almost illegibly, "Maud."

"LET ME GO! I DON'T KNOW YOU."

It seemed rather strange to me that an elderly person like the middle aged spinster next door should send my ministerial looking brother a valentine, especially with her name on it. I was bothered for a time, then all of a sudden the whole scheme flashed upon me. The little humbug Mary was intending to perpetrate a joke on her cousin.

But I was not of an age myself to waste time in repentance for having spoiled a love story. I was busy hatching mischief myself. I racked my brain for some plan to pay the heartless Mary in her own coin, but without much success. Tom's valentine had come in the mail delivery the evening before St. Valentine's day. I said nothing to Tom about it, not intending that he should do anything to spoil any pranks I might decide to play on the perpetrator of the joke.

We have a letter box beside our front door, and that evening while coming around from the back to the front of the house I saw a figure stealing in at the gate and on tiptoe up the walk to the house. Stepping behind a tree where I would not be observed, I saw the figure—it wore a dress—go up to the letter box and slip something in. Not caring to declare myself at this stage of the proceedings, I lay low and permitted the figure to flit away in the darkness. Then I dived into the letter box.

I pulled out an envelope stamped with leaves and flowers and cupids and all such things and, looking at the superscription, saw that it was for Mr. Theodore Etherton, or my own self. I opened it, expecting some kind of a decoy from the little mischief maker next door, and I was not disappointed. The missive purported to be a valentine with the harmless anonymity usual in valentines. But the recipient was invited to join the writer the next evening at 8 o'clock in a little summer house in grounds at the time vacant in rear of our place.

Here was accomplished what I had been racking my brains to invent. Miss Mary was intending to draw me to a meeting with some one who would probably turn out to be no one and doubtless from a hiding place observe my chagrin.

I don't know whether I was more delighted with the williness of this scheme or the innocence that was intending to perpetrate it. One thing I know; I was yearning to get the little girl encircled in my arms and heap coals of fire on her head in the shape of a volley of kisses

The next morning from my window at the rear of the house and overlooking the summer house that was intended for the scene of my disappointment I made a careful survey of the grounds. A path led from a gate behind our yard and a path from the Blakes' yard to the summer house. Between these two paths and near to the summer house were some bushes. Miss Blake would observe me going to the rendezvous and would follow me under cover of the darkness. What, if anything, she intended to do I didn't know; but, whatever it was, it would be done from behind the bushes.

During the day I kept a sharp lookout upon the fair one next door—not an inappropriate occupation for St. Valentine's day—and observed her going about demurely, with never a smile on her face or, so far as I could see, a twinkle in her eye. To look at her one would have supposed butter wouldn't melt in her mouth. There was something fascinating in gazing upon such innocence, knowing the while that it was merely a cover for the most arrant roguishness. As for casting the least bit of a sly glance across the hedge, she seemed entirely oblivious to the fact that there was any other side to it than her own. Was there ever such duplicity concealed under so guileless an exterior?

When night came I at last was in a state of uncertainty. I could lay no plan by which to surely head her off. She had a safe retreat from the bushes over a straight path to her own back gate. The worst that could befall her was to be seen entering her own premises. But this would give me no information I did not have, and it is questionable if she would care if it were known that the decoyer lived there, since she might assume that it would not be known which one of the occupants had perpetrated the joke. What I mainly relied on was my fleetness and that I as well as she might work under cover of the darkness.

It is pretty dark at 8 o'clock in the evening on the 14th of February, and in order that Miss Molly should know that I had gone to the rendezvous I put on a light gray coat, carrying a black one in my hand. Having thus arrayed myself, I sallied forth, not doubting that I was watched by the girl next door. I had no sooner entered the summer house than I took off the light colored coat and put on the black one. Then, getting down flat on the ground, I wriggled around with a view to getting between the girl and her home. I had gone a part of the distance when I saw a silhouette against the sky running for the clump of bushes. On reaching it I heard a loud ha-ha and saw the silhouette dash like the wind for the gate. Quick as a flash I was on my feet, running for the path, and a body of flesh and blood ran right into my arms.

"Oho!" I said.

"Let me go!"

"Not just yet. I have a bone to pick with you."

"Let me go! I don't know you."

"I know you very well."

"I have not injured you."

"Yes, you have. You are my enemy."

"Let me go, I say!" And she made a vigorous effort to release herself from my grip.

"Do you know how the good book tells us to treat our enemies?"

"No, and I don't care. I want to go home."

"It tells us to love them."

She didn't struggle quite so hard after I said this, but she pretended all the same.

"You must excuse me for being frank with you. This is St. Valentine's day, and we are permitted to tell each other our feelings. I've been watching you from my side of the hedge and have noticed what a nice, pretty girl you are. You haven't ever seen me in our yard, have you?"

"No, and I don't want to see you. Let me go!"

"I will of you'll tell me one thing, and tell me truthfully. Who sent that valentine to my brother with the bit of paper in the pocket with 'Maud' on it?"

There was no answer, but a renewal of the struggle to get away. I held on tightly.

"You must tell me that and tell me who slipped the valentine in our letter box decoying me to the summer house."

As before, the only reply was more struggling.

"Well, since you don't seem disposed to buy your freedom with information on these points I'll give you another kind of chance. You must admit that a girl who deceitfully and with malice aforethought induces a fellow to meet an imaginary person in a summer house and gets caught in her own trap must expect to pay some sort of ransom. Now, we'll call it quits for one kiss."

"I supposed you were above such mean things as that."

"I didn't know that you were aware of my being your neighbor, much less understanding the traits of character I possess."

There was a bit of a giggle at this, and I took courage.

"Beggars cannot be choosers," I said. "I shall have to decide the penalty for myself without asking you what you'd rather do."

I took a kiss so quick that she had no time to defend herself. Then I opened my arms and let her go. She walked away to her home, and when she reached the gate I heard her say spitefully:

"Red head!"

"How did you happen to notice that I had a red head?" I called. "It's too dark to see it here."

I'm going to college in the autumn, and I shall take her picture with me. I didn't steal it; she gave it to me.

The problem which immediately faces the General Assembly is a deficit in the original appropriation of $150,000 for legislative expenses. It is now proposed to rush a bill through this week appropriating $75,000 with which to meet this deficit. The exhaustion of the appropriation of $150,000 comes as a result of Democratic extravagance inaugurated the beginning of the session, despite the protests of Governor Crothers, Speaker Peeples and others. Four years ago Governor Warfield gave a warning of the evils to come if there were not a reduction in legislative expenses.

Ample warning of the present deficit was given at the beginning of the session, when Senator Harper, in the Senate and and Mr. Marriot, in the House, led movements for reductions in the lists of employes. They recommended:

That the employes of the Senate be limited to 33, and of the House to 46.

That the employes be selected in open session by election or an order.

That they be required to report each day to the secretary of the Senate and chief clerk of the House, and receive $5 for each day's attendance unless excused.

That committees composed of the leading officers of each house examine and pass upon the qualification of each engrossing clerk.

That the first week of each session should not be lost by adjournment.

That each bill be called for after it has been unreported in committee for eight days.

That the state librarian keep separate accounts with each member as to the issue of supplies of stationery and other articles.

That the system of engrossing be changed in order to expedite business.

That the work of cleaning of State House during the sessions of the legislature be awarded by contract after competitive bids.

That a legislative lawyer be employed to see that bills are in proper legal form.

It has been suggested that the General Assembly pass a bill limiting the employes of future General Assemblies to the number recommended early in the session. The obstacle in the way of this legislation is this: one legislature cannot bind a future legislature as to the number of its employes.

One important bill which seems doomed to fall by the wayside is that introduced by Senator Crothers abolishing continuing appropriations, which, according to Governor Crothers' view, ought to be carried in the general appropriation bills, thus enabling the taxpayers to know exactly how their money is spent. The sum of about $450,000 is carried from year to year by old acts. Included in this figure are $200,000 appropriated annually for improvement of roads under the Shoemaker act, of which $160,000 was used last year, and $25,000 annually to the State Geological Survey, of which sum $19,000 was drawn. Governor Crothers and others who are against the present practice of continuing appropriations believe that these and other items should appear in the general appropriation bills acted upon at each session of the General Assembly. Those opposing the bill claim that the Governor should not be given the privilege of cutting items out of the appropriation bills after the adjournment of the General Assembly, as he did two years ago. The greater the number of items, they say, the greater his privilege of using the veto pen. Hence the opposition to the inclusion of these continuing appropriations in the general appropriation bills.

Some of these appropriations have been carried from year to year by statutes which are over a century old. Frederick County College and St. John's Literary Institute, of Frederick, have received $1,200 annually by an act of 1798. Many of the continued appropriations have their origin in acts in the middle 60's of the last century, when aid was extended to county academies. At this time the state did not keep the public schools and the only method of extending aid was by appropriations to academies in centers of population. The total of these appropriations is $27,500

A large increase in the state tax rate seems to be inevitable. It will probably be 21 cents on the $100. The Governor has done all within his power to prevent this prospective menace. He is thoroughly convinced that the average member of the General Assembly is far more active in getting money out of the State Treasury than in putting money into it. What he will do with the general appropriation bills when presented for his signature is not a surmise. He will slash them right and left. Members of the Senate and House know this and they will put forth their best efforts to have the appropriation bills ready this week to receive his signature in order that his pruning pen may be applied before and not after adjournment, as was the case two years ago. If his veto cuts too deep and if it wipes out appropriations in which members are especially interested, they will have an opportunity to restore them over his veto.

The Governor and other Democratic state officials apprehend serious results to their party in the campaigns this and next year if the threatened increase in the tax rate is made. Governor Crothers knows that his administration will be held responsible for any increase in the rate. He has resorted to every plan which his ingenuity can devise to increase the state's revenue without a resort to an increase in the tax rate. At the same time he has advocated measures which will mean a drain on the state treasury, including the creation of a public utilities commission, whose cost will be $75,000 per annum. While not lessening his advocacy of the general principles of the bill as drafted by Attorney General Straus, he says that the bill will have to be considerably modified before it will meet with approval. He also advocates partial care of the indigent insane by the state, and advocates a direct tax on inheritances, and, if necessary, an income tax to meet this additional demand on the state treasury. He has not committed himself to a bond issue as a source of revenue with which to erect the additional buildings to house the insane. The State Lunacy Commission has advocated the bond issue. The Governor is also in favor of a larger tax on automobiles and a tax on merchants' stocks exceeding $40,000 in value.

PRIEST FOR GOOD ROADS.

Smooth Highways In a Missouri County Preached by Father Placid.

Headed by Father Placid, superior of the Conception monastery at Conception, Mo., in Nodaway county, the township board of Jefferson township has put fifty-six of the seventy-eight miles of road in the township under a system of dragging contracts. Farmers have been secured who will drag the roads as often as required by the supervisors at rates running from 50 cents to 75 cents a mile. A dragging consists, under the contracts recently let, of two rounds, or four times over.

When the plan was started Father Placid, accompanied by the township board, visited all the main traveled roads of the township and selected the sections which were in need of grading and would need such improvement before dragging could be effectively started. The various supervisors were then ordered to have these sections graded.

It is expected that after the grading is completed it will cost an average of $65 a mile yearly to maintain the roads in good shape. Father Placid in a sermon delivered at the monastery urged his auditors to aid the good roads movement.

PRIZES FOR GOOD ROADS.

New Scheme In Maryville, Mo., to Encourage Building Five Mile Sections.

Maryville, Mo., will attempt to solve the good roads proposition in a new way. At a recent meeting of the Maryville Commercial club it was decided to formulate a plan to give four prizes aggregating $750 for the four best five mile stretches of road leading into Maryville.

No matter how far out the five mile section may be, just so it is connected to a complete five mile section which touches the city limits or to a section which touches such contiguous section it will be eligible for prizes. The sections thus competing must be kept in order for one year.

Pointer on Road Metaling.

Hillsboro county, Fla., has a considerable extent of good roads, about 100 miles approximately, most of which has been improved within a few recent years. One of the county commissioners in an interview recently laid particular stress on the necessity for an adequate thickness of metaling. He maintains that there should be of macadam construction at least eight inches of stone on the sides and ten inches in the center. Even more would add to the longevity of the road, in his judgment.

Cumulative Value of Good Highways.

Improved roads are breeders of traffic. Commerce invariably follows the line of the least resistance, and rarely is a good road constructed that much travel is not diverted to it from other courses. In addition to this, it may almost invariably be found that new industries, new and greater productions, spring up along the well built roads. With the added commerce comes added enlightenment, added sociability, enlarged business and more and more developed and perfected citizenship.

Ettie Hamilton vs. Alexander Hamilton.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states that the parties were married in the town of Oakland, Garrett County, State of Maryland, on the first day of January, 1906, and that they lived together for a period of three years, at and after which time the defendant deserted the plaintiff and has remained away ever since, which desertion has now lasted for over eight years, is final, uninterrupted and without any reasonable hope of reconciliation.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1910. NUMBER 5

$17,000 PAID FOR A GARRETT COUNTY FARM

The Jamesson Place Near Mountain Lake Park Bought by Westerner.

The sale of the William T. Jamesson farm, adjoining Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn Heights, for the sum of $17,000, marked the top notch price for a farm in Garrett county. This price was realized Monday by the owner, through his agent, Lieut. E. S. West, who disposed of the land that day to to Judge Manlon Head, of Jefferson, Greene county, Iowa.

Judge Head purchased the property for members of his family, who have been at a number of places seeking health, including Denver, Col., for the relief of asthma and hay fever, but without avail.

Judge Head was induced to come here by Lieut. West, arriving on Saturday, being accompanied by his son-in-law, Mr. Thomas Watts, of Grand Junction, Iowa. After inspecting the farm Monday morning the deal was closed the same afternoon, the purchaser and Mr. Watts returning to their respective homes Tuesday night.

The Jamesson farm consists of 340 acres of excellent land, is improved by splendid buildings and is in a high state cultivation.

The new owner of the property is a foremost business man of his home community, being a retired lawyer and judge of the Circuit court. He is extensively interested in banking both at his home and at Grand Junction and has erved his state in the Senate of Iowa.

The property will be occupied by udge Head's sons-in-law who will arve here in a short time to take charge it. To them the people generally of arrett county will extend a cordial elcome.

Grave of Fitzgerald.

A striking tribute was paid Easter Sunday to the memory of the late Thomas G. Fitzgerald, at one time general manager of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, by the employes in the shops of the railroad at Brunswick, Md. A delegation, representing the employes, went to Loudon Park cemetery, Baltimore, and placed a handsome pall of Easter lilies, white roses and hyacinths on the grave of Mr. Fitzgerald, who was one of the best known railroad men in the country. The committee in charge consisted of Dr. H. S. Hodges and Messrs. J. P. Martin, M. S. Price, W. O. Suter, G. C. Brown and J. O. Jennings.

New Wall Paper Store.

Having purchased the wall paper stock of Messrs. Matthews & Helbig and added a large stock of new patterns, we are now open for business on the second floor of the Townshend building, Second street, and solicit the patronage of the public.

THEY WOULD NULLIFY FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

State Democrats Scheming to Violate the Federal Law.

Not content with the opprobrium which Democrats have brought upon Maryland by their dishonest ballot laws and not content with causing the finger of shame to be pointed to this state as the state where fraudulent elections thrive, these same Democrats now propose to make Maryland stand forth in the galaxy of states as an open, defiant and flagrant violator of the law of the land, the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to all citizens the right to vote irrespective of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

This is the bold proposition agreed upon by Democratic members of the General Assembly in their caucus in Annapolis Friday night. They pledged themselves to enact a new registration law under which negroes, though given the right by the United States, cannot register and, therefore, cannot vote. Such a drastic step was not an issue in the last state campaign. In that campaign, indeed, the people of Maryland, by a majority of over 15,000, defeated a proposed amendment to the State Constitution by which over 80 per cent of negroes and a large percentage of whites would have been deprived of their suffrage. Seven years ago another amendment, with the same object in view, was rejected by a majority of over 33,000.

Flying in the face of this sentiment, adverse to their schemes, rushing onward to their doom, and realizing their inability to enslave the people of Maryland by an amendment to the Constitution restricting the right to vote, they have the audacity, the brazen hardihood, to defy the federal law to accomplish their end.

Can Maryland afford to be classed as a violator of the law?

Can it afford to subscribe to the discarded doctrine that the colored man has no rights which the white man is bound to respect?

Shame upon the Democrats of Maryland that they would drag down into the mire the fair name of their state and make it a criminal.

Beyond this attempt of the Democrats to gain control of this commonwealth is a far more important question. It is the question of repudiation of the rights of the federal government and the assumption of the rights of the state over the paramount rights of the national government. The mere question whether the negro shall or shall not vote sinks into insignificance alongside that of supremest moment, the question of national unity, of observance of national authority, of respect for national sovereignty.

Those lawyers who by specious arguments convinced members of the General Assembly that the revolutionary step which they proposed is legal, that the United States Supreme Court will not pass upon the validity of the proposed violation of the law, have everything to gain and nothing to lose by their advocacy of a fantastic idea. They are imbued with the old idea of state's rights and have never reconciled themselves to the new conditions established by a war fought when they were in their swaddling clothes, if, indeed, they were born. To them the South before the war is a sentiment, not even a memory.

The nearest parallel in American history to Maryland's prospective violation of the Constitution of the United States was the Nullification act of South Carolina in 1828. This act grew out of the refusal of the state, under the leadership of John C. Calhoun, to recognize the validity of the Tariff act of 1828.

South Carolina, like Maryland, and unlike New York and Virginia, ratified the federal Constitution without reservation. Virginia expressly reserved the right to withdraw from the Union whenever things did not go to suit her, stating in her act of ratification that the powers granted in the Constitution, being derived from the people, "may be resumed by them whenever the same shall be perverted to their injury or oppression." New York had taken the same position, stating that "the powers of government may be resumed by the people whenever it shall become necessary to their happiness." South Carolina assumed this right as much as if it had been an essential condition of ratification, as with Virginia and New York.

The doctrine of the unconstitutionality of protection was at the bottom of the nullification proceedings in South Carolina, just as the Democratic contention that the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution is unconstitutional is at the bottom of the movement to eradicate the negro as a voting factor.

All that the nullifiers asked was that the matter should be put into such shape that it could be carried to the Supreme Court, asserting that they would abide by its decision. Maryland Democrats are seeking the same result. To that end South Caroline wanted protectionists to insert in the preamble of the act of 1828 the identical words of the preamble of the tariff of 1789 which specifically stated that the law was for the encouragement of manufacturers. If this request had been granted the matter could have been finally determined in the Supreme Court. But the protectionists would not risk such a proceeding. Whether their opposition sprang from a fear that a majority of the court were free traders, or whatever their motives for denying the motion for an adjudication of the question, the fact remains that they refused to put the matter in shape to be taken to the Supreme Court. South Carolina then sought to have the question of constitutionality tested in another way. It refused to satisfy bonds that had been given to secure duties, pleading "no consideration" for taxes levied. Even on this plea it could not get the case in court. Taking the view that it was being denied the constitutional right to have the constitutionality of a measure determined, the Palmetto State concluded that the only way to get what it considered its rights was by nullification.

The doctrine of nullification was first enunciated in South Carolina in 1827 at a public banquet, and it continued to spread thereafter. Later the legislature adopted a resolution, saying that Congress had transcended its Constitutional power and that as a body of equal standing with the Congress of the United State, the South Carolina legislature must sound a warning and a protest in a way that should not be misunderstood.

From the South Carolina viewpoint, the act of 1832 was as bad as the tariff of abominations. Of course it had lowered many duties, but there was not the abatement of a jot or a tittle of the protection principle. Refused the means to get the matter into court, the South Carolina legislature passed the Nullification Act. Assertion was made in this act that the tariff laws of 1828 and 1832 were unconstitutional and therefore null and void so far as the state, its officers and its citizens were concerned. The act prohibited the collection of tariff duties within the confines of the state after February 1, 1833, and cut off all appeals to the courts thereunder. All officers and jurors were required to take the oath to abide by this provision, and goods seized by the customs officials were to be replevined by state officers.

When South Carolina proceeded to pass her Nullification Act President Andrew Jackson threatened to do several and sundry things of serious import, including the hanging of John C. Calhoun, if nullification were persisted in, but at the same time gave assurance to South Carolina that he was willing to do what was just and right. John C. Calhoun resigned from the vice presidency in order to get a vote in the very body over which he was presiding, and Hayne left the Senate in order to become governor of his state. Acting in thorough accord they made the best possible showing for their cause. Henry Clay was up in arms against South Carolina. That state was so angered by the action of Congress that it threw its electoral vote away in 1833 rather than permit it to be cast for Jackson.

The next session of Congress met and everywhere there was an attitude of conciliation. This attitude was met in like spirit by South Carolina and the incident was soon closed.

South Carolina lost so far as being able to maintain her doctrine was concerned.

How Far Can You See?

What is the farthest limit to which the human vision can reach? Power in his book, "The Eye and Sight," gives the ability to see the star Alcor, situated at the tail of the Great Bear, as the test. Indeed, the Arabs call it the Test star. It is most exceptional to be able to see Jupiter's satellites with the naked eye, though one or two cases are recorded, the third satellite being the most distinct. Peruvians are said to be the longest sighted race on earth. Humboldt records a case where these Indians perceived a human figure 18 miles away, being able to recognize that it was human and clad in white. This is probably the record for far sight.

ARMY CAMP SITE NOT YET SELECTED

Erroneously Reported That Gettysburg Had Been Chosen By the Department.

That Garrett county still has a fighting chance of securing the summer camping site for the army maneuvres of the Government and State troops of the Department of the East, is contained in a letter received yesterday morning by Lieut. E. S. West from Capt. B. H. Wells, who was here last week looking over the ground.

The day after Capt. Wells visited Oakland a Baltimore newspaper published under a Washington date line that Gettysburg had been selected by the department for the camp and immediately a telegram was sent to Capt. Wells from Oakland asking for a confirmation of the report. Capt. Wells' letter was in answer to the telegram and in it he said: "There is no authority that I know of for the newspaper article regarding the selection of Gettysburg. The matter stands just as it did when I was with you. * * * My personal preference so far as country goes is still for your beautiful location in the Alleghenies. The matter of transportation expenses will have to be figured on quite extensively, no doubt, before decision is reached."

Following the visit of Capt. Wells to Oakland and an invitation to the land owners to meet representatives of the Oakland Board of Trade on Saturday to petition the War Department to select this section as the camp site and to sign agreements covering damage to lands, etc., a large number of owners were in town and without an exception all who were approached readily signed the papers and they were forwarded to the Department the same night.

FOREST FIRES IN GARRETT COUNTY

Last Year Nearly 1500 Acree Were Burned Over By 13 Fires.

Last year fires in Garrett county forests, reported to the State Forester, totalled thirteen in number, and the area burned over consisted of 1461 acres with an estimated damage amounting to $2204.

Just at this time fires are burning in nearly every section of Garrett county and the damage resulting therefrom will be serious to owners. These spring fires, as a rule are more destructive than those in the autumn, because the trees in the spring have come out of the dormant state of winter and begun the growth activities of another season when the buds and bark are easily injured.

The smoke from the fires now in progress is so dense that the sun and moon are both obscured to a great extent and for a few days past many have complained of a burning sensation in their eyes and nostrils.

As a result of the fires the state forester has sent out warnings to the public citing the forest laws wherein it makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment for any one to allow a fire to escape from his own lands to those of his neighbor. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance in the burning of brush, the firing of marshes, or the burning off old fields, that every precaution be taken to prevent the spread of the fire beyond the limits marked. The State Forest Wardens are authorized to take all necessary steps to extinguish fires when they occur, and the local warden should be notified in every case when a fire is beyond control, in order that prompt action may be taken. But the best way to deal with forest fires is to prevent them, and that can only be done by cooperating with the state and county officials in the strict enforcement of our fire laws, which are ample to deal with any cases that may arise.

The damage from forest fires for 1909, as reported by the forest wardens, shows the seriousness of this matter. There were 84 fires reported, which burned over 23,277 acres of woodland and caused a damage of $82,200. This does not include all the fires that occurred, nor does it cover the full loss to young growth, which would add considerably more to the above estimate. Thirty of the fires reported were extinguished by the forest wardens and the assistants they employed, at a total cost of $367, which was paid by the several counties in which the fires occurred. It would be difficult to find a greater return for so small an expenditure of public money.

APRIL FORECAST

Month Will Be Cool in Early Part and Springlike Later On.

Peter R. Smith predicts the following weather for April:

The early part of April will most likely be wet and cool, touched with a wintry tinge. The forces that will be in touch with the Easter storms will have expended their forces and springlike settled weather will come to the front about the 15th of the month. However, keep your early plants under cover, for frosts will show their whitened locks till the 10th or 12th of May on elevations 1,000 or 1,500 feet above sea level in many sections of central parts.

The temperature will change to warmer on or about the 2nd or 3rd, which will be followed by cloudiness and rain on or about the 3rd or 4th. The possibilities denote hail, which will appear in a number of places, and also snow on the northern rim of the wave. Frosts will follow on the heels of the storm. In southern parts high winds are likely to prevail.

The 8th, 9th and 10th denote unsettled, cloudy weather. The atmosphere will be saturated with much humidity, which will bring on rain and then be followed by more cool weather and frosts.

The 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th will be a period of cloudy weather attended by warm spring rains; then at the close of the period cool, frosty nights are likely to follow.

On the 21st, 22nd and 23rd threatening weather will show up with thunderstorms. At the close of this storm period a sharp change in the temperature will be noted and more frosts will show up.

A storm wave will be central on the 27th, 28th and 29th, which will bring more spring showers and a change to much cooler weather as April passes to May.

A MISSION EPISODE.

The Reckless Girl and the Man With the Wicked Face.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Miss Elizabeth Robbins regarded her brother thoughtfully across the breakfast table.

"Jackie," she said, "I am going to work"—a pause—"in the slums."

"You are not," responded Mr. Robbins decidedly, "going to do anything of the sort."

Then Bettie came down to her brother's end of the table.

"Oh, wait until you hear about the plan, Jackie," she pleaded, "and remember that I shall only go one afternoon each week. Mrs. Holmwood is interested in a mission away down"—Bettie's eyes opened very wide—"in the worst part of the city. It is called Welcome hall and has been started through the efforts of that great preacher, Dr. Henry Huntington Smith, who has come here recently.

"Mrs. Holmwood says that they gather the women and men of that vicinity into Welcome hall every afternoon and evening, serve coffee, have music, speaking, and—oh, you know," finished Bettie vaguely.

"Which part of the program do you furnish, may I ask," said Jack, "upon your particular afternoon?"

"Why, I don't know," said Bettie uncertainly. "This will be my first day, you see. I could at least play the piano, and I shall be home in time to see that Mary serves your dinner properly."

"As for that"—Jack was getting into his overcoat now, so Bettie followed him to the hall—"as for that, I may be a little late for dinner tonight, but if you have fully made up your mind to this business keep close to Mrs. Holmwood all the time."

Later in the day, clad in a tan storm coat and with a pert little red velvet turban upon her curly hair, Miss Bettie descended to the parlor, where the pastor's wife sat waiting.

"You see," she said laughingly, "I have worn my very oldest clothes as directed, and I am sure that your girls could not now be prejudiced against me because of my fine appearance."

The two stepped out into a heavy snowstorm. From one car to another they changed, each street growing stranger and shabbier to Bettie's unaccustomed eyes, until Welcome hall, with its great sign over the doorway—a sign that turned to glittering letters of fire at night—loomed up before them.

The pastor's wife went first, and Bettie followed between chattering rows of girls. The place was quite different from what she had expected, so large and white and bare. The steam from boiling coffee seemed to fill the air, and it was very close and warm in the room.

The girls were disappointed also and seemed to prefer coffee to music, so Bettie stood filling the cups while the demand seemed ever to increase.

The steam lodging in her curly hair brought it floating in shining strands across her flushed face as the waitresses bade her "hustle." And it was a very disheveled and rather angry young person who sought Mrs. Holmwood toward the end of the short winter afternoon.

"I am going home now," she announced. "I cannot wait any longer for you, Mrs. Holmwood."

The pastor's wife looked up at Bettie absently. She was helping a white faced girl in her selection of books from the small library.

"Very well," she said, "thank you so much for coming, and mind, dear, take the green car at the door."

Bettie pinned the bright turban upon her floating hair, but was wholly unaware that the little hat was tilted very decidedly over one eye.

Then, slipping into the tan raincoat she hurried once more into the cool, fresh air and stood with hands thrust deep into her pockets at the entrance to Welcome hall, impatiently awaiting the appearance of a green car.

She had turned to watch the boy lighting the street lamp when her eye fell upon a man, a great broad shouldered fellow with a swaggering walk.

He wore a long checked ulster, and his red hair curled about the back of the rough woolen cap, which was pulled down over his ears.

A sudden fear seized Bettie as she remembered the newspaper tales of that locality and her brother's warning.

If only she had waited for Mrs. Holmwood! For an instant she considered retreat, then turned to face her—robber.

"Going in?" the man asked, with a nod toward the glittering sign.

Bettie stared, to all appearances quite deaf and dumb.

"They are going to have cake and coffee," said the man, with a grin. "Come on; let us go in."

This, added to the discomfort of the afternoon, was too much for Bettie's patience.

"No," she said, turning upon him like a small fury; "I am not going in there. Do you understand that? And if you dare speak to me again I will hand you over to a policeman."

The man chuckled and laid a great, detaining hand upon her arm.

"Now, see here, don't be angry," he was beginning, when, with a cry of relief, Bettie ran into the road to hail the green car, which was fast approaching.

As the car turned the corner she had the satisfaction of seeing a blue coated officer of the law in earnest conversation with the ruffian in the checkered ulster.

* * * * * * *

When the rebellious brown hair had been smoothly coiled into its most becoming coiffure and Miss Robbins had donned a dainty violet gown she began to feel more charitably inclined toward the world in general.

"Perhaps," she remarked to the reflected face in the glass, "I was a bit hasty with that dreadful man." Her meditations were interrupted by voices down in the front hall.

A moment later Jack burst excitedly into the room.

"Hello, there, Betsie!" he cried. "Remember hearing me tell about my old college chum, Hal Smith, great athlete, famous football player and fine fellow? Well, I met him in the restaurant at noon today, and whom do you suppose he is? None other than your great Dr. Henry Huntington Smith. Hasn't had time to hunt me up since he came to the city, for he is a very busy man. So I just made him promise to come up to dinner tonight, and when you come down," finished Jack, with a laugh, "you can talk over your mission work with him."

"Yes," agreed his sister in a small voice, "my mission work."

She stood for a moment at the head of the stairs, listening to their voices, when suddenly Bettie's eyes opened very wide.

Where had she heard that deep toned voice before? It was like, oh, horribly like— She descended two or three steps and looked over the balustrade.

The Rev. Dr. Smith was standing before the fireplace, his tall, broad shouldered figure clad irreproachably in the black of his calling.

Poor Bettie collapsed, a violet bundle, on the third top step of the stairs. The voice still came floating up to her.

"Yes, I have had some odd experiences, Jack, but it is all in knowing the nature of the people you have to deal with. A very unpleasant incident occurred, however, this afternoon. I was going over to hold service at our mission when I saw one of those poor girls at the door. She was evidently hesitating, undecided whether to enter or to go on in her own way. Sometimes a smiling word of encouragement or companionship is all that is needed to help make the decision, so I invited her to go in with me.

"In a moment she was on the defensive. Still I tried to persuade, when she turned on me a veritable virago—threatened," said Dr. Smith, "to hand me over to the police. She might," he continued reflectively, "have had a pretty face had it not been so completely hardened into recklessness."

Miss Bettie arose suddenly and came rustling softly down the stairs. She stood for a moment in the doorway awaiting her brother's introduction with downcast eyes.

"I am so pleased to meet you, Dr. Smith," said a meek voice, but the young minister stood staring and seemed to have forgotten to speak.

"Bettie," said Jack impulsively, "Dr. Smith has been telling me about that mission you are interested in, and you had better not go there any more. My sister," he explained to his friend, "is very timid."

"I do not think that I shall go again, Jack, dear," said his sister, "for I was so annoyed this afternoon when leaving the mission to come home. One of the rough men of that locality was very rude. In fact, I don't doubt that he was after my purse, for he actually caught me by the arm, and he had such a hard, wicked face."

Bettie shuddered and then smiled at the minister.

"That settles it," said Jack sternly. "You do not go again."

Bettie led the way to the dining room and paused a moment as her brother's friend held the curtain aside for her to pass.

"Do you think," she asked, looking up at him with dancing eyes, "that there would be any real danger?"

"I think," said Dr. Smith, with an answering smile, "that your brother need have no anxiety upon your behalf, for I am quite sure that you are able to take care of yourself."

* * * * * * * *

Mrs. Holmwood had just finished reading an account of the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Dorothy Robbins to the Rev. Henry Huntington Smith.

"She is a bright girl," she said to her husband, "and a pretty one, but I fear she will be no help to that great man in his mission work. Truly he might have made a wiser choice."

But Dr. Smith holds a very different opinion.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Secretary of Interior Ballinger.

Secretary of the Interior Richard Achilles Ballinger has been kept busy of late denying charges and undergoing investigation. In addition to the probing of his official acts as secretary of the interior by a joint committee of congress, he is called upon to face an inquiry on charges of favoritism and extravagance while he was commissioner of the general land office in Roosevelt's administration.

Secretary Ballinger is a native of Iowa and fifty-one years old. He obtained his early education in Kansas, later being graduated from Williams college. Since then he has been engaged in the practice of law and has won fame and wealth. He is also the author of several lawbooks. In his youth he resided on the plains and for more than three years rode the range as a cowboy.

In 1904 he was elected mayor of Seattle and, without being a reformer, put into effect many reforms that have caused his administration to be regarded as a turning point for the better in the city's career.

Nelson of Minnesota.

Senator Knute Nelson of Minnesota, who will be much in the public eye as chairman of the joint congressional committee to investigate the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy, is serving his third term as a member of the upper house. He is classed as an insurgent. He served three terms in the national house of representatives and was twice elected governor of his state, quite a career for one who came to this country from Norway with his widowed mother when he was less than five years old and earned his first money selling newspapers in Chicago.

Senator Nelson has an intense personality. His mouth closes evenly. His hair and beard are cropped to coordinate with the square turned lines of his face. He has never been defeated in a political contest and has never been known to turn his back on a friend. Just after he ceased to be governor of Minnesota a friend asked him the secret of his phenomenal success. His reply was, "I just make up my mind what I want and then turn out and get it."

Recently he received a draft of a bill from a man not a citizen of his own state. He didn't like the bill anyway, so he wrote the man:

"It will take as long to get your bill through congress as it will for a celluloid dog to catch an asbestus rabbit in hades."

TREATMENT OF FALSE HAIR.

How to Clean It Properly and Make It Last and Look Better.

False hair will last longer and look better if properly cared for, and as the best quality is not inexpensive and should be selected it behooves a woman, now that quantities of it are worn, to know how to make it last.

To begin with, then, a cheap quality is the most expensive, for after little wear it becomes either scrubby looking or so harsh that it cannot be used. Cheap pieces lose color and either streak or fade quickly.

One of the most important and difficult details of caring for chignons is to keep them free from dust. Like hair growing on the head, they hold impurities and unless cleansed will grow dull looking and old. In their care a soft brush is an essential, and every night when the pieces are removed they should be stroked lightly, but thoroughly, with bristles in such a way that the dust is taken out. This should not be omitted even for one night, for once the switch or puffs become dust laden they are difficult to clean.

No false hair, when not being worn, should be exposed to the light, for sun and air will absorb its dressing unnecessarily. After being worn it must never be put away until it has been well smoothed.

To wash a switch or puffs is practically impossible, but as cleansing is necessary at intervals cornmeal should be applied. The meal must be rubbed gently, but thoroughly, through the strands, and then, fastening the top of the piece securely, a long bristle brush must be applied vigorously to remove the grains. Before this, however, the long hair must be rubbed between the hands, so the meal will absorb the dust.

Once in a long while, perhaps every two months, a little oil rubbed on the false piece will keep it in condition and aid in preserving the dressing. For this glycerin is excellent, and the manner of applying should be carefully followed. Too much of the grease will almost ruin it, while too little will not be effective. When using the glycerin the tip of the piece must be securely fastened where the long hair will hang free. Then a few drops, scented, may be rubbed between the palms of the hands to distribute it evenly and then put directly upon the hair, the only difficulty being that unless care is exercised the grease will adhere to only one part of the switch. This is most apt to be avoided by pressing the palms lightly when first they are put on, making the stroke heavier as the grease is absorbed. Under no circumstances must there be an appearance of grease.

How to Cook Bananas.

Few persons know the convenience and delicate taste of cooked bananas. Few not to bananas born realize their nutritive value. Yellow bananas can be employed in many excellent ways. They are fine plainly boiled in their skins and served with cream or sweet butter for breakfast. They may be boiled with salt pork or baked around a leg of fresh pork (peeled in last instance) or fried and served with broiled lamb kidneys and bacon. Used in this way, both the kidneys and the bananas take on an added flavor by being together. Select fruit which, while ripe, is yet perfectly firm. Ten minutes are required for boiling and five or a little more for frying. The fruit will let you know when it is done, for it falls into a pulp as easy to digest as baby food. Baked bananas may take the place of potatoes on a luncheon table, as they are excellent with all meats. Bake them in their skins in a hot oven and punch them occasionally with the fingers to see how they are progressing.

How to Make Cleaning Balls.

Cleaning balls are easily made and cost less than if bought of a chemist. To make them take half a pound of dry fuller's earth and moisten it with a little lemon juice. Then add half an ounce of finely pulverized pearlash and make all into a thick paste. Form into little balls, and dry them in the sun or at some distance from a fire. In a few hours the balls will be ready for use. When required the stained cloth should be moistened with warm water and rubbed with a ball. Let the garment dry, then brush off the powder, and wash it out if necessary.

How to Wash Delicate Materials.

To wash silks and pongees and dimities so that they will look like new wash them in bran water. For one waist take a pint of bran, put in a white muslin bag and pour enough hot water into the basin containing the bran to wash the waist. When the water is cool enough to bear the hands in squeeze the bag several times in the water. Add a teaspoonful of borax and wash the waist in the prepared water, rinse and when dry iron on the wrong side. No starch is needed, for the bran will stiffen the waist sufficiently.

How to Remove an Ink Stain.

A little pure alcohol of any kind is splendid for removing stains caused by a typewriter ribbon. Rub it well into the fingers as soon as possible after they are stained. Afterward wash carefully in warm water and plenty of really good soap. If you have no pure alcohol try methylated spirit.

How to Keep Shirt Waists Trim.

If you have difficulty in holding your shirt waists down make a belt of strong elastic two inches smaller than your waist. Then sew a hook on one end and an eye on the other and fasten around the waist over the shirt waist and under the skirt band. It works like a charm.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson I.—Second Quarter, For April 3, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES

Text of the Lesson, Matt. ix, 18-34 Memory Verses, 28, 29—Golden Text, Mark ix, 23—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson gives an account of four different acts of healing upon five different people—the ruler's daughter, twelve years of age; the woman twelve years sick, the two blind men and the demon possessed dumb man. Matthew, Mark and Luke record the first two, but Matthew alone tells of the others. All are equally easy to Him to whom nothing is difficult when there is confidence in Him. The principle of verse 29 holds all through, "According to your faith be it unto you." But we must always remember that these were samples of the kingdom which was then at hand, but because of His rejection postponed till He shall come again. As I understand it, we cannot expect kingdom manifestations in this age of His rejection except as He may in great grace see fit to grant them. But as the age draws to a close, which it is rapidly doing, we may look for greater signs as the kingdom of heaven again draweth nigh. May we, like Stephen, be full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, full of faith and power.

The other accounts of the first two healings are found in Mark v and Luke viii. There we are told that the man's name was Jairus; that he was a ruler of the synagogue; that he fell down at Jesus' feet and besought Him greatly, for his little daughter was lying at the point of death, and she was his only daughter. Jesus arose and followed Jairus, and so did His disciples, and much people also followed Him and thronged Him. Consider the anxiety of the father's heart and his expectation, for, although he had not heard the words "I will come and heal her" (viii, 7), was not the Lord Jesus Christ with him, and was not that assurance enough for Jairus?

But in the throng that pressed upon Him there was one desolate heart—a woman who had been ailing for twelve years and, having spent all that she had upon physicians, was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse. She, having heard of Jesus, had such confidence in Him that she said within herself, "If I may touch but His clothes I shall be whole." She accordingly pressed through the crowd behind Him, touched the border of His garment and was instantly healed of her illness of many years.

Most gratefully and gladly would she have slipped away without troubling Him further, but He had more for her than she had dared to expect. He had a personal word for her heart full of peace and assurance. Before she could get away Jesus, knowing all things, asked who touched Him, for he knew that virtue had gone out of Him. The disciples were surprised at His question, seeing so many touching Him, but the woman came with fear and trembling, fell down before Him and before all the people declared why she had touched Him and how she had been immediately healed. Then came to her the added, unexpected blessing in His precious words to her heart: "Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. Go in peace and be whole of thy plague." Instead of the unrest she might have had because she had, as it were, stolen a blessing she had His own word of "peace." Then she might have had some symptoms of a recurrence of her trouble, and the devil would be sure to be on hand with some unrestful suggestions, but now she had not only an experience, but His infallible word that she was healed, and had He not called her "daughter," and wasn't that worth while? Let all secret believers confess Jesus Christ publicly and see what additional blessing will surely come to them.

But all this delay has seemingly made Him too late to help the little girl, for before He reaches the house messengers come, saying that she is dead. As soon as Jesus heard it He said to Jairus, "Fear not, believe only, and she shall be made whole" (Luke viii, 50). And quickly it is even so, and she is alive and well and eating like any well child. Only the father and the mother and Peter, James and John were present at the raising to life—just seven, including Jesus and the little girl, the unbelieving scorners all without. Let us be "most surely believers, knowing the certainty" of all His words (Luke i, 1-4). He is never too late, and nothing is too hard for Him who created all things.

Two blind men follow Him into the next house, into which He enters, begging Him to have mercy on them. His one question was, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Their affirmative reply brings His "According to your faith be it unto you," then He touches, and they see like other men do, and like many, they go forth to spread a good report fame.

The next case is a dumb demon possessed man, and he is a very hopeless case. No wonder that the multitudes said, "It was never so seen in Israel" for one like this had never been seen before. Whether we touch Him or He touches us or speaks the word, His power is manifest. May we all touch Him in the consciousness of our helplessness and need, as the long suffering woman did, and not indifferently, like the crowd.

VALUE OF CONCRETE

Roads Constructed of This Material Very Serviceable.

DURABLE FOR HEAVY TRAFFIC

They Can Be Maintained at a Considerably Low Cost—Freedom From Dust and Mud a Good Feature—Experiment In Michigan.

In a paper read before the annual good roads convention, held recently at Cleveland, O., Edward N. Hines, chairman of the board of Wayne county road commissioners, expressed his views regarding concrete roads in the following manner:

Concrete roads would meet the ideal conditions of road building because of comparatively low first cost, durability, low maintenance cost, ease of traction and freedom from dust and mud.

The value of concrete roads was shown in a recent experiment near Detroit, Mich., where a road was made seventeen feet eight inches wide of concrete, with shoulders on each side of the natural soil, making the width twenty-six feet over all at its narrowest point.

The annexed specification was drafted, it being the intention of the board

A WELL BUILT CONCRETE ROAD.

to do the necessary grading, tiling, ditching, putting in of manholes, building shoulders and, in fact, doing all the work but the actual concreting.

Ninety-eight cents a barrel was paid for cement and 75 cents a yard for sand, and the prices of limestone and crushed cobble are shown in the specification. The average haul was about two miles. Two thicknesses of three ply tar paper were used in the three twenty-five foot sections, the fourth section being made half an inch wide and filled with a composition of four parts soft pitch to one part Trinidad asphalt, to which was added 3 per cent of still wax, the whole heated and poured into the joint in a boiling state. A strip of southern pine was also used as an experimental joint.

The following specifications are those under which such a road can be constructed:

All cement used should be portland cement of American manufacture. No more than 8 per cent of the cement should fail to pass through a No. 100 sieve nor more than 25 per cent should fail to pass through a No. 200 sieve, and it should stand a test of 150 pounds per square inch tensile strain when made into briquets and exposed in air until final set and the balance of twenty-four hours immersed in water. One day in air and six days in water should show a tensile strength of at least 450 pounds. One day in air and twenty-seven days in water should show a tensile strength of at least 550 pounds, and when mixed in proportions by weight of one of cement to three of sand and exposed in air one day and in water six days it should stand a tensile strain of at least 150 pounds and in twenty-eight days a strain of at least 300 pounds per square inch.

Sand used in making concrete should be clean, dry, crushed quartz, trap rock, granite or well graded bank, lake or river sand, passing a No. 20 sieve of No. 28 wire, and be so graded as to contain fine and coarse particles of the same grade of material, the coarse particles to predominate.

Stone for concrete can be purchased at the following prices per ton, which prices represent the actual cost of the stone laid down: Two inch, $1.80 per ton; chips, $1.90 per ton; screenings, $2 per ton.

In case of hard stone, weights should be computed by measurement on the basis of 2,600 pounds per cubic yard for two inch stone, 2,700 pounds per cubic yard for chips and 2,800 pounds per cubic yard for screenings.

Concrete for the first course should consist of one part of cement, two parts of sand and five parts of broken limestone and for the second course one part of cement, two parts of sand and three parts of hard stone, evenly mixed.

In placing the concrete in position in the construction of the pavement the men should place the concrete where directed and so as to keep the different layers of a uniform thickness. Each layer should be well tamped with an approved tamper and as directed by the engineer.

The second course must be laid within twenty minutes after the first course is completed and placed and tamped same as the first course. And at night or at any other time when the work is discontinued all the work of both layers should be completed up to a common expansion joint. In other words, no section of pavement should be allowed to be left unfinished for a longer period of time than twenty minutes it work thereon has been started.

After the second course of concrete is laid and until it has thoroughly set it should be protected from the sun by a canvas or other suitable covering.

When the concrete is sufficiently hard to warrant, this covering should be removed and the concrete covered with a layer of sand or gravel about one inch in depth and sprinkled and kept damp to prevent the surface of the concrete from drying out too rapidly, which covering should be left on the concrete for a period of seven days.

Expansion joints should be placed in said pavement every twenty-five feet by actual measurement, such joints to be made by placing in position a one-half inch thick strip of wood (southern pine) of the same width as the thickness of the road metal and cut so as to conform to the finished surface of the pavement. This board should be removed after the concrete has become set, but not until twenty-four hours have elapsed after the placing of the concrete on both sides of the board. And when the board is removed the space left by it should be filled with a filler of the following composition: Four parts soft pitch and one part asphalt (refined Trinidad), to which mixture must be added 3 per cent of still wax, the whole to be heated and poured into the joints in a boiling state.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, thy climate, where hay fever and ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

BYRON AND THE BALLOON.

How the Poet In 1822 Predicted the Airship of Today.

Those who have read the fiction of Edgar Allan Poe will recall his wonderful story of the balloon with a propelling rudder, which, crossing the Atlantic from Europe in three days, landed on the coast of South Carolina. This story was published in 1838, preceding the flight of Bleriot from Calais to Dover more than seventy years. And now it is remarked that as early as 1822, sixteen years before Poe, Byron foretold the motor.

It was in 1822 that Byron lived at Pisa, Italy, where he had rented for a year the Laufranchie palace, and it was there that he entertained a Captain Medwin, who on his return to London published his "Conversations With Lord Byron." One of these conversations is to this effect:

"Who can but regret," said Byron, "that he has been born two or three hundred years too soon. Here is a letter from a savant of Bologna who claims to have discovered the secret of guiding balloons by means of a rudder and who assures me that he is ready to disclose this secret to the government. I imagine that we are soon to make journeys through the air instead of sea voyages, at last to find a way to go to the moon despite the lack of atmosphere that Fontanelle has discovered there. There is not as much madness in this idea as one may suppose. The sciences are now in their infancy."

Medwin left Pisa in March, 1822 It was near the close of that year that Byron published the latter parts of his "Don Juan," in which the poet shows that he had been inspired by the discovery of the Bologna savant. See the second stanza of the tenth canto:

Man fell with apples and with apples rose,
If this be true, for we must deem the mode
In which Sir Isaac Newton could disclose
Through the then unpaved stars the turnpike road,
A thing to counterbalance human woes,
For ever since immortal man hath glowed
With all kinds of mechanics, and full soon
Steam engines will conduct him to the moon.

Byron's "Don Juan" was translated into French by Amedee Pichot in 1825; but, daring as was that translator, he did not venture to put "Don Juan" into rhyme, and today the foregoing stanza done in French prose is supposed to be a prediction of aviation by motor, though Byron's suggestion goes no further than steam.—London Globe.

The Size of Raindrops.

Raindrops do not always have the same size or weight, and this is primarily due to the fact that they are not formed like the drops of water that fall from a wet cloth or the spout of a pitcher or the drops that rush out of the small holes in a garden sprinkler. In all these latter cases a solid stream of water is broken up into drops. But the raindrop is formed in the cloud by the accumulation of minute atoms of water drawn together into one drop and sometimes by the melting of a large snowflake or a solid little icy hailstone. When a drop is thus formed in the clouds it begins to fall, no matter whether it be large or small, and observers in balloons state that all sizes of drops are to be found within the clouds themselves, from the finest fog and drizzling mist up to the heavy rain. It is commonly said that the bigger drops fall faster than the smaller ones and overtake them and grow bigger. This sounds reasonable, but no one has really proved it.—St. Nicholas.

Nicaragua.

Nicaragua, wedged in between Honduras and Costa Rica, is triangular in shape, its base of some 280 miles resting on the Caribbean sea. Its area is about 58,000 square miles and its population somewhat less than a million, mostly Indians, mestizos negroes and mulattoes. The whites of pure blood constitute but a small part of the people. The main products of the country are rice, cocoa, coffee, Indian corn and hides. Like most of the South American countries, Nicaragua is noted for its military "pronunciamentos," popular revolts, revolutions, etc., by which the land is almost constantly troubled to the verge of ruin.—New York American.

Jeweled Monsters.

In the upper cretaceous deposits at White cliffs, New South Wales, two skeletons of plesiosaurian reptiles have been found, both of which were completely opalized, like the tree trunks found in Arizona and other western localities. In the first example of these jeweled monsters that were unearthed the color was rich and striking. The second was less brilliant of hue, and precious opal occurred only here and there on the specimen, especially in the transverse process of the neck. The plesiosaurs are an extinct race of very long necked creatures which swam in ancient seas.—Harper's Weekly.

What Eskimos Think of White Men.

The Eskimos' opinion of white men is sometimes as uncomplimentary as the white men's opinion of them. Vilhjalmr Stefansson, who was the ethnologist in company with the recent Anglo-American polar expedition, writes in Harper's Magazine of his experiences in the arctic while living with Eskimo families, and he reports with Eskimo as saying that white men are as bad to travel with as babies. Indeed, they go further and say that white men are worse than babies, because though babies cry they don't argue, and white men are always "giving directions about things they don't understand."

MODEL VILLAGE FOR OHIO.

Millionaire Coal Operator Plans to Make Hudson the "Town Beautiful."

James W. Ellsworth, the New York multimillionaire coal operator, is endeavoring to make his native town, Hudson, in the northern part of Ohio, the ideal town of the United States—in other words, the "town beautiful."

Mr. Ellsworth has 300 acres of fine land on the fringe of the town and on these acres a home that might be termed a castle. But perhaps the care he has had taken of his own estate does not reach the height of concern he has displayed for the village itself, for he is to expend thousands of dollars on improvements there.

The first move to have an "ideal town" that Mr. Ellsworth made was at a village he established in Pennsylvania and which was christened Ellsworth. Things did not go smoothly there, however, and his hope of establishing a "home town" was frustrated by circumstances. It was then he turned his attention to the little spot in which he was born. His first move there was to put up to the authorities a proposition to have all saloons eliminated and to have the telephone wires placed underground. The scheme to have the saloons closed passed, and Mr. Ellsworth promised that he would spend his own money on improvements—to perfect the water supply, the transportation system, etc.

Mr. Ellsworth has already given Hudson $100,000 for improvements. He has spent $20,000 for a men's and women's clubhouse, where every comfort practically that may be obtained in a club in a large city may be had. These amounts may seem small according to the donations recorded today, but they look large when it is known that Hudson has little more than 1,000 inhabitants.

LEARNING A BUSINESS.

How Both Clerk and Merchant Can Learn Every Day to Advance Trade.

The clerk who is entering a store has an opportunity to learn the business before he assumes the responsibilities. It is a chance that many a merchant may well envy him. Many merchants had no opportunity to learn save in the hard and crippling classes of experience.

And yet the case is not hopeless for the merchant himself. He has a chance to learn a great deal every day. In spite of the fact that his time is pretty well absorbed in the details of his work day by day, he can gather knowledge each twenty-four hours, acquire information and become a better merchant all the time.

A good many do not do it, however. They look upon business much as the high school graduate does. The season of study is over, and now the harvest is to be reaped. It may be a good harvest or it may be a pretty poor one, but the time for learning is past.

The graduate may learn that the time of learning never passes away, and so may the merchant. That time is always present. There are merchants today who plug along, doing pretty well, who are woefully ignorant of some of the rudiments of store economy. It is not too late for them to acquire these, and shame should never hold them back. It is not a matter of shame to be ignorant, but it is to remain ignorant, and the critical moment will arrive some time when it will be uncovered.—Oregon Tradesman.

The "Alley Beautiful."

After carrying out all the usual "beautiful" movements, even to the back yards, some of the citizens of Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, have evidently made the last necessary step in inaugurating an "alley beautiful" crusade. The first alley chosen for improvement was named Cottonwood lane, and it was quickly transformed into a beautiful lane and as clean and orderly as any street. With such progressive citizens as those of Oak Park even a desert would soon become a desirable place for intelligent home seekers.

Hit the Trail.

In the hustle
And the bustle
Of this age of push and grit
He whose yearning
Is for earning
The proud title known as "It"
Should get wise that
'Tis a prize that
Must be sought by night and day,
For its habit,
Like the rabbit,
Is to cut and scud away.

If you want it
You must hunt it,
Hit the trail and keep the pace.
If you win it
Not a minute
Must be wasted from the race.
Keep it busy;
Make it dizzy
With the swiftness of the hike.
It is very Necessary
That your footprints burn the pike.

In the movement
Of improvement,
With the many as the one,
By pursuing
And by doing
To success the race is run.
Man or nation
To progression
Finds in work the royal road,
And the lever
Of endeavor
Is the one that moves the load.

Work the source is
Of the forces
That upbuild and elevate,
The improving
Springs now moving
In the city and the state.
Civic duty,
Civic beauty,
Write in history their page,
And the story
Is the glory
Of the nation and the age.

AN UNFINISHED STORY

A Queer Dream Incited by Thoughts of Man's Inhumanity.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1906, by McClure, Phillips & Co.]

We no longer groan and heap ashes upon our heads when the flames of Tophet are mentioned, for even the preachers have begun to tell us that God is radium or ether or some scientific compound and that the worst we wicked ones may expect is a chemical reaction. This is a pleasing hypothesis, but there lingers yet some of the old, goodly terror of orthodoxy.

There are but two subjects upon which one may discourse with a free imagination and without the possibility of being controverted. You may talk of your dreams, and you may tell what you heard a parrot say. Both Morpheus and the bird are incompetent witnesses, and your listener dare not attack your recital. The baseless fabric of a vision, then, shall furnish my theme, chosen with apologies and regrets instead of the more limited field of pretty Polly's small talk.

"A GENTLEMAN'S DOWNSTAIRS TO SEE YOU," SHE SAID.

I had a dream that was so far removed from the higher criticism that it had to do with the ancient, respectable and lamented bar of judgment theory.

Gabriel had played his trump, and those of us who could not follow suit were arraigned for examination. I noticed at one side a gathering of professional bondsmen in solemn black and collars that buttoned behind, but it seemed there was some trouble about their real estate titles, and they did not appear to be getting any of us out.

A fly cop—an angel policeman—flew over to me and took me by the left wing. Near at hand was a group of very prosperous looking spirits arraigned for judgment.

"Do you belong with that bunch?" the policeman asked.

"Who are they?" was my answer.

"Why," said he, "they are"—

But this irrelevant stuff is taking up space that the story should occupy.

Dulcie worked in a department store. She sold Hamburg edging, or stuffed peppers, or automobiles, or other little trinkets such as they keep in department stores. Of what she earned Dulcie received $6 per week. The remainder was credited to her and debited to somebody else's account in the ledger kept by G.

Oh, primal energy, you say, reverend doctor. Well, then, in the ledger of primal energy.

During her first year in the store Dulcie was paid $5 per week. It would be instructive to know how she lived on that amount. Don't care? Very well. Probably you are interested in larger amounts. Six dollars is a larger amount. I will tell you how she lived on $6 per week.

One afternoon at 6, when Dulcie was sticking her hatpin within an eighth of an inch of her medulla oblongata, she said to her chum, Sadie—the girl that waits on you with her left side:

"Say, Sadie, I made a date for dinner this evening with Piggy."

"You never did!" exclaimed Sadie admiringly. "Well, ain't you the lucky one? Piggy's an awful swell, and he always takes a girl to swell places. He took Blanche up to the Hoffman House one evening, where they have swell music and you see a lot of swells. You'll have a swell time, Dulce."

Dulcie hurried homeward. Her eyes were shining, and her cheeks showed the delicate pink of life's—real life's—approaching dawn. It was Friday, and she had 50 cents left of her last week's wages.

The streets were filled with the rush hour floods of people. The electric lights of Broadway were glowing, calling moths from miles, from leagues from hundreds of leagues out of darkness around to come in and attend the singeing school. Men in accurate clothes, with faces like those carved on cherry stones by the old salts in sailors' homes, turned and stared at Dulcie as she sped, unheeding, past them. Manhattan, the night blooming cereus, was beginning to unfold its dead white, heavy odored petals.

Dulcie stopped in a store where goods were cheap and bought an imitation lace collar with her 50 cents. That money was to have been spent otherwise—15 cents for supper, 10 cents for breakfast, 10 cents for lunch. Another dime was to be added to her small store of savings, and 5 cents was to be squandered for licorice drops—the kind that made your cheek look like the toothache and last as long. The licorice was an extravagance—almost a carouse—but what is life without pleasures?

Dulcie lived in a furnished room. There is this difference between a furnished room and a boarding house—in a furnished room other people do not know it when you go hungry.

Dulcie went up to her room—the third floor back in a west side brownstone front. She lit the gas. Scientists tell us that the diamond is the hardest substance known. Their mistake. Landladies know of a compound beside which the diamond is as putty. They pack it in the tips of gas burners, and one may stand on a chair and dig at it in vain until one's fingers are pink and bruised. A hairpin will not remove it; therefore let us call it immovable.

So Dulcie lit the gas. In its one-fourth candle power glow we will observe the room.

Couch bed, dresser, table, washstand, chair—of this much the landlady was guilty. The rest was Dulcie's.

On the dresser were her treasures—a gilt china vase presented to her by Sadie, a calendar issued by a pickle works, a book on the divination of dreams, some rice powder in a glass dish and a cluster of artificial cherries tied with a pink ribbon.

Against the wrinkly mirror stood pictures of General Kitchener, William Muldoon, the Duchess of Marlborough and Benvenuto Cellini. Against one wall was a plaster of paris plaque of an O'Callahan in a Roman helmet. Near it was a violent oleograph of a lemon colored child assaulting an inflammatory butterfly. This was Dulcie's final judgment in art, but it had never been upset. Her rest had never been disturbed by whispers of stolen copes; no critic had elevated his eyebrows at her infantile entomologist.

Piggy was to call for her at 7. While she swiftly makes ready let us discreetly face the other way and gossip.

For the room Dulcie paid $2 per week. On week days her breakfast costs 10 cents. She made coffee and cooked an egg over the gaslight while she was dressing. On Sunday mornings she feasted royally on veal chops and pineapple fritters at "Billy's" restaurant at a cost of 25 cents and tipped the waitress 10 cents. New York presents so many temptations for one to run into extravagance.

She had her lunches in the department store restaurant at a cost of 60 cents for the week. Dinners were $1.05. The evening papers—show me a New Yorker going without his daily paper!—came to 6 cents, and two Sunday papers, one for the personal column and the other to read, were 10 cents. The total amounts to $4.76. Now, one has to buy clothes, and—

I give it up. I hear of wonderful bargains in fabrics and of miracles performed with needle and thread, but I am in doubt. I hold my pen poised in vain when I would add to Dulcie's life some of those joys that belong to woman by virtue of all the unwritten, sacred, natural, inactive ordinances of the equity of heaven. Twice she had been to Coney Island and had ridden the hobbyhorses. 'Tis a weary thing to count your pleasures by summers instead of by hours.

Piggy needs but a word. When the girls named him an undeserving stigma was cast upon the noble family of swine.

The words of three letters lesson in the old blue spelling book begins with Piggy's biography. He was fat; he had the soul of a rat, the habits of a bat and the magnanimity of a cat. He wore expensive clothes and was a connoisseur in starvation. He could look at a shopgirl and tell you to an hour how long it had been since she had eaten anything more nourishing than marshmallows and tea.

He hung about the shopping districts and prowled around in department stores with his invitations to dinner.

Men who escort dogs upon the streets at the end of a string look down upon him.

He is a type. I can dwell upon him no longer. My pen is not the kind intended for him. I am no carpenter.

At ten minutes to 7 Dulcie was ready. She looked at herself in the wrinkly mirror. The reflection was satisfactory. The dark blue dress, fitting without a wrinkle, the hat with its jaunty black feather, the but slightly soiled gloves—all representing self denial, even of food itself—were vastly becoming.

Dulcie forgot everything else for a moment except that she was beautiful and that life was about to lift a corner of its mysterious veil for her to observe its wonders. No gentleman had ever asked her out before. Now she was going for a brief moment into the glitter and exalted show.

The girls said that Piggy was a "spender." There would be a grand dinner and music and splendidly dressed ladies to look at and things to eat that strangely twisted the girls' jaws when they tried to tell about them. No doubt she would be asked out again.

There was a blue pongee suit in a window that she knew—by saving 20 cents a week instead of 10 in—let's see— Oh, it would run into years! But there was a secondhand store in Seventh avenue where—

Somebody knocked at the door. Dulcie opened it. The landlady stood there with a spurious smile, sniffing for cooking by stolen gas.

"A gentleman's downstairs to see you," she said. "Name is Mr. Wiggins."

By such epithet was Piggy known to unfortunate ones who had to take him seriously.

Dulcie turned to the dresser to get her handkerchief, and then she stopped still and bit her underlip hard. While looking in her mirror she had seen fairyland and herself a princess just awakening from a long slumber. She had forgotten one that was watching her with sad, beautiful, stern eyes—the only one there was to approve or condemn what she did.

Straight and slender and tall, with a look of sorrowful reproach on his handsome, melancholy face, General Kitchener fixed his wonderful eyes on her out of his gilt photograph frame on the dresser.

Dulcie turned like an automatic doll to the landlady.

"Tell him I can't go," she said dully. "Tell him I'm sick or something. Tell him I'm not going out."

After the door was closed and locked Dulcie fell upon her bed, crushing her black tip, and cried for ten minutes. General Kitchener was her only friend. He was Dulcie's ideal of a gallant knight. He looked as if he might have a secret sorrow, and his wonderful mustache was a dream, and she was a little afraid of that stern yet tender look in his eyes. She used to have little fancies that he would call at the house some time and ask for her with his sword clanking against his high boots.

Once when a boy was rattling a piece of chain against a lamppost she had opened the window and looked out. But there was no use. She knew that General Kitchener was away over in Japan leading his army against the savage Turks and he would never step out of his gilt frame for her. Yet one look from him had vanquished Piggy that night—yes, for that night.

When her cry was over Dulcie got up and took off her best dress and put on her old blue kimono. She wanted no dinner. She sang two verses of "Sammy." Then she became intensely interested in a little red speck on the side of her nose. And after that was attended to she drew up a chair to the rickety table and told her fortune with an old deck of cards.

"The horrid, impudent thing!" she said aloud. "And I never gave him a word or a look to make him think it!"

At 9 o'clock Dulcie took a tin box of crackers and a little pot of raspberry jam out of her trunk and had a feast.

She offered General Kitchener some jam on a cracker, but he looked at her only as the sphinx would have looked at a butterfly—if there are butterflies in the desert.

"Don't eat it if you don't want to," said Dulcie. "And don't put on so many airs and scold so with your eyes. I wonder if you'd be so superior and snippy if you had to live on $6 a week?"

It was not a good sign for Dulcie to be rude to General Kitchener. And then she turned Benvenuto Cellini face downward with a severe gesture. But that was not inexcusable, for she had always thought he was Henry VIII., and she did not approve of him.

At half past 9 Dulcie took a last look at the pictures on the dresser, turned out the light and skipped to bed. It's an awful thing to go to bed with a good night look at General Kitchener, William Muldoon, the Duchess of Marlborough and Benvenuto Cellini.

This story doesn't really get anywhere at all. The rest of it comes later some time when Piggy asks Dulcie again to dine with him, and she is feeling lonelier than usual, and General Kitchener happens to be looking the other way, and then—

As I said before, I dreamed that I was standing near a crowd of prosperous looking angels and a policeman took me by the wing and asked if I belonged with them.

"Who are they?" I asked.

"Why," said he, "they are the men who hired working girls and paid 'em five or six dollars a week to live on. Are you one of the bunch?"

"Not on your immortality," said I. "I'm only the fellow that set fire to an orphan asylum and murdered a blind man for his pennies."

WHAT a record the Legislature is making!

MARYLAND may be thankful that it will never have another Governor Crothers and the gang that is around him.

GOVERNOR CROTHERS sanctioned the waste of an extra $50,000 from the State Treasury when he signed the deficiency bill for legislative expenses.

ANOTHER ATTACK ON THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

The amendment to the Federal Constitution which prohibits any State from refusing the suffrage to any person on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude has been considered as much a part of the organic law as is the section which prohibits the taking of property without due process of law. It has been assumed to be as settled as the issue of negro slavery, as well determined as the result of the Civil War.

We do not think the people of the State have regarded seriously the talk heard in the last few months of an intention to challenge the validity of the amendment as it affects this State, and we doubt if many of them believe now that the effort to do so, determined upon at a Democratic caucus recently, is made in the expectation that it will be successful. The majority of the people, we are sure, will look upon it as a last despairing effort to get rid of the negro; an effort joined in honestly by many white men in Southern Maryland because they believe—mistakenly as we think—that negro suffrage hinders their progress. The movement is urged on by the camp followers and by Democrats who do not think there is the slightest chance of success, for no better reason, we imagine, than that they haven't the moral courage to stand up against any blow aimed at the negro.

Lawyers can usually find basis for an argument on technicalities so small that the layman cannot see them at all. There are times, too, when the courts, in response to some overwhelming public sentiment, read into the law things that open the eyes of those who believe that what is writ is writ. But heretofore judges have been slow to nullify the plain letter of the Constitution or what it has been construed, for more than a third of its life, to mean.

MAD MEN OF MARYLAND.

Senator Chandlers dubbed the perpetrators of the Democratic caucus scheme for an attack upon the Constitution of the United States as the wild scheme of the mad men of Maryland. Practically without exception the intention to violate the faith of the state with its citizenship and at the same time to create insurrection against the highest law of the land under cover of pretended legislation is denounced the country over not only by Republicans, but by Democrats and Democratic newspapers. Looking as it does to the stand of defiance toward the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution upon the ground that they were never formally ratified by this state is a palpable plan for stealing the state and holding it in brigandage during the time necessary for the action of the insurgents to be passed upon by the Supreme Court. In the meanwhile the revolutionary administration and its acts would be the de facto law of the land. So that the scheme proposes an era of political pillage, a period of political rowdyism, a siege of outlawry in political office that would stamp this state with the stigma of being the worst governed and least independent of any state during the term of the federal compact.

Without warrant of a single expression from the people, without the question ever having been submitted in a campaign, without any effort whatever to follow public opinion, the men who govern the legislators have issued their mandate. The subservient tools of as guileful, malicious, heartless, desperate and smooth a set of bosses as ever trod upon the political institutions of any state obeyed the edict of their masters, and hence Maryland is placed in the least creditable light of any state in the history of the Union. Some toleration can be felt for the devices resorted to by those who play politics as a game, but there can be nothing but contempt for those in public office and sworn to uphold the laws of the land, who for the desperate ends of personal and partisan advantage would range the state against the federal compact to revive an issue that was settle at a cost that serious-minded citizens do not care to reflect upon. Here is no broad principle at stake; no dividing issue of national import; it is simply and solely the purpose to set up the rule of political oligarchy in Maryland to make this a one-party state. The country at large regards the propose action of the Democratic bosses with incredulity and amazement. From all sides of comes the query: Is this the grade of political intelligence and character that prevails in Maryland.

Democrats the country over are crying desist. They are uttering the warning in no uncertain tones that one state cannot set at naught the compact of the sisterhood. They are declaring that the de facto law of the land for forty years can never, and will never, be set aside by the Supreme Court. They are laying in advance blame for the defeat of their ambitions for control of the next House of Representatives upon the mad men of Maryland, who are also being warned that the execution of their proposed scheme will result in the placing of the United States marshals at the windows in Maryland elections and will cut down the representation of this state in Congress. All this comes from Democratic sources. And more yet, from the South comes the indignant protest against the proposed course as sure to bring about the overthrow of the prevailing disfranchisement measures, in such states. No matter how salutary they may be regarded in the Southern States their existence is precarious at best and will be terminated through the action of the Maryland Democrats. The men responsible for the Democratic caucus have already assured themselves a characterization in history that will be infinitely just, but everlastingly discreditable.

Successful Service Ended.

Dr. A. J. Fristoe, minister of the Baptist faith, who has been holding special services at Deer Park under the auspices of Rev. C. W. Hudson, the Baptist preacher in charge of the work in Garrett county, terminated his labors on last Sunday, preaching twice at Deer Park that day. He also held services every night, the church being filled to repletion, even on Saturday night, an unusual night for religions services.

The Sunday services were of especial interest and at the conclusion of the afternoon service, the full congregation witnessed the ordination of baptism by immersion. The congregation was augmented by a large throng of observers who witnessed the baptism from points of vantage.

Previous to the baptism of the candidates by the regular pastor, Rev. C. W. Hudson, Rev. Fristoe read the passage of scripture authorizing baptism by immersion.

Sunday night Mr. Fristoe repeated by request one of the week day sermons, the topic being "The Rending of the Veil."

THE DEATH RECORD.

MISS NELLIE THORNTON OFFUTT.

The news of the death of Miss Nellie Thornton Offutt, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel E. Offutt, which occurred at the University Hospital, Baltimore, Tuesday evening at nine o'clock, came as a great shock to the young lady's relatives and numerous friends in Oakland and elsewhere. Miss Offutt was a great sufferer for several years prior to her death and had undergone a number of serious surgical operations at the University Hospital, which were partially successful but had failed to give her permanent relief. A week or two ago she returned to the hospital to undergo a final operation and her friends were buoyed up with the hope that she would soon return entirely restored to health.

Miss Offutt was born in Oakland thirty years ago and was well known and greatly loved by everybody. She was always bright and cheerful and spread happiness and contentment around her by her sunny disposition. She was a member of the Presbyterian church for a number of years.

Her funeral will occur this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock from the home and will be conducted by Rev. J. A. McClelland, of Grafton, a former pastor of the Oakland church. The active pall bearers will be Messrs. Samuel Brady, Harland L. Jones, William Weber and W. A. Sturgiss and Drs. J. E. Legge and W. W. Grant; the honorary pall bearers will be Messrs. R. E. Sliger, King Delawder and James S. Lakin.

As a mark of respect to the deceased lady all the business houses of the town will be closed during the funeral services.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family in this their sad bereavement, and while we know that there is a vacancy that cannot be filled, not only in the home circle, but in the community as well, we can only bow in submission to Divine Will.

MRS. MARY V. SPIKER.

Mrs. Mary V. Spiker died at Altamont Tuesday, March 22nd, from pneumonia, after an illness of about twelve days. The deceased was born in Virginia in 1849; her parents moved to New Creek when she was about eleven years old. When quite a young woman she came and made her home with Jonathan Wilson and remained with him until 1868 when she was married to Benjamin Spiker who was a gunsmith at Altamont, and have been residents there since the above year. She leaves three children: Mrs. Ada Woods, James and Nathan Spiker. The relatives have the sincere sympathy of the entire community, especially her grandson Jesse W. Woods, who did all in his power for her comfort to the last in her dying hours. Mrs. Spiker will be missed by all surrounding neighbors and friends. She was a good neighbor and Christian woman, having joined the Methodist church several years ago. She was always jovial and good to children, a great many of them spending many leisure hours in play days at a time at her house. Her husband preceded her to the grave eleven years and six days. She is the third old resident that has been called from us in the past year; the other two being Mrs. Jas. P. Wright and Aunt Bridget Curran. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Johnson, of Mt. Lake Park, who rendered a very feeling sermon, after which the body was conveyed and interred in the Wilson cemetery.

A NEIGHBOR.

D. S. BUZZERD.

Mr. Denton Sommers Buzzerd, aged 45 years, a well known conductor on the Western Maryland railroad, running between this city and Elkins, W. Va., died at his home, No. 8 North Lee street, last night at 8:25 o'clock, after an illness of about eight weeks, leaving a wife and three children surviving him, and also two brothers, Mr. S. S. Buzzard, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and Mr. Charles Buzzard, of New York, who is here now. Mr. Buzzerd was a member of the United Workmen and Woodmen of America and also of the order of Railway Conductors and of Cumberland Aerie No. 245, and a man of fine standing in his orders and in this community. Mr. Buzzard came here with his family to reside from Elkins seven years ago.—Cumberland News.

JACOB BEEMAN.

Mr. Jacob Beeman, aged 84 years, died suddenly at his home near Avilton, last Wednesday at about 12 o'clock. He was working in the field and about 11 o'clock came to the house and went to his room to have a smoke before eating dinner and when his daughter went to call him she found him dead. He was a healthy man during his long life and had made no complaint of feeling ill before death. He died in the house in which he was born and had lived all his life. He is survived by four sons, George, James H., Jacob C. and Andrew, and four daughters, Mrs. Wm. H. Green, Mrs. Ulyses Jackson, Mrs. Cambridge Crowe and Mrs. Robert Beeman. The funeral occurred Friday with interment in the John Robinson cemetery.

GEORGE MINNICK.

Mr. George Minnick, aged 35 years, died at his home in Garrett county, a few miles west of Frostburg, on last Saturday. He is survived by his wife and several small children, and his mother and several brothers and sisters. The funeral took place from St. Michael's Roman Catholic church at Frostburg, interment being made in St. Michael's cemetery.

GARRETT COUNTY FARMERS' INSTITUTES

Three Meetings Arranged For to Take Place Early In April.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Arrangements have been made for an Institute at Grantsville, in the hall, Friday and Saturday, April 1 and 2; Accident, April 4, in the School Room, and Oakland, April 6, in the Court House. The Institute workers will be:

W. F. Kydd, Simcoe, Ontaria, Canada. The Ontario Department of Farmers' Institutes says of Mr. Kydd, "He is one of our most acceptable Institute speakers." He is an authority on horses, dairy cattle and small fruits. He has a large practical experience in all these departments and also in fair matters, having been superintendent of the horse department of probably the largest purely agricultural show in the Province. He is an accepted judge of both light and heavy horses and as such has been invited to place awards in many parts of Ontario. Being an aggressive, forceful speaker, his words carry weight. His subjects are: "Am I Raising the Most Profitable Horse?" "The Dairy Cow, Her Summer Feed and Winter Care;" "Small Fruits and Grape Vines;" "Pruning and General Care of the Apple Orchard;" "Dropped Stitches."

Nicholas Schmitz, Maryland Experimental Station, College Park. Mr. Schmitz is a graduate of the Kansas Agricultural College, and a post-graduate of Cornell, where he specialized in Agronomy in general, and corn soils and soil fertility in particular. In 1906 he took up field work with alfalfa for the Department of Agriculture. Besides studying and experimenting with alfalfa, he made a study of forage crops in general, east of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. Schmitz left the Department to become the Agronomist for the Maryland Experiment Station. His subjects are: "Hay Crops;" "Small Grains;" "Corn;" "Alfalfa."

Successful Service Ended.

Dr. A. J. Fristoe, minister of the Baptist faith, who has been holding special services at Deer Park under the auspices of Rev. C. W. Hudson, the Baptist preacher in charge of the work in Garrett county, terminated his labors on last Sunday, preaching twice at Deer Park that day. He also held services every night, the church being filled to repletion, even on Saturday night, an unusual night for religions services.

The Sunday services were of especial interest and at the conclusion of the afternoon service, the full congregation witnessed the ordination of baptism by immersion. The congregation was augmented by a large throng of observers who witnessed the baptism from points of vantage.

Previous to the baptism of the candidates by the regular pastor, Rev. C. W. Hudson, Rev. Fristoe read the passage of scripture authorizing baptism by immersion.

Sunday night Mr. Fristoe repeated by request one of the week day sermons, the topic being "The Rending of the Veil."

THE DEATH RECORD.

MISS NELLIE THORNTON OFFUTT.

The news of the death of Miss Nellie Thornton Offutt, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel E. Offutt, which occurred at the University Hospital, Baltimore, Tuesday evening at nine o'clock, came as a great shock to the young lady's relatives and numerous friends in Oakland and elsewhere. Miss Offutt was a great sufferer for several years prior to her death and had undergone a number of serious surgical operations at the University Hospital, which were partially successful but had failed to give her permanent relief. A week or two ago she returned to the hospital to undergo a final operation and her friends were buoyed up with the hope that she would soon return entirely restored to health.

Miss Offutt was born in Oakland thirty years ago and was well known and greatly loved by everybody. She was always bright and cheerful and spread happiness and contentment around her by her sunny disposition. She was a member of the Presbyterian church for a number of years.

Her funeral will occur this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock from the home and will be conducted by Rev. J. A. McClelland, of Grafton, a former pastor of the Oakland church. The active pall bearers will be Messrs. Samuel Brady, Harland L. Jones, William Weber and W. A. Sturgiss and Drs. J. E. Legge and W. W. Grant; the honorary pall bearers will be Messrs. R. E. Sliger, King Delawder and James S. Lakin.

As a mark of respect to the deceased lady all the business houses of the town will be closed during the funeral services.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family in this their sad bereavement, and while we know that there is a vacancy that cannot be filled, not only in the home circle, but in the community as well, we can only bow in submission to Divine Will.

MRS. MARY V. SPIKER.

Mrs. Mary V. Spiker died at Altamont Tuesday, March 22nd, from pneumonia, after an illness of about twelve days. The deceased was born in Virginia in 1849; her parents moved to New Creek when she was about eleven years old. When quite a young woman she came and made her home with Jonathan Wilson and remained with him until 1868 when she was married to Benjamin Spiker who was a gunsmith at Altamont, and have been residents there since the above year. She leaves three children: Mrs. Ada Woods, James and Nathan Spiker. The relatives have the sincere sympathy of the entire community, especially her grandson Jesse W. Woods, who did all in his power for her comfort to the last in her dying hours. Mrs. Spiker will be missed by all surrounding neighbors and friends. She was a good neighbor and Christian woman, having joined the Methodist church several years ago. She was always jovial and good to children, a great many of them spending many leisure hours in play days at a time at her house. Her husband preceded her to the grave eleven years and six days. She is the third old resident that has been called from us in the past year; the other two being Mrs. Jas. P. Wright and Aunt Bridget Curran. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Johnson, of Mt. Lake Park, who rendered a very feeling sermon, after which the body was conveyed and interred in the Wilson cemetery.

A NEIGHBOR.

D. S. BUZZERD.

Mr. Denton Sommers Buzzerd, aged 45 years, a well known conductor on the Western Maryland railroad, running between this city and Elkins, W. Va., died at his home, No. 8 North Lee street, last night at 8:25 o'clock, after an illness of about eight weeks, leaving a wife and three children surviving him, and also two brothers, Mr. S. S. Buzzerd, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and Mr. Charles Buzzard, of New York, who is here now. Mr. Buzzerd was a member of the United Workmen and Woodmen of America and also of the order of Railway Conductors and of Cumberland Aerie No. 245, and a man of fine standing in his orders and in this community. Mr. Buzzard came here with his family to reside from Elkins seven years ago.—Cumberland News.

JACOB BEEMAN.

Mr. Jacob Beeman, aged 84 years, died suddenly at his home near Avilton, last Wednesday at about 12 o'clock. He was working in the field and about 11 o'clock came to the house and went to his room to have a smoke before eating dinner and when his daughter went to call him she found him dead. He was a healthy man during his long life and had made no complaint of feeling ill before death. He died in the house in which he was born and had lived all his life. He is survived by four sons, George, James H., Jacob C. and Andrew, and four daughters, Mrs. Wm. H. Green, Mrs. Ulyses Jackson, Mrs. Cambridge Crowe and Mrs. Robert Beeman. The funeral occurred Friday with interment in the John Robinson cemetery.

GEORGE MINNICK.

Mr. George Minnick, aged 35 years, died at his home in Garrett county, a few miles west of Frostburg, on last Saturday. He is survived by his wife and several small children, and his mother and several brothers and sisters. The funeral took place from St. Michael's Roman Catholic church at Frostburg, interment being made in St. Michael's cemetery.

Don't Be Listed as a "Jail Bird."

All persons in jail on April 15 will be known as jail birds for the next 10 years. To those who are in the habit of getting behind the bars, the advice is given to take a vacation for a short while, because if you don't the census man will get you. Then for 10 long years you will be listed on the government records as a jail bird. People in jail on the date of April 15, and maybe just a few days later, will have their "place of abode" put down on the census books as "in jail." It will make no difference to Uncle Sam what the offense is or what the sentence is, the records will for ten years show you a resident of the jail. This questoin has caused more discussion since first taken up than any other part of the census.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. G. C. Pattison, one of the most substantial business men of this place, has purchased from Mr. Andrew Mullen, a former resident of this town, now of Peidmont, the site of the Mullen homestead, which was destroyed by fire three years ago. The lots lay east of the B. & O. R. R., near the station, and are regarded as the most desirable locations in town for a dwelling. Mr. Pattison has placed a contract with W. T. Sigler, contractor and builder, of Piedmont, for the erection of a brick building, modern in every particular, which he will occupy as a home when completed.

Mr. James Beard has returned home after a visit to relatives and friends at Paw Paw.

Mr. N. U. Bond, en route to Bond, spent a few hours with friends in town on Saturday.

Mr. John Moore, clerk in the Barnum store, who was called to Washington last week on account of the death of his brother, has returned home to resume his duties.

Men, women and children are falling down before a widespread epidemic of measles prevailing in the thriving little community of Chestnut Grove. The contagion started in the public school and spread to every family in the neighborhood, and is now seriously interfering with the early spring plowing by crippling the farm labor.

Arrangements are about completed for a big game of ball at the Piedmont baseball park on April 6, between Jack Dunn's bunch of trained birds from Oriole Park, Baltimore, and a nine selected from the very best local talent that can be picked up in this and adjoining regions. Piedmont has asked for two games and fixed the dates on April 5th and 6th. These dates are already scheduled by Manager Dunn, and he has asked the Piedmont management to shift their dates to April 14th and 15th.

Mr. Hugh Tate, whose cleverness in the baseball field is well known throughout the George's Creek region, will play with the Wheeling club the coming season.

Mr. John Raley will leave for East Liverpool, Ohio, April 10, to report for the opening of the baseball season in that city. During the winter months he has been knocking the shekels out of the black diamonds in the Pattison mine. Mrs. Raley will remain at home until the season is well opened, when she will join her husband and remain with him until its close.

Prof. Sollars, principal of the Bloomington school, spent Easter Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Sollars, of near Oakland.

Saturday was pay day at the Davis Coal & Coke mines at Beryl and the Big Vein mines at Shaw.

Mr. Herbert Price was called to Terra Alta last Saturday evening on business in connection with a suit soon to be filed in the Maryland courts by the heirs of Mordecai Price against Baltimore city, to recover four hundred million dollars. ROOFINGS.

NEW YORK WASHINGTON CHICAGO

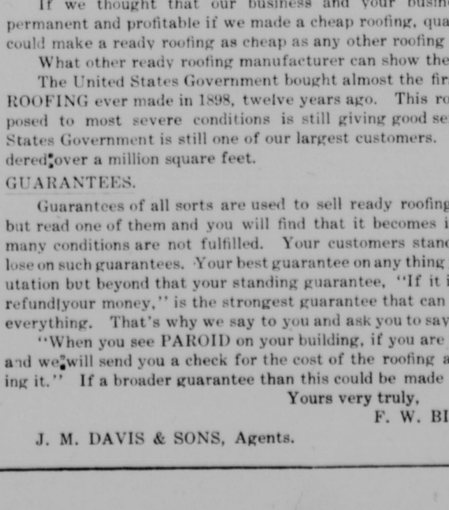
The General Situation on Ready Roofing

March 1, 1910.

To J. M. Davis & Sons, Oakland, Md.:

The reaction against all cheap ready roofings is here.

Dealers in every state in the Union are feeling it and you too have probably felt it already. What is the reason?



It is now about three years since most of the cheap ready roofings were first put onto the market. They were good for a few years but that's all—tney sold on price and extravagant claims to people who had every reason to expect a high grade product.

The failure of thousands of these cheap roofs within the last few months has meant thousands of dissatisfied customers, thousands of roofs to be repaired and thousands of people who are determined to have a roofing that will last. This year, and every year after, you are going to have the greatest demand for a high grade ready roofing that you ever had.

IN CHOOSING ROOFING YOUR CUSTOMERS WILL NOW DEPEND UPON YOUR JUDGMENT MORE THAN EVER BEFORE. POINTING TO PAROID ROOFS THAT HAVE STOOD THE TEST OF YEARS AND YEARS OF WEAR WILL BE A CONVINCING ARGUMENT. THEY WILL SEE THE WISDOM OF BUYING THE ROOFING ABOUT WHICH THERE IS NO QUESTION AS TO QUALITY.

PRICES.

Isn't it an accepted fact that one usually gets what he pays for? It is just as true with ready roofing as with any other commodity.

While nearly all roofing manufacturers have been making ridiculously low prices on their "just as good" roofing, we have maintained the price of PAROID ROOFING. It is the highest priced ready roofing made. Not only have we maintained the quality of PAROID but we have improved it every year for the last twelve years and what's the result? PAROID ROOFS cost the owner far less in the end than any of the "cheapest first cost ready roofings."

Some manufacturers claim that their extremely low prices are made possible by large production and not inferior quality.

We do not care to boast of our size but it is a fact that we have three of the largest roofing mills in the United States and Canada running day and night the year round. We believe we are the largest producers of high grade ready roofing—we know we are the only ready roofing manufacturers to make roofing complete from felt to fixtures.

If we thought that our business and your business would be more permanent and profitable if we made a cheap roofing, quality considered, we could make a ready roofing as cheap as any other roofing manufacturer.

What other ready roofing manufacturer can show the following record:

The United States Government bought almost the first lot of PAROID ROOFING ever made in 1898, twelve years ago. This roofing although exposed to most severe conditions is still giving good service. The United States Government is still one of our largest customers. Last year it ordered over a million square feet.

GUARANTEES.

Guarantees of all sorts are used to sell ready roofing of unknown value but read one of them and you will find that it becomes invalid if any of its many conditions are not fulfilled. Your customers stands every chance to lose on such guarantees. Your best guarantee on any thing you sell is your reputation but beyond that your standing guarantee, "If it is not right we will refund your money," is the strongest guarantee that can be made—it covers everything. That's why we say to you and ask you to say to your customers:

"When you see PAROID on your building, if you are not satisfied tell us and we will send you a check for the cost of the roofing and the cost of laying it." If a broader guarantee than this could be made we would make it.

Yours very truly,
F. W. BIRD & SON.

CHAPTER VIII.

LOOKING FOR AN EYE.

THE witch was haranguing her huddled audience, cursing the soldiers, laughing gleefully in the faces of her stately, scornful guests, greatly to the irritation of Baron Dangloss, toward whom she showed an especial attention.

Tullis was holding the prince in his arms. Colonel Quinnox stood before them, keeping the babbling, leering beldame from thrusting her face close to that of the terrified boy. The Countess Marlanx, pale and rigid, her wondrous eyes glowing with excitement, stood behind John Tullis.

With incredible swiftness the storm passed. Almost at its height there came a cessation of the roaring tempest, the downpour was checked, the thunder died away and the lightning trickled off into faint flashes. The sky cleared as if by magic. The exhibition, if you please, was over!

"It is the most amazing thing I've ever seen," Dangloss said over and over again.

The Countess Marlanx was trembling violently. Tullis, observing this, tried to laugh away her nervousness.

"Mere coincidence; that's all," he said. "You can't believe she brought about this storm?"

"It isn't that," she said in a low voice. "I feel as if a grave personal danger had just passed me by. Not danger for the rest of you, but for me alone. That is the sensation I have—the feeling of one who has stepped back from the brink of an abyss just in time to avoid being pushed over. I can't make you understand. See! I am trembling."

"Nerves, my dear countess—shadows! You'll be over it as soon as we are outside."

Ten minutes later the cavalcade started down the rain swept road toward the city, dry blankets having been placed across the saddles occupied by the ladies and the prince. The witch stood in her doorway, laughing gleefully, inviting them to come often.

"Come again, your highness!" she croaked sarcastically.

"The next time I come it will be with a torch to burn you alive!" shouted back Dangloss. To Tullis he added: "Gad, sir, they did well to burn witches in your town of Salem. You cleared the country of them—the pests!"

Down through the lowering shades rode the prince's party swiftly, even gayly by virtue of relaxation from the strain of a weird half hour. No one revealed the slightest sign of apprehension arising from the mysterious demonstration in which nature had taken a hand.

Truxton King, for reasons best known to himself, soon relapsed into a thoughtful, contemplative silence. Between us, he was sorely vexed and disappointed. When the gallant start was made from the glen of "dead men's bones" he found that he was to be cast utterly aside, quite completely ignored by the fair Loraine. She rode off with young Count Vos Engo without so much as a friendly wave of the hand to him.

Vos Engo, being an officer in the royal guard, rode ahead by order of Colonel Quinnox. Truxton, therefore, had her back in view—at rather a vexing distance, too—for mile after mile of the ride to the city. He galloped along beside the baron, a prey to gloomy considerations. What was the use? He had no chance to win her. That was for story books and plays. She belonged to another world far above his.

The baron's dry, insinuating voice broke in upon the young man's thoughts. "I think it's pretty well understood that she's going to marry him." The little old minister had been reading King's thoughts; he had the satisfacuon of seeing his victim start guiltily. King managed to control himself, asking with bland interest:

"Indeed! Is it a good match, baron?"

The baron smiled. "I think so. He has been a trifle wild, but I believe he has settled down. Splendid family. He is desperately in love."

"I hadn't thought much about it. Is she in love with him?"

"She sees a great deal of him," was the diplomatic answer.

"Would you mind telling me just who she is, baron?"

Dangloss was truly startled.

"Do you mean, sir, that you don't know her?" he asked, almost harshly.

"I don't know her name."

"And you had the effrontery to— My excellent friend, you amaze me! I know that Americans are bold; but, by gad, sir, I've always looked upon them as gentlemen. You"—

"Hold on, Baron Dangloss!" interrupted Truxton, very red in the face. "You'd better hear my side of the story first. She went to school with my sister. She knows me, but refuses to tell me who she is."

"Well, my boy, if she elects to keep you in the dark concerning her name it is not for me to betray her. Ladies in her position, I dare say, enjoy these little mysteries."

"IT IS NOT FOR ME TO BETRAY HER."

It was dusk when they entered the northern gates. Above the castle King said goodby to Tullis and the countess, gravely saluted the sleepy prince and followed Mr. Hobbs off to the heart of the city. He was hot with resentment. Either she had forgotten to say good by to him or had willfully decided to ignore him altogether. At any rate, she entered the gates to the castle grounds without so much as an indifferent glance in his direction.

Truxton knew in advance that he was to have a sleepless, unhappy night.

In his room at the hotel he found the second anonymous letter, unquestionably from the same source, but this time printed in crude, stilted letters. It had been stuck under the door.

"Leave the city at once. You are in great danger. Save yourself."

This time he did not laugh. That it was from Olga Platanova he had no doubt. But why she should interest herself so persistently in his welfare was quite beyond him. And what, after all, could she mean by "great danger—save yourself!"

He indulged in a long spell of thoughtfulness. "No, by George, I'll not turn tail at the first sign of danger. I'll stay here and assist Dangloss in unraveling this matter. And I'll go up to that witch's hole before I'm a day older to have it out with her. I'll find out where the smoke came from, and I'll know where that eye went to." He sighed without knowing it. "By Jove, I'd like to do something to show her I'm not the blooming duffer she thinks I am."

He could not find Baron Dangloss that night nor early the next day. Hobbs, after being stigmatized as the only British coward in the world, changed his mind and made ready to accompany King to the hovel in Ganlook gap.

By noon the streets in the vicinity of the plaza were filled with strange, rough looking men, undeniably laborers.

"Who are they?" demanded King.

"There's a strike on among the men building the railroad," said Hobbs.

"They'd better look out for these fellows," said King, very soberly. "I don't like the appearance of 'em. They look like cutthroats."

"Take my word for it, sir, they are. They're the riffraff of all Europe."

"I hope Baron Dangloss knows how to handle them?" in some anxiety.

In due time they rode into the somber solitudes of Ganlook gap and up to the witch's glen. Here Mr. Hobbs balked. He refused to adventure farther than the mouth of the stony ravine. Truxton approached the hovel alone, without the slightest trepidation. The goose herd grandson was driving a flock of geese across the green bowl below the cabin. The American called out to him, and a moment later the youth, considerably excited, drove his geese up to the door. While they were vainly haranguing each other the old woman appeared. Uttering shrill exclamations, she hurried down to confront King with blazing eyes. Her horrid grin of derision brought a flush to his cheek.

"I'll lay you a hundred gavvos that the kettle and smoke experiment is a fake of the worst sort," he announced.

"Have it your own way—have it your own way!" she cackled.

"Tell you what I'll do—if I can't expose that trick in ten minutes I'll make you a present of a hundred gavvos."

She took him up like a flash, a fact which startled and disconcerted him not a little. Her very eagerness augured ill for his proposition.

With a low, mocking bow the shrivled hag stood aside and motioned for him to precede her into the hovel.

"A hundred gavvos is a fortune not easily to be won," said the old dame. "How can I be sure that you will pay me if you lose?"

"It is in my pocket, madam. If I don't pay, you may instruct your excellent grandson to crack me over the head. He looks as though he'd do it for a good deal less money, I'll say that for him."

"He is honest—as honest as his grandmother," cried the old woman. She bestowed a toothless grin upon him. "Now, what is it you want to do?"

"I want to go through that kitchen, just to satisfy myself of one or two things." King was looking hard at the crack in the kitchen door. Suddenly he started as if shot.

The staring, burning eye was again looking straight at him from the jagged crack in the door!

"I'll get you this time!" he shouted crossing the room in two eager leaps. The door in his violent clutch swung open with a bang.

The owner of that mocking, phantom eye was gone!

Like a frantic dog, Truxton dashed about the little kitchen, looking in every corner, every crack, for signs of the thing he chased. The old woman was standing in the middle of the outer room, grinning at him with genuine malevolence.

"Ha, ha!" she croaked. "You fool! You fool! Search! Smell him out! All the good it will do you! Ha, ha!"

"By gad, I will get at the bottom of this!" shouted Truxton, stubborn rage possessing him. "There's some one here, and I know it. I'm not such a fool as to believe— Say! What's that? The ceiling! By the eternal, that scraping noise explains it! There's where the secret trapdoor is—in the ceiling! Within arm's reach, at that! Watch me, old woman!"

The hag was standing in the kitchen door now, still grinning evilly. She watched the eager young man pound upon the low ceiling with a three legged stool that he had seized from the floor.

He was pounding vigorously on the roughly boarded ceiling when the sharp voice of the old woman, raised in command, caused him to lower the stool and turn upon her with gleaming, triumphant eyes. The look he saw in her face was sufficient to check his enterprise for the moment. He dropped the stool and started toward her, his arms extended to catch her swaying form. The look of the dying was in her eyes. She seemed to be crumpling before him.

He reached her in time, his strong arms grasping the frail, bent figure as it sank to the floor. As he lifted her bodily from her feet, intent upon carrying her to the open air, her bony fingers sank into his arm with the grip of death, and—could he believe his ears!—a low, mocking laugh came from her lips.

Down where the pebbly house yard merged into the mossy banks Mr. Hobbs sat tight, still staring with gloomy eyes at the dark little hut up the glen. A quarter of an hour had passed since King disappeared through the doorway. Mr. Hobbs was getting nervous.

The shiftless, lanky goose herd came forth in time and lazily drove his scattered flock off into the lower glen.

Presently Hobbs caught sight of a thin stream of smoke, rather black than blue, arising from the little chimney at the rear of the cabin. His eyes flew very wide open; his heart experienced a sudden throbless moment; his mind leaped backward to the unexplained smoke mystery of the day before. It was on the end of his tongue to cry out to his unseen patron, to urge him to leave the witch to her deviltry and come along home, when the old woman herself appeared in the doorway—alone.

She sat down upon the doorstep, puffing away at a long pipe, her hooded face almost invisible from the distance which he resolutely held. She was no more than a black, inanimate heap of rags piled against the door jamb.

Hobbs let out a shout. The old woman arose and hobbled toward him, leaning upon a great cane.

"Whe-where's Mr. King?" called out Hobbs.

Her arm was raised, a bony finger pointing to the treetops above her hovel.

"He's gone. Didn't you see him? He went off among the treetops. You won't see him again." She waited a moment and then went on in most ingratiating tones: "Would you care to come into my house? I can show you the road he took. You"—

But Mr. Hobbs, his hair on end, had dropped the rein of King's horse and was putting boot to his own beast, whirling frantically into the path that led away from the hated, damned spot. Down the road he crashed, pursued by witches whose persistence put to shame the efforts of those famed ladies of Tam o' Shanter in the long ago. If he had looked over his shoulder he might have discovered that he was followed by a riderless horse, nothing more.

But a riderless horse is a grewsome thing sometimes.

CHAPTER IX.

STRANGE DISAPPEARANCES.

BUT Hobbs halted his mad flight. He decided to return to the hut. His friend might be in desperate need of aid.

Then, with his heart in his mouth, he slowly began to retrace his steps, walking where he had galloped a moment before. A turn in the road caused him to draw rein sharply. A hundred yards ahead five or six men were struggling with a riderless bay horse.

"By Jove!" ejaculated Hobbs. "It's his horse!"

As he drew nearer it struck him forcibly that the men were not what he had thought them to be. They were an evil looking lot, more like the strikers he had seen in the town earlier in the day. Even as he was turning the new thought over in his mind one of them stepped out of the little knot and, without a word of warning, lifted his arm and fired point blank at the little Englishman. A pistol ball whizzed close by his head. His horse leaped to the side of the road in terror, almost unseating him.

But Hobbs had fighting blood in his veins. What is more to the point, he had a Mauser revolver in his pocket. He jerked it out and, despite a second shot from the picket, prepared to ride down upon the party. An instant later half a dozen revolvers were blazing away at him. Hobbs turned at once and rode in the opposite direction, whirling to fire twice at the unfriendly group. Soon he was out of range. The only thing left for him to do was to ride at once to the city and give the alarm.

Suddenly his horse swerved and leaped furiously out of stride, stumbling, but recovering himself almost instantaneously. In the same second he heard the sharp crack of a firearm far down the unbroken ravine to his left. A second shot came, this time from the right and close at hand. His horse was staggering, swaying; then down he crashed. Hobbs swinging clear barely in time to escape being pinioned to the ground. A stream of blood was pouring from the side of the poor beast. Aghast at this unheard of wantonness, the little interpreter knew not which way to turn, but stood there dazed until a third shot brought him to his senses. The bullet kicked up the dust near his feet. He scrambled for the heavy underbrush at the roadside and darted off into the roadside, his revolver in his hand, his heart palpitating like mad. Time and again as he fled through the dark thickets he heard the hoarse shouts of men in the distance.

At 10 o'clock the next morning Colonel Quinnox and a company of soldiers, riding up from the city gates toward the north in response to a call for help from honest herders who reported attacks and robberies of an alarming nature, came upon the stiff, footsore, thorn scratched Mr. Hobbs not far from the walls of the town. The colonel was not long in grasping the substance of Hobbs' revelations. He rode off at once for the witch's hovel, sending Hobbs with a small, instructed escort to the castle, where Baron Dangloss was in consultation with Mr. Tullis and certain ministers.

The city was peaceful enough, much to the surprise of Hobbs. No disturbance had been reported, said the guardsmen who rode beside him. Up in the hills there had been some depredations, but that was all.

"All?" groaned Mr. Hobbs. "All? Hang it all, man, wot do you call all? You haven't heard 'alf of it yet. I tell you, there's been the devil to pay. Wait till the colonel comes back from Ganlook gap. He'll have news for you; take it from me, he will. That poor chap 'as gone up in smoke as sure as my name 's Hobbs."

They met Baron Dangloss near the barracks, across the park from the castle. He was in close, earnest conversation with John Tullis and Count Halfont, both of whom seemed laboring under intense excitement.

The arrival of Hobbs, a pitiful but heroic object, at once arrested the attention of every one. His story was heard by a most distinguished audience.

"There is nothing supernatural about King's disappearance," said Tullis sharply. "That's all nonsense. He had money about him, and it perhaps turns out that there really was a man at the crack in the door, a clever brigand who today has got the better of our vainglorious friend. The shooting in the hills is more disturbing than this, to my mind."

"This mystery coming on top of the other is all the more difficult to understand—I mean the disappearance of the Countess Marlanx," said Baron Dangloss, pulling at his imperial in plain perplexity. "But we must not stop here talking. Will you come with me, Mr. Tullis, to the tower? I shall send out my best man to work on the case of the lady. It is a most amazing thing. I still have hope that she will appear in person to explain the affair."

"I think not," said Tullis gloomily. "This looks like abduction—foul play, or whatever you choose to call it. She has never left her father's house in just this manner before. I believe, baron, that Marlanx has taken her away by force. She told me yesterday that she would never go back to him if she could help it. I have already given you my suspicions regarding his designs upon the—ahem!" Catching the eager gaze of the prince, he changed the word "throne" to "treasury."

Loraine, her cheeks white with resolution, turned upon John Tullis. "You might leave the rescue of the countess to the proper authorities—the police," she said calmly. "I think it is your duty as an American to head the search for Mr. King. If Count Marlanx has spirited his wife away, pray who has a better right?"

"But we are not sure that he"—

"We are sure that Mr. King is either dead or in dire need of help," she interrupted hotly.

"Colonel Quinnox is quite competent to conduct the search," he said shortly.

"But Colonel Quinnox has gone forth on another mission. He may be unable to give any of his time to the search for Mr. King. It is outrageous, John Tullis, to refuse help!"

"I DON'T REFUSE HELP!"

"I don't refuse help!" he exclaimed. "But I'll tell you this—I consider it my duty as a man to devote what strength I have to the service of a woman in trouble. Come, baron; we will go to the tower."

Count Halfont intervened, hastily proposing that a second party be sent out at once with instructions to raze the witch's hut if necessary.

"I shall be happy to lead the expedition," said young Count Vos Engo, bowing deeply to the young lady herself.

"You shall, Vos Engo," said Halfont. "Prepare at once. Take ten men."

Tullis turned suddenly to the resentful girl. "Loraine," he said gently as the others drew away, "don't be hard with me. You don't understand."

"Yes, I do," she said stubbornly. "You are in love with her."

"Yes; that's quite true."

"A married woman!"

"I can't help it. I must do all I can for her."

She looked into his honest eyes for a moment.

"Forgive me," she murmured, hanging her head.

Then she smiled brightly up into his face. "Have your way, then. Remember that I am her friend too."

The guard about the prince was doubled. Orders requiring the strictest care of his person were issued by Count Halfont. Baron Dangloss began to see things in a different light. Things that had puzzled him before now seemed clear.

But late in the afternoon a telegram was brought to Tullis which upset all of their calculations and caused the minister of police to swear softly in pure disgust. It was from the Countess Marlanx herself, sent from Porvrak, a station far down the railway, in the direction of Vienna. It was self explanatory: "I am going to Schloss Marlanx, there to end my days. There is no hope for me. I go voluntarily. Will you not understand why I am leaving Edelweiss? You must know." It was signed "ingomede."

Tullis was dumfounded. He caught the penetrating glance of Dangloss and flushed under the sudden knowledge that this shrewd old man also understood why she was leaving Edelweiss. Because of him! Because she loved him and would not be near him. His heart swelled exultantly in the next moment. A brave resolve was born within him.

"We don't need a key to that, my boy," said the baron indulgently. "But I will say that she has blamed little consideration for you when she steals away in the dead of night without a word. Unfeeling, I'd say. Well, we can devote our attention to Mr. King, who is lost."

"See here, baron," said Tullis after a moment; "I want you to give me a couple of good men for a few days. I'm going to Schloss Marlanx. I'll get her away from that place if I have to kill Marlanx and swing for it!"

At 7 o'clock that night, accompanied by two clever secret service men, Tullis boarded the train for the west. A man who stood in the tobacconist's shop on the station platform smiled quietly to himself as the train pulled out. Then he walked briskly away. It was Peter Brutus, the lawyer.

A most alluring trap had been set for John Tullis!

The party that had gone to Ganlook gap in charge of Count Vos Engo returned at nightfall no wiser than when it left the barracks at noon. Riding bravely, but somewhat dejectedly, beside the handsome young officer in command was a girl in gray. Now she was coming home with them, silent, subdued, dispirited—even more so than she allowed the count to see.

Colonel Quinnox and his men had been scouring the hills for bandits. They arrived at the witch's cabin a few minutes after Vos Engo and his company. Disregarding the curses of the old woman, a thorough search of the place was made.

The old woman's story, reflected by the grandson, was convincing so far as it went. She said that the young man remained behind in the kitchen to puzzle himself over the smoke mystery while she went out to her doorstep. The man with the horses became frightened when she went down to explain the situation to him. He fled. A few minutes later the gentleman emerged to find his horse gone, himself deserted. Cursing, he struck off down the glen in pursuit of his friend, and that was the last she saw of him.

SENATOR LEE AFTER GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Would Change the System of Building the Roads.

Senator Lee of Montgomery has prepared another roads bill to supplement the one introduced by him in the Senate last week, and one which is even a more severe attack upon the State Geological Survey than the first. It provides that in the case of a vacancy or vacancies occurring in the State Roads Commission, the Governor is authorized to fill these vacancies by the appointment of two new members, who will be paid a salary of $2,000 a year and will be required to devote all their time to the road work.

The bill is so worded as to make it plain that the vacancies referred to are those positions at present filled by the two members of the State Geological survey. Under the law creating the State Roads Commission the Governor was required to appoint two members from the Geological Survey, and they were to serve without pay. These two members appointed were Dr. William Bullock Clark and Dr. Ira Remsen. Senator Lee, it would appear from this bill, is after the scalp of those two eminent gentlemen. One of his principal contentions is that they leave the State during the summer months, when the work of road building is most active, and, therefore, exercise no supervision when supervision is most needed. Senator Lee wants men who are "on the job" all the time.

The Senator from Montgomery has prepared a mass of statistics and material concerning the building of roads in his county which constitutes a prima facie case of great severity against the Geological Survey's work. His most striking exhibit is a series of photographs showing the condition of roads built by the Survey under Engineer W. W. Crosby as contrasted with roads built by the county itself. Mr. Lee says that they are perfectly fair representations of the two kinds of construction; that, in fact, he ordered the photographer to reproduce the worst parts of the county roads and fair specimens of the Survey's roads. The photographs show the county roads to be excellent sections of smoothly leveled highways, while the Survey's roads are filled with holes and ruts and awkward places. The Blair road, the Bladensburg road, the Laytonsville road and the Kensington road are some of those offered in evidence.

But the condition of the roads is only one count in the indictment against the Survey. The county roads, Senator Lee contends, have cost only about one-half as much as those built by the Survey, and their cost of maintenance is far less. The Survey roads have been built under the Shoemaker act, by which the State pays one-half the cost and the county the other half. So costly are the Survey roads, says Mr. Lee, and so poor their construction that the county prefers to build its roads entirely at its own expense—and saves money by so doing. The average cost of the roads built by the county is from $4,000 to $5,000 a mile; the average cost of the Survey's roads is from $9,000 to $11,000. And the cost of maintenance of the county roads is less.

The trouble with the Crosby roads, according to the Montgomery people, lies chiefly with the drainage. Where there is a sandy subsoil, it appears, as is the case on the Eastern Shore where the Crosby roads have met with much favor, the Survey's specifications work all right. But where there is a different base the drainage is defective and the roads don't measure up.

Another point of controversy is that the Survey insists on cutting down slight grades in order to get a perfectly level road. The Montgomery county authorities say that a slight grade doesn't impede traffic and it does help the drainage.

The alleged excessive cost of the Survey's roads is said to be owing to the fact that the contractors themselves have little faith in Mr. Crosby's specifications, and, inasmuch as they are obliged to guarantee the roads, they make the price very high in order to safeguard themselves. That is said to run up the cost to exorbitant figures.

These are some of the main arguments with which Senator Lee will support his bills when they come up in the Senate. He professes to be confident that the two houses of Legislature will enact them into law.

State Roads Engineer W. W. Crosby, discussing the charges made by Senator Lee, said:

"I do not think he has given fair consideration to the Survey's work, and if he had he would have known that what he charges about the condition of the roads is not fair to us. In the first place, the Kensington road he refers to has not been accepted, and is in the hands of a reputable contractor and it will not be accepted until it is in first-class condition.

"I agree there are some defects in the Blair, Bladensburg and Laytonsville roads, but in the entire county referred to—Montgomery—we have built about 150,000 square yards of macadam roads, and out of that amount 953 square yards only are defective.

"When Senator Lee compares the roads built by the county he must remember that they are located in the best part of the county for road building, and that they have only built about two or three miles, against our 22. And then there are defects in a county which was just completed last year.

"As to the cost, he figures that county roads were cheaper than the Survey's roads. Well, the roads they built were right near railroad stations, and their material could be conveyed by freight direct to the place of road building. Why, in several instances we have had to haul our stone two or three miles. Their macadam roads are only 10 feet wide and 6 inches in depth, while the Survey's are from 12 to 15 feet wide and from 6 to 18 inches deep.

"I think when this is compared with Senator Lee's statement, the Survey's roads did not cost so much, after all."

EXECUTIVE NEARER THE PEOPLE

National events have developed a condition of affairs which completely shatters the political tradition that our chief executive is further removed from the people than the lawmaking body. Between the administrations of Washington and Taft a wide difference has developed. Washington was set apart from the people as far as possible that he might get the general perspective of the affairs of the entire nation. He dealt with affairs of the state almost as an arbitrator and was hedge in from the people by the accepted interpretation of the functions of his office. But now the tendency is quite the opposite Roosevelt and Taft have been primarily presidents of the people looking to the people, popular sentiment and interests to guide their judgment and they have held themselves responsible to the whole people for their actions.

Although our forefathers wrought wisely and well, they overlooked the extent to which our varied and diversified interests would seperate the different sections. It has developed that senators are, as a rule, influenced by sectional and congressmen by districts interests, without power to rise above their own constituencies to act as a whole people. In this evolution the presidency has become the one office of the whole people. The American people have not argued this out and accepted it as a last resort, but have just naturally fallen into the habit of looking to the president for leadership. As a result the presidency is primarily the people's direct represeetative office and has gained immeasurably in consequent important.—Omaha Bee.

GOOD ROADS MOVE NOW MATERIALIZING

Bankhead Bill Appropriating $500,000 Favorably Reported to Senate.

The movement for the joint Government, State and county construction of roadways seems to be ready to materialize. Senator Bankhead's bill providing for the Government participation in such an arrangement was favorably reported to the Senate.

An appropriation of $500,000 is provided for the beginning of the highway construction. It is said in the report that this amount is purely for an experimental trial of the plan. If it works and local cooperation is assured, it is a fair guess that the Government will go deep into the business of building good roads. It will provide every Representative in Congress with an opportunity to do something substantial for his rural constituents.

The Bankhead bill provides that the first $500,000 shall be spent in building better roads for the rural free mail delivery service. This feature of the bill makes it an act to extend a governmental function.

The reservation is incorporated, however, that for every dollar the Government spends in road building the State or county where it is spent must spend another dollar on the same road. This means $1,000,000 worth of goods roads out of the first appropriation.

It is cited in the report that there is a country-wide sentiment in favor of better public highways. The automobile has done much to encourage this sentiment. Various States have made appropriations, and these nave been supplemented by the counties, the report further states. Senator Bankhead now wants the Federal Government to do its share.

It is set forth that there is now an annual appropriation of $35,673,000 for the rural free mail service. This service is seriously hampered by the bad roads. To build better roads on the rural routes would, therefore, serve a double purpose, the report states. It would facilitate the mail service and give the country people better highway accommodations.

Senator Bankhead also refers to the fact that France has expended $612,775,000 on its highways. It is, therefore, possible in that country for a single horse to haul on an average 3306 pounds at a load. In this country, it is set forth, the horse is able to haul only 800 pounds. The economic effects on land values and the general incentive to future improvement in country life are other reasons advanced for the passage of the bill.

TUBERCULOSIS SUNDAY

Movement to Observe April 24th In the Churches Taking Shape.

The proposal to observe Sunday, April 24th, as "Tuberculosis Sunday" in the churches of the United States, which was recently made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis is meeting with the cordial approval of clergymen of all denominations and social workers. In this state, the movement is in charge of the Maryland Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, of which Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs of Baltimore, is president. Dr. Jacobs has just received the following letter of endorsement from the Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland of the Protestant Episcopal Church:

"Referring to your favor of the 7th instant, I have to say, that for the reasons herein stated, I am glad to cooperate in the movement mentioned.

"The tendency of the present-day philanthropic world is not only largely towards humanitarianism, but also to ignore entirely the fact that every movement conducted by it in the Gentile world originated in a Christian atmosphere, is working under Christian auspices, and is supported by Christian men and women. On the other hand, there is also a disposition on the part of many in the Church to forget that He who cleansed the leper was also He who purged him of his sin; that He who touched the eye with clay was also He who made the soul to see; that hand in hand these manifestations of 'good will to men'—good will to soul as well as body—have traversed the centuries, relieving suffering, proclaiming good news, and bestowing blessings for the life that now is, as well as for that which is to come.

"A great boon to the world, and blessing to the Church would be the full recognition, and grateful acknowledgment of the debt that it thus owes to Christianity by the former, and the practical conviction of an inherent responsibility for the physical welfare and life of humanity (no less than its spiritual) upon the part of the latter.

"Suggestive of such recognition and acknowledgment is the appeal from the National Tuberculosis Association to the Church of our land for assistance in its campaign of education regarding the nature of this dread disease, and I am heartily in favor of a favorable response being made, and action being taken in obedience to this request under the conviction of Christian obligation, and in the discharge of Christian duty, by our clergymen and people at large.

"Most cordially yours,

JOHN G. MURRAY,
Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland."

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Winter Care of Sheep.

We provide shelter for sheep from all storms up to shearing time, writes a New York sheep grower in Orange Judd Farmer. We do not keep the animals in the stable except in stormy weather. The more exercise they get the better. During winter they get alsike clover or alfalfa hay. If these can always be secured we would feed them a limited amount of beets and turnips until lambing time with hay. After lambing time increase roots. However, we cannot depend upon the hay on account of catchy weather, so we use silage, five or six pounds a day each if not too heavy in corn. We calculate to feed silage and roots to all about once a week in addition for relish. We feed beets to all milking ewes. We separate all ewes about to have lambs from all the other sheep and never allow rams with the ewes except in breeding season.

Our methods never involve serious trouble. Sometimes sheep do not get enough exercise. Then we feed hay or roughage in the field on pleasant days. Often comes a warm spell, and if feed is given in the same quantities as usual the animals will get over fed. We meet this by cutting down the ration, especially grain, if any is being fed, and silage. We keep all ewes as long as the mouth is unbroken if they are good breeders, milkers and mothers. When lambs come we feed to get all the milk possible and keep the ewes up in flesh. Salt is constantly kept before sheep and put in the salt boxes fresh twice a week.

Pastures For Swine.

In no way can a pound of pork be made more cheaply than when it is made from pasture. The importance of pastures for swine should not be underestimated. The best kinds of pasture will depend upon the locality. Among pastures, in the strict sense of the term, are barley, rye and speltz in grains, blue grass and brome grass in grasses and clover and alfalfa in clovers. Where clover and alfalfa can be grown there are no pastures superior. Dwarf Essex rape stands high. None need be without pasture for swine who exercises forethought in providing it.

In winter the brood sows should have something to take the place of the green pasture, said A. J. Lovejoy before the Illinois Stock Breeders' association. I know of nothing that will equal alfalfa, bright and green, run through a cutting machine. Two-thirds chaffed alfalfa and one-third shelled corn mixed together and ground in a steel bur grinder make an almost ideal ration, which can be fed dry or mixed thickly with scalding water. A little salt adds relish. It is a cheap ration and has just bulk enough to take the place of grass. If one cannot have alfalfa, bright, well cured clover is good. Sorghum cane is a good fall feed until heavy freezing. Mangels or sugar beets are of course very good.

Poultry Notes.

A good dust bath is the hen's best cure for lice.

Keep the appetite lusty and healthy, but don't starve the birds.

The healthy hen is usually active, and likewise the active hen is usually healthy.

In return for the money invested poultry brings as good profits as anything upon the farm.

No one can raise fowls and eggs so economically as the farmer. Everything the poultryman must buy the farmer raises.

Scaly legs may be prevented or cured by using lard and sulphur. The color of the leg will also be improved by the use of this.

Place a box of dry wheat bran where the fowls and chicks can get it at all times. It is good for them, and they cannot eat too much. If they do not eat it readily at first, mix a little coarse cornmeal or millet with it as a sort of bait. It won't be long before the bran box will attract them without the meal or millet.

Selection of Seed.

Seed selection is one of the most important details connected with successful agriculture, and too much care cannot be exercised, says Farm and Ranch. The annual loss from planting poor or worthless seed is enormous and cannot be computed in dollars and cents. Besides the loss of a crop, there is always the danger of noxious weeds being introduced with the cheap seed. Only the purest seed is worth planting, and it can be obtained only from reliable seed houses.

The Farm Wood Lot.

Every farmer should have a wood lot, and in the fall he should plant trees to take the places of the ones he cut down during the preceding year. If people would only take the trouble to plant a new tree for every one they cut down the forestry question would be solved.

Rheumatism In Fowls.

Damp quarters and a lack of heat promoting foods frequently cause rheumatism in fowls. Birds so afflicted will cramp and the legs draw up. They will often eat heartily. Dry quarters, good food and liniment briskly rubbed into the limbs will usually effect a cure.

Selecting Soil For Alfalfa.

The best soil for alfalfa is one with a surface sufficiently heavy to retain an abundance of moisture and furnish a good storehouse for plant food, one with a fairly deep subsoil sufficiently porous to allow good underdrainage.—Maryland Experiment Station.

HOUSE PLANTS IN WINTER.

How to Make Them Thrive by Observing Simple Rules.

The best exposure for house plants in the winter is, as a general thing, a southern one. The next best is an eastern one. Some plants can be grown in western windows, but they never do as well as in the other exposures, chiefly because of the intense heat of the afternoon sun. If care is taken, however, to shade the glass during the hottest part of the day it is possible to grow plants well under these conditions.

A few plants do well in a north window. The lack of sunshine prevents the production of flowers. But many foliage plants thrive. They require much less water because evaporation, due to absense of sunshine, takes place in such a location more slowly. Give only the amount of water needed to keep the soil moist. More will cause a souring of the soil, a condition seldom met with when plants are fully exposed to sunshine. In a northern location the soil around the roots should be turned over at least once a week to allow the sun to reach it and, as it were, purify it. Some plants, like the geraniums and carnations, can hardly get too much sunshine.

Another thing plants require is ventilation. A florist always has the finest system of ventilation in his houses. Of course it is hard to get things down to such fine points in a private house, but we can, by raising and lowering windows, frequently change the atmosphere to all life.

Another matter of importance in plant growing is watering. Showering is almost as necessary as root watering. The leaves of the plant are covered with pores, and the plant breathes through them. If these pores become clogged with dust and dirt the plant surely suffers. Showering, therefore, removes the dirt from the pores and, generally speaking, insures a healthy plant. Where a plant fails to get this moisture the leaves turn yellow and fall off, and the plant takes on a sickly appearance.

In the house during the winter it is a great benefit to plants to keep water evaporating on stoves, register or radiators in rooms where artificial heat is used. While sweeping or dusting the room indoors or the piazza outdoors it is well to cover plants with a light thin cloth. Another thing to remember is to remove all dying leaves as soon as they turn yellow; also cut off all flowers as soon as they commence to fade and never throw them down among the plants to decay. If a plant shows a tendency to grow tall and branchless cut it back at least one-third.

TOOLED LEATHER WORK.

How to Make Useful and Inexpensive Articles From Calfskin.

Inexpensive and useful articles may be made from calfskin and tooled. A skin containing six square feet costs 30 cents a square foot. Music bags, table mats, cardcases, bill books, needlebooks, purses and glove cases can be made from it.

First make an exact copy on paper of the article you wish to make. Place leather on piece of marble or soapstone with pattern on top and trace all lines with a hard pencil. Then wet leather quite wet on wrong side with a sponge or soft cloth. Go over all lines on right side with a nut pick, pressing hard. Then with a nail set costing 10 cents and hammer bring out the design by tooling—merely placing nail set on leather and pounding with hammer. If initials are used tool all around, leaving letters plain. If leaves or flowers are used tool all around, leaving design plain, or vice versa. The veins in leaves may be put in with nut pick.

The articles may be stitched on sewing machine with buttonhole twist to match leather and leave edges raw.

How to Wash a Plume.

The advice given by one woman for washing a plume is as follows: Lay the plume in a suds made of good white soap and cold water and let it stand for two or three hours. Then put into hot water, where it should remain about twenty minutes. Then, with a piece of soft cloth or silk dipped in soapsuds, remove any dirt which may remain. Lay it on a clean towel and touch with a piece of cloth rolled up to restore the curl. When almost dry, shake until fluffy, place in tissue paper and put it in the warming oven of the stove to dry thoroughly. If necessary use the dull side of an ivory paper cutter in restoring the curl.

How to Make Nice Clothes Hangers.

Nice homemade clothes hangers can be made from ordinary wooden hoops cut any desired length. Cover them with a padding of cotton batting that has been sprinkled liberally with violet, orris root or any other sachet powder. The hanger should then be bound with narrow Dresden ribbon or slipped into a shirred ribbon case made to fit. They are excellent for gifts.

How to Clean Cooking Vessels.

Never use a knife to scrape the foodstuffs that may adhere to a cooking utensil. Fill the vessel with cold water, adding a little soda or washing powder, set on the stove until it comes to a boil and then empty. Now pour in fresh hot water and, if scrubbing is necessary, use a brush kept specially for that purpose.

How to Purify Air In a Sickroom.

Put absorbent cotton in a pan and cover the cotton with sugar, then set the cotton on fire, and the smoke will be pleasant to the invalid and also leave a sweet odor in the room.

SWANTON.

Mrs Eleanor J. Fairall and Mrs. Sadie M. Fairall, have disposed of their residence and other holdings in Swanton, and moved to Keyser, W. Va. This breaks up one of the oldest and longest established residence in Swanton. In the early months following the termination of the Civil War, the late Capt. Truman West moved from his former home near Accident to Swanton and from that time to the present removal the family has occupied the Swanton home and maintained a seat of much happiness and warm hospitality. This was one of the most widely known families in Garrett and its influence was always salutatory and helpful in the community, to which they contributed so liberally to its better being.

Miss Rose Boyer, the esteemed teacher of the Swanton public School, is very ill with pneumonia, but at this time, it is hoped, her condition, to say the least, is no worse. For some time Miss Boyer has not been in robust health and her reduced vitality renders her case much more serious, it is thought.

Green and wife, dated 31st day of March, 1894, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 24, folio 150 one of the land records of Garrett county, a certified copy of said deed is hereby filed, marked Plaintiffs Exhibit A, and is made a part of this bill.

4. That the said real estate estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein as above stated, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

The bill then prays for the sale of said real estate and that the proceeds of the sale be distributed between the plaintiffs and defendants, according to their respective rights and interest, general relief, and order of publication against the non resident defendants.

It is thereupon this 28th day of February, 1910, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 4th day of April, 1910 give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear if this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 21st day of April next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

No. 1656 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ettie Hamilton vs. Alexander Hamilton.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states that the parties were married in the town of Oakland, Garrett County, State of Maryland, on the first day of January, 1899, and that they lived together for a period of three years, at and after which time the defendant deserted the plaintiff and has remained away ever since, which desertion has now lasted for over eight years, is final, uninterrupted and without any reasonable hope of reconciliation.

The plaintiff asks for the custody of the child, and the bill alleges the non residence of the defendant and prays for an order of publication against him.

It is thereupon, this 9th day of March, in the year nineteen hundred and ten, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting as a Court of Equity, that the plaintiff by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, give notice to the defendant, who is alleged to be a non resident of the State of Maryland, of the object and purpose of this suit by publishing said notice once a week for four successive weeks before the 11th day of April, 1910, and warning the defendant to be and appear in this Court in person or by attorney on or before the 28th day of April, 1910, to show cause, if any he may have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1910. NUMBER 6

THE NEW TOWN COUNCIL MET AND WAS ORGANIZED

And Then Adjourned Until Monday Night of Next Week.

The new Town Council of Oakland met on Monday night of this week when Clerk of the Circuit Court Tower administered the oath of office to Mayor John W. Hart, who in turn swore the recently elected members of Council, Messrs. Fraley, Kelly and Stanton, into office.

The Council organized by electing Mr. Stanton president and Mr. John C. Dunham clerk, after which, on account of the illness of Mr. Fraley's father, who is also the father-in-law of Mr. Kelly, the body adjourned with the intention of meeting again last night but the death of Mr. Fraley occurring yesterday morning prevented the presence of two of the new members and a further adjournment was announced yesterday by President Stanton until Monday night of next week, at which time Mayor Hart will submit his appointments for confirmation and the Council will select the officers elected by that body consisting of street superintendent, tax collector and treasurer.

Judge Keedy on Marriage.

Judge Keedy granted a divorce to Charles S. Shank from his wife, Leila S. Shank, on statutory grounds at the present term of court at Hagerstown. In commenting upon the case Judge Keedy says in considering the testimony as to the character of the defendant that the plaintiff is hardly deserving of relief. The opinion says further: "Is marriage a failure? Yes; if relationships such as now frequently come before me are termed such. No; where the relationship is entered into prudently and in appreciation of the step taken. In the case under consideration there never was any marriage in reality and it does not deserve to be dignified as such.

Railroad Improvements in Oakland.

For upwards of two weeks a large body of workmen have been engaged in and near Oakland laying the heavy steel rails which were distributed along the B. & O. tracks early last winter. The rail weigh ninety pounds to the yard and are in lengths varying from forty to sixty feet. A change in the cross over switches is also being made by moving them from their present location west of the station and placing them in front of the Offutt store building. Other changes are contemplated by the railway officials which may result in the route through town being made to eliminate the many curves which will place the tracks through the Oakland and Glades Hotel grounds.

SUGAR SEASON QUICKLY ENDED

"King Elijah" Officially Declares it Closed—Crop Very Light.

The maple sugar season of 1910 is over, and it goes on record as one of the shortest on record in the history of the industry in Somerset county.

Elijah Livengood, the "sugar king" of Elk Lick township and Garrett county, Md., was in Meyersdale last Monday and officially declared the season closed. He said a little more might be made if any freezing spells should come hereafter, but it would be of such poor quality as not to be worth the making.

"Lige" says the sap was running pretty well yet during the warm weather of last week, but it soon turned milky and was not fit to boil down, so he turned his keelers upside down and is waiting for rain to swell them enough for them to hold together before gathering them in.

The "king" made only about 1400 or 1500 gallons of syrup this year—which would be counted a big crop by most of the owners of sugar groves, but constitutes a very small output for his big camp.

The season began later that usual this year and closed earlier. There were only about two good runs. But for the fact that a good deal of last year's crop still remained in the hands of dealers at the opening of this year's sugar season, the shortage of the new crop would be more keenly felt. Just how much remained in the warehouses from last year, is not known, but the chances are that considerable old sugar will find its way into the market this year along with the new, and the consumers will never know the difference. Before the last of this year's crop is marketed prices will probably rule higher than last year.—Meyersdale Republican.

THE HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

Largely Attended and Extremely Interesting.

The third annual commencement of the Oakland High School was held in the opera house Friday evening, April 1, 1910, at 8 o'clock, in the presence of the largest audience ever assembled in that building.

Although additional chairs were obtained from other halls, every available seat in both the parquet and gallery was occupied and many people were turned away for lack of room. The concensus of opinion seems to be that the size of the audience, its representative character and the splendid deportment reflect great credit upon the town and the school.

Admission was by card sent with the invitations from the senior class. High School boys were the ushers.

The stage was tastefully decorated with the Maryland and National flags, potted plants and school pennants, the latter in green and gold, the class colors.

On the platform were seated County Superintendent Browning, the faculty and the members of the graduating class. The boxes were occupied by the school officials and the speakers of the evening.

The first and seventh parts on the program were string quartettes under the direction of Mr. Herman Runter, assisted by local talent, and were well received. The "Evening Boat Song," by the Robinson children showed both talent and training. Every one was delighted with the cultured voice of Miss Margaret Scott Miller, of Cumberland, in the two solos which she rendered. Dr. Robinson is always at home with the violin and the Oakland people recognize his ability at all times.

One of the marked features of the program was the class song, by the ten graduates, paying a tribute to the Oakland schools.

The literary part of the program on the part of the class consisted of three essays which will be printed in full in this and next week's issues of this paper.

Former Senator George L. Wellington was the orator of the evening. His text was the apothegm of the old German pessimist—"Youth is a blunder, middle age a struggle and old age a regret."

For forty minutes he highly entertained the audience with his optimistic views of life, denouncing the doctrine of the text and urging his hearers to see the silver lining to every cloud and the golden glow to every sunset. Senator Wellington is a thinker and has the courage of his convictions and the Oakland people are always glad of the opportunity to hear him.

The diplomas were presented to the graduates by the Hon. Philip Willett in an eloquent little speech brimful of thought for the plebian and the politician and the "sweet girl graduate" and every one else. His tribute to Washington was beautiful.

The Class of 1910 was composed of the following: Misses Bessie May Ault, Georgia May Davis, Eleanor Jane Peddicord, Mary C. West and Bertie May Lawton, and Messrs. Lawrence M. Fraley, Neil C. Fraley, Gus E. Newman, D. Earle Smith and Clarence Murphy.

It is our desire to publish in full the papers read by the graduates and this week we publish that of Neil Fraley. Miss Davis' and Mr. Smith's will appear next week.

Mr. Fraley's paper follows:

"Success is a termination of any affair or a favorable or prosperous result of anything attempted.

"The young men of today are rather inclined to believe that success is beyond their reach, and is something for only those who are exceptionally clever. That is the popular impression. They think that all successful men are leaders; but success does not necessarily attain such heights. Take for example the men who sailed with Lieutenant Hobson on his short but perilous voyage into the mouth of Santiago Harbor; they accomplished as much in their positions as their lieutenant did in his. It was as important that the man at the engine which propelled the ship should make a success of his position and keep the ship moving, as it was for Hobson to order her to stop at a certain point and to drop the anchors. Both had to carry to a successful termination that which they started to do, and that is what success really is. What a man does well, he succeeds in.

"When one of the greatest men of our age was asked the secret to success, he answered, 'There is no secret to it, it is just dig, dig, dig.'

"Some people have the idea that if a man is known, he is a success; but reputation is not success. Many young men have achieved reputation, but not success. It has no secret, nor is it mysterious, but it has a price: hard work and personal sacrifices. Any young man may achieve success if he is willing to pay the price.

"Once the editor of a Western newspaper sent the successful men of his city this question: 'Why do not more of our young men succeed?' He recieved one answer like this: 'Because there are too many young men looking for white shirt jobs.' Young men want success, but they are unwilling to work for it.

"Success is won by hard work. It comes to those who work hard and intelligently for it. No man ever made a success except by hard work. Study the lives of our successful men, and the story is the same. It was always won by hard and persistent work.

"Take the story of the boy who came to New York penniless and earned $300 in three years. But he kept at it, working beside a tank smelling foul with oil; yet he made the oil so well that a person can hardly burn a drop of it that was not bought from his vast Standard Oil Company. That man's life has been a success, but was won by hard and persistent work.

"Years ago, in one of our Western towns, a young man sat pegging away at law. He had no instructor, but he kept right at it until he became the ablest constitutional lawyer in America, and the people elected Benjamin Harrison President of these United States.

"When a young man starts into business he must have two keys to success: a principle and a method. When a young man is told that the only principle he can follow in business is honesty, it may sound very small to him, but without honesty success is impossible. The surest key to success in business is thoroughness; thoroughness in everything undertaken and especially in small things.

"Some men feel that if they could get into one of the larger cities they would have a better chance of success. But success never depends upon the place where you are, it depends upon the man.

"Thoroughness is the earning power of success, and success must always be earned. It comes only to those who work hard and persistently for it, and who have honest principles and thoroughness of method."

Will Forestay Pay?

With the increasing cost of building material and timber of all kinds, the question is often asked, why not grow timber for profit?

The fact that it takes many years to grow a timber crop deters most people from undertaking it.

Conditions to-day are most favorable for the adoption of forestry methods then ever before. There are large areas everywhere that are better suited to timber-growing than for any other purpose and such lands will eventually be managed for timber production. It is a crop that requires a minimum amount of labor and good prices are assured. In most cases the land is already fully stocked with young growth which, with a little care, can be developed into valuable forests.

The writer recently examined a volunteer growth of yellow locust, 18 years old, on a mountain-side in Garrett country. A majority of the trees were big enough to make two fence-posts each. The stand had been thinned at the proper time and would produce on the average 1,500 posts an acre.

On a mountain farm of 350 acres, in Washington county, about 150 acres had grown up in locust, the trees being about 6 years old. The question asked by the owner was—"will this stand of locust net me at the end of the next 15 years more than clearing up the land and using it for farming purposes?" By comparing the rate of growth of the trees and the probable return in 15 years, as compared with the net rental for the same amount of cleared land, the balance was decidedly in favor of growing locust fence-posts in preference to corn, and the landowner has decided to let the locust grow.

While locust is probably the best tree for fence-post production, there is a number of other trees that will produce equal financial returns for other purposes, such as chestnut for poles; yellow poplar, loblolly pine and red oak for saw timber.

Of course, a longer time will be required to grow telephone poles than to grow fence-posts, and a still longer time to grow saw-logs, but the value of the product is likely to increase, to a certain limit, in proportion to the age of the crop or even at a greater rate.

If practical forestry will pay under present conditions, surely the profits to be derived from future timber crops with the certain advance of prices makes it a good proposition.

COLONEL ROOSEVELT WELCOMED BY ITALIAN KING

Is Received at the Palace and Is Very Cordially Entertained.

ROME, April 4.—King Victor Emmanuel received Mr. Roosevelt at the Quirinal today. The occasion afforded opportunity for another exhibition of the admiration of the public for the former President and the popular interest in his every movement.

The hour of his reception being known, a considerable number of persons gathered to greet him on his way from the hotel to the royal palace. As he was alighting from his carriage at the Quirinal the cuirassiers forming the bodyguard of the king gave him a military salute. A footman in blue velvet knickerbockers and red coat covered with gold lace preceded Mr. Roosevelt to the ante-chamber of his majesty, where he was received by Rear Admiral Garelli, aid on duty, Count Tossoni and Duke Cito, masters of ceremonies.

Immediately afterward the distinguished guest was escorted to the door of the king's apartment, which when thrown open revealed his majesty standing with arms outstretched and with a smile upon his lips. His majesty wore the uniform of a general of the Italian army. His words of welcome, spoken in excellent English, were cordial. King Victor and Mr. Roosevelt shook hands heartily, the monarch inviting the former President to sit at his side. The door of the apartment was then closed and the two remained in private conversation for about three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. Roosevelt, it is said, expressed the pleasure he felt in again meeting his majesty following the short interview which they had a vaar ago at Messina on board the battleship Re Umberto.

The king, it is learned, said he had been awaiting with great interest the return of the ex-President, as he had desired to hear from his own lips the report of his African adventures, which his majesty had followed as closely as possible. Mr. Roosevelt gave a brief account of his shooting experiences, and later expressions of friendship on behalf of their respective countries were exchanged, the Italian sovereign reiterating his admiration for America.

Following the audience Mr. Roosevelt said that the king had been so gracious and flattering both to him personally and to his country that he felt that he should not make public anything concerning their conversation.

The formalities of the reception concluded, King Victor personally conducted Mr. Roosevelt to the hall of the palace where the American inspected the hunting trophies of the king's father and grandfather. When the time came to say goodbye his majesty invited Mr. Roosevelt to drive with him tomorrow morning. The sovereign explained that though they would dine together at court tonight, he desired to see and talk with his guest further alone.

From the Quirinal Mr. Roosevelt drove to the Pantheon. Beyond the charm of its ancient memories, this spot is sacred as it contains the tombs of Raphael, King Victor Emmanuel II, the "father of his country," and King Humbert. At the entrance of the temple Mr. Roosevelt was saluted by the veterans of the wars of Italian independence, who for thirty-two years have guarded, day and night, the tomb of their chief.

The guest shook hands with each of the veterans, congratulating them upon the honorable duty in which they were engaged, and saying that he had wished not to leave Rome without paying a tribute of respect to the memory of the founder of united Italy. He brought two wreaths, which were placed upon the tombs of Victor Emmanuel II and Humbert.

Mr. Roosevelt was received formally by Dr. C. Ricci, director general of the department of fine arts, who represented the ministry of instruction. Other present were Mgr. Baccari, royal chaplain of the Pantheon; Commander Andrew T. Long, American naval attache; Prof. Jesse B. Carter, director of the American School of Classical Studies at Rome, and several other Americans. Rain was falling at the time, but outside the Pantheon a large crowd had gathered, and as Mr. Roosevelt left the place he was cheered.

A pleasing incident at the Pantheon was a chance meeting between Mr. Roosevelt and the Queen Dowager.

STATE TAX RATE FIXED

Shows a Heavy Increase Over That Of Former Years.

Annapolis, Md., March 30.—From the Senate finance committee there came last night the bill fixing the State tax rate for 1911 and 1912. It was introduced under suspension of the rules.

For 1911 the tax rate is to be 22 cents on the $100, and for 1912 it is to be 23½ cents.

The apportionment for 1911 is 16½ cents for public schools; 4½ cents to meet interest and create a sinking fund for the redemption of the State roads' loan; one cent for the State Insane Hospital loan; one-quarter of a cent for the public highways loan of 1910, and one-eighth of a cent for the sanatorium loan.

For 1912 the terms are similar, except that the tax for the State roads loan is increased to 5½ cents and that for the public highways loan of 1910 is increased to one-half cent.

Accompanying the tax rate bill came the general appropriation bill and the omnibus bill making appropriations to various institutions and schools. Included in the latter measure is an appropriation of $25,000 to the Johns Hopkins University for each of the years 1911 and 1912. The items in the omnibus appropriation bill for institutions have already been published. The bill for the support of the State government contains the usual amounts for the salaries of judiciary, executive and other State officials and for the support of the public schools. The amount of the latter appropriation is $1,450,000.

Discussing last night the increased State tax rate, Chairman Price, of the finance committee, pointed out that the increase was due to new provisions for the State care of the insane, to increased accommodations to be provided for tuberculosis sufferers and to the State road loans.

The new loan for the State sanatorium adds one-eighth of a cent; for the State care of the insane one cent; for the new highways loan—that for a Baltimore-Annapolis boulevard and bridges—one-quarter of a cent, and for the State road loan of 1908, 4½ cents.

Two years ago, Mr. Price points out, the levy for school purposes was only 13½ cents, the balance of the money required being taken from the general treasury. Then, too, Mr. Price says, the sum of $150,000 was realized from the inheritance tax.

A Card.

OAKLAND, Md., April 4, 1910.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:

The champion of the Mountain Lake Park Association, who is also a champion of the liquor interests in Baltimore city, said in a speech in the House of Delegates last week, that I had paid but $4 taxes during my residence in the Park. He hardly made that statement of his own knowledge but at the instance of some of the lobbyists for the Association. Every one in this community knows that the statement is a willful and malicious lie, but those at a distance may not have this information, hence I wish to say that I have been a taxpayer in Mountain Lake Park for over twenty years and have paid taxes on my own account to amount of about one hundred dollars, and on my wife's account to amount of over one hundred dollars. Besides this I have paid for lots over one thousand dollars, which cost the Association originally less than twenty dollars.

I am not informed why I was singled out by the Association's immaculate champion to be held up to ridicule, but surmise that it was because I am an old Union soldier, and all in this community know that a number of the present management of the Association have no love for the "boys who wore the blue," as evidenced by their act a few years ago.

All that the citizens of Mountain Lake Park ask for is the right of local self-government. JAS. A. HAYDEN.

Use 20,000 Balls A Season.

Twenty thousand balls are used annually by the major league clubs during the training trips and championship campaigns. John Arnold Heydler, secretary-treasurer of the National League, reports that last year the teams in his organization called on the manufacturers to furnish them 800 dozen spheres. The Reds used the most balls, and then came the Pirates, the Cubs, the Giants, the Phillies, the Doves, the Superbas and St. Louis. The watchdog of the National League treasury will not tell what price the clubs pay for the official balls, but Charles D. White, one of A. G. Spalding & Bros. ambassors, insinuates that persons who guess that a major league club spends about $1,000 a year for spheres are not far out of the way. Each ball, therefore, costs probably 80 cents. The price of the spheres varies from year to year.

PRESENT DAY RAILROAD EQUIPMENT

Major J. C. Pangborn, of the B. & O., Gives The Republican Readers Some Interesting Information.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Included in the orders for new motive power and equipment recently placed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad were 25 high-power passenger locomotives of the Atlantic type, which are now being delivered and placed in immediate service. These locomotives are designed to meet the present day demands for speed, comfort and safety and in them is represented the most advanced art in the construction of high speed locomotives. The Atlantic type engine is a modification of the old American type, the modification consisting in the addition of a "trailor" truck for carrying the larger firebox found necessary for hauling the heavy express trains. The fireboxes of these locomotives are six feet wide by nine feet long, or about the size of a single bedchamber in one of our seaside hotels, and therefore need a special means for carrying, hence the "trailor" truck. The height of the firebox is seventy inches, or high enough for a man of ordinary height to stand erect when inside.

With the cabs constructed of steel, a new departure in locomotive building, the engines have two pairs of driving wheels 80 inches in diameter, three revolutions of which would carry a locomotive across a 30 foot street. The total length of the engine and tender is 38 feet 7¼ inches, or longer than necessary to reach from house to house across a 30 foot street.

The weight of the locomotive, including the tender, is about 350,000 pounds, or 175 tons; in other words, bringing it down to ordinary measure, it would represent a weight equivalent to 175 cartloads of dirt, which if strung out close together in a line, would make a train of carts 2,800 feet long, or over half a mile in length The capacity of the tender for coal and water for the locomotive is 7,000 gallons of water, or 222 barrels, and 15 tons of coal.

The Atlantic type locomotive will haul on a straight level track a passenger train of 25 passenger coaches, 10 baggage, 7 Pullman and 8 postal cars, a total of 50 cars in train, at a speed of 40 miles per hour, and is capable of hauling a passenger train or ordinary size at a speed of 80 miles per hour.

As a means of safety the engines are equipped with the latest type of automatic high-speed driving and truck brakes to all wheels of the locomotive. The high-speed brake permits the locomotive to be run for a maximum proportion of the time at the highest speed, with as little loss of time as possible to bring it to a full stop.

The boiler is 73 inches in diameter and contains 347 tubes for the raidiation of heat through the boiler 2¼ inches in diameter and 15 feet 1 inch long. These tubes, if in one continuous pipe, would have a length of 3,726 feet, or nearly three-quarters of a mile.

To further prevent loss of time the locomotives are provided with a water scoop for filling the tank with water while the train is in motion. These scoops are controlled by cylinders operated by compressed air. The locomotive bells are operated by pneumatic bell ringers to enable the fireman to give more attention to the firing of the locomotive.

He Knew a Good Time.

Little Herbert, aged 4, and several of his little friends were being given a party by his parents. About 4 o'clock, before the lunch was served, Herbert's father took them all for a sleigh ride to whet their appetites for the dainty feast to follow. His father, noticing that his little son was very silent, asked, "Well, Herbert, what's the matter, aren't you having a good time?" With a very sober expression he answered, "Why, we haven't begun to eat yet."

CROSSING THE SEA IN 1818

What Ocean Travelers Contended With a Century Ago.

Nowadays it cannot be said that ship captains have such reverence for recorded detail of a trans-Atlantic trip as did Capt. Llewellyn Davies, of the brig Albion, which voyaged from Wales to New York in the year 1818—92 years ago. A description by the Welsh captain of icebergs passed off the Grand Banks during that memorable passage may be worth attention.

"On June 11," said he, "we passed an immense iceberg. Many of the passengers got out of bed in a fright, but we kept a safe distance from it. It was a grand sight to see it glittering beautifully on the face of the water. Later we passed near a great number of bergs, some appearing as large as the mountains of Merionethshire,"

Those who have not been fortunate enough to see these Welsh hills must let their imagination create the comparison; at any rate, the berg must have been of good size, and the incident was one of many carefully described by Capt. Davies in an old record printed in Welsh recently unearthed in Liverpool. In these commonplace days of commerce and the routine of many voyages icebergs and other things do not receive much notice.

"June 24 was rather calm," remarked the skipper, "but the aspect of the day must have changed when, toward evening, two women quarreled furiously. They had been washing and had hung their clothes up to dry, one putting them so that the dropping fell on the other's clothes; hence the assault. They were both condemned to wash the lower deck for three mornings, but one, being obstreperous, had to be threatened with the stocks."

It may be seen that feminine quarrels were not unknown aboard the Albion and that some unusual punishment might be meted out to offending passengers. As a matter of fact, a committee was appointed after the vessel sailed which laid down rules for the travelers and to which disputes and quarrels were referred.

The first rule provided for the proper observance of the Sabbath, when all were "to attend divine service decently dressed, punctually at 10 A. M.; the second rule prohibited swearing and the use of bad language, an offender in this to be put on half allowance of water and compelled to wear a badge; any one found guilty of stealing was to clean the lower deck for a week and to wear a certain distinctive badge," and there were other rules for the general behavior, the violation of which called for various punishments, the most rigorous being that of the stocks. The rules committee consisted of seven men, heads of families.

The voyage began on May 18, when the tug passed out of sight of the ancient walls of Carnarvon Brisk events began to occur immediately after the passing of Head of Kinsale.

"Having passed Cape Clear, we met a vessel belonging to the King's navy, which fired one of its great cannon, ordering us to stop that we might be searched. These vessels are placed to watch that no artisans leave England and also to examine whether there is sufficient food and water on board for three months."

Two happenings of like interest would seldom enliven the passage of a presentday passenger ship. The first two weeks of the Albion's voyage were rough and the "doctor was more in request than the cook." At the end of that time the post packet, Duke of York, carrying mails from Halifax to England, was sighted. She asked whether any passengers of the Albion wished to return, but this was a calm day and none volunteered to go back home. Some heavy weather followed and many regretted they had not taken the chance.

That was a tempestuous June, according to the old account, and it took many days before the antipathy toward the cook was overcome by all on board. The vessel "rolled about fearfully" for days. An American brig was spoken 17 days out from Quebec for Liverpool. On June 18 a child passenger died and was buried at sea; a vessel came toward them which they feared was a pirate, but it stood about on the other tack when a mile away.

In this way the Albion, carrying in cramped quarters many who were to make citizens of great America, fared to the westward with creaking yards and bellying squaresails. On July 6, 45 days out, the cry of "land" was raised. The Captain came on deck and "it was soon ascertained that the vessel was in sight of Landmark Hills, L. I., about 18 miles out. A service of prayer was held and at night we could see the approaches of New York harbor."

"Ambrose light vessel abeam at 9.30 o'clock," or whatever time it may be. Such is the meager record of arrival usually written in a liner's log on reaching the port of New York these days. In the Albion's time the skipper took more account of details, perhaps being influenced by the importance of first impressions.

"The next day, July 7, we had a good prospect of the scenery; the pilot came on board, and by 9 p. m. we anchored. A customs officer and health inspector came on board and we were given high commendation for cleanliness. Each passenger was given a passport for which a charge of 50 cents was made, and a vessel was hired to take them to Albany. After passing the customs officer they went ashore."

Thus ends the old account of Capt. Llewelyn Davies, of Carnarvon. Of the subsequent voyaging of the Albion nothing further is said. Perhaps she returned to Wales to bring more sturdy emigrants to young America.

THE GRANGE

NEW NATIONAL LECTURER.

Oliver Wilson, Master Illinois State Grange, Chosen to High Office.

Oliver Wilson of Peoria, master of the Illinois state grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and recently chosen lecturer of the national grange, was born in Belmont county, O., in the year 1849. His antecedents were Welsh and Scotch.

He first became a member of the grange in 1873 and has the distinction of being the youngest charter member of Magnolia grange. His capabilities did not go unnoticed by his fellow members, and to show their appreciation of his rare attainments they elected him master of the Illinois state grange some fourteen years ago, which exalted position he has held with great credit to himself as well as the Order ever since. Two measures which have been earnestly advocated by the grange have been enacted into law in Illinois—the two cent passenger railroad rate and local option. Master Wilson believes that no injustice has been done the railway companies by the two cent rate passenger bill, as the very material increase in travel and the doing away with free passes will compensate for the reduction in fare. During the session of the legislature Mr. Wilson appeared before the committee having the local option bill in charge, presented the claims of the grange and was accorded a most respectful hearing. This measure became a law, giving the farmer the right to express his opinion at the ballot box as to whether the legalized saloon shall exist or not.

Master Wilson believes that the present complicated primary law is a step backward and that it does not meet the requirements of the people. He believes that an appeal should be made to the legislature to repeal the present law and that a direct primary law be enacted giving to the people the right to express their preference regarding nominations for all offices without regard to party affiliations.

Mr. Wilson feels the pressing demand for the passing of a judicious parcels post law. He believes that this government cannot afford to discriminate against her own citizens in favor of any foreign nation.

Master Wilson urges that the grange should with renewed energy use every legitimate means within its power to secure a deep waterway connecting the gulf of Mexico with the great lakes and the lakes with the Atlantic ocean.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

THE NECESSITY FOR THE MILLENNIUM.

"Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts iii, 19-21.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 3.—Pastor C. T. Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached here twice today to splendid audiences. One of his discourses was entitled, "The Overthrow of Satan's Empire." The other, which we report, was on the necessity for the Millennium from the text above quoted. Pastor Russell said:—

Respecting two matters there can be no question:—

(1) That the early Church thoroughly believed in a Millennial Kingdom, hoped for it, prayed for it—"Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

(2) It is equally certain that today the doctrine of the Millennium is tabooed as "out of date"—out of harmony with the views of the Higher Critics and Evolutionists, who are filling practically all the chairs in our colleges and the majority of the pulpits of Christendom.

What has led to this radical change on the part of the religious wise men of all denominations? Have they taken a step in advance or are they departing from the path—from the teachings of the inspired Word of God? That they have left the Word of God, that they make light of it, that they profess far more wisdom and ability than the writers of the Bible and a higher intellectual inspiration than they, is indisputable. The question for us is, Will Christians in considerable numbers follow these leaders away from God, away from all Divine revelation? Will we put our trust in literary princes who claim the right to instruct the world, not by Divine appointment or authority, but by virtue of their large amount of self-esteem?

The present day concept of the Church of Christ is that God planted it amongst men as leaven in a batch of dough with the intent that it should propagate itself until the entire mass would be leavened. But the Bible apostolic concept of the Church's message is the very reverse of this—that it is planted in the world, not with a view to converting the world, but on the contrary to keep itself separate from the world and to draw to itself "As many as the Lord your God shall call" of the pure in heart—to sacrifice earthly interests for Divine interests, unto death, and later, by the First Resurrection, to enter into the heavenly glory of the Redeemer as his "Bride," his "Wife," his "Joint-Heir" in the Kingdom glory and the Kingdom work. And the work of that Kingdom is set forth to be the "blessing of all the families of the earth."

The two views are so radically opposite that none should confuse them in their minds. If one is right, the other is wrong. If one is Scriptural, the other is unscriptural. In the above item Dr. Brown admits that the Scriptural view entertained by the early Church contemplated the Church in suffering and in a temporary or tabernacle condition in the present life and promised a share with Christ in his reign in power and great glory, as God's Kingdom during the Millennium. The safe, the proper, the right course is to go back and take up afresh the doctrine of the Millennium—the doctrine that the faithful of the Church now being tried and tested will constitute the glorious Kingdom of God's dear Son after their change from earthly to spirit conditions in the "First Resurrection" (I Corinthians xv, 42-44).

The Laymen's Movement.

God bless the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League and Students' Missionary League and the Laymen's Movement, all intent on "Storming the world for Jesus." We bear them witness that they have a zeal for God which we greatly admire and would encourage. But their zeal is "not according to knowledge," and is therefore considerably misdirected. To any one of logical mind, who will reason from statistics, the thought of converting the world by singing a few rousing hymns or holding a few enthusiastic meetings for the collection of money! money!! money!!! would be childish. We do not despise childishness. We have all had our share. But we all should say with the Apostle, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things" (I Corinthians xiii, 11).

"Christian people have been fooling themselves long enough!" Yes, it is as absolutely irrational to think of converting the world, as it is unscriptural to believe that God ever gave us that impossible commission. The United States census reports show that there are twice as many heathen today as there were a century ago. The word heathen carries to many a very wrong impression. Many noble-hearted Christians have gone as missionaries to the heathen wholly unprepared for what they met—intelligent reasoning ability, etc. They found that the heathen were full of questions, logical questions, too, which they as Christians had never thought of, and which they were wholly unprepared to answer. Comparatively few of the missionaries are able to hold their own in argument with intelligent people in India, China, and Japan. There is no danger of their converting those people. There is more danger of their losing their own faith in the Bible, because of their misapprehension of some of its teachings—respecting the mission of the Church, the hope of the Church and the hope of the world!

Missionaries are thus handicapped! Full of commendable zeal they leave our shores to tell the heathen that their forefathers have gone to eternal torment and that they are going there, too, unless they accept Christ. It is a rude awakening to be asked where hell is? and why God should have condemned them and their forefathers to such a horrible eternity? and how this could be true and yet he be a God of pity, compassion, Love? The heathen ask, Why the different denominations—the different theories of the terms of salvation—by Water, by Election, by Free Grace, by joining the Church, etc. The missionary, wholly unable to answer the adult native, gathers children about him, starts a school and does all he is able perhaps, to justify his presence in a foreign land—helping the sick and doing many other acts of kindness which are very commendable, whether from a religious or humanitarian standpoint.

Preach the Gospel to All Nations.

Our Lord's instruction was that his people should preach the Gospel in all the world for a witness—not to convert all the world, but for a "witness" to all the world. The mission of the Gospel is to select the Kingdom class, a "little flock." The first opportunity to become members of this Royal Priesthood was offered to the Jews and, after the gathering of a remnant from them, and after their national rejection, the message was to go to the whole world irrespective of national lines, boundaries or language—anybody, everybody having the "hearing ear," was to be instructed respecting Christ and the opportunity of becoming his disciples by a full consecration of mind and body, time and talent, even unto death. These were to be promised the reward of a share in the First Resurrection, to be members of the Royal Priesthood which, during the Millennial Kingdom of Messiah, will bless all the remaining families of mankind—all the non-elect.

We are not complaining about the failure to convert the heathen! We are not faulting the missionaries! We are taking the Bible stand that all of God's purposes are being accomplished; that God's Word is accomplishing "that whereto it was sent" (Isaiah lv, 11); that it was not sent to convert the world, but to gather an "elect" sample or "first-fruits" from all nations (Revelation xiv, 4). Let civilizing influences continue in heathendom, as well as in Christendom. But let all Christians, missionaries and others, know assuredly that their labor is not in vain if they are seeking for the Lord's jewels to the best of their ability. I am in touch continually with laborers in India and Africa and well know that the pure Gospel of Christ is not greatly affecting their teeming millions. But the Gospel of the Kingdom is seeking out, blessing, sanctifying, happifying, encouraging some here and there; some, who have ears of faith to hear, eyes of faith to see, and obedient hearts to obey the "call" to suffer with Christ and by and by to reign with him for the effectual blessing of all the families of the earth, by uplifting the willing out of their present conditions of sin and degradation and death.

The Millennium a Necessity.

We have shown the value and necessity for the doctrine of the Millennium—that all Christians who would hold fast to their Bibles as a faith-anchor and who would make progress in their study of the Word and be co-laborers with God in the gathering of "the elect" need to see that the elect only are now called to be heirs of the Kingdom for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come." They need to see that that Kingdom is God's provision for the future blessing of the non-elect. They need to see that the Bible does not teach, as many of them suppose, that the saints are called of God to sit in the heavenly balcony and look over at the non-elect in eternal anguish, and hear their cries.

Next let us note that the Millennium itself is an absolute necessity for the world, according to the statistics of the worldly wise. Many college professors and D. D.'s are inclined to speak glibly of the Second Coming of Christ being far in the future—"fifty thousand years yet," say some. But evidently these learned gentlemen have not used their educational advantages in connection with such statements. Any school boy can figure up what the population of the earth would be one thousand years from now, taking the present population as per the census at sixteen hundred millions and the ratio of increase as shown by the census reports at 8 per cent in ten years. The total would show 3,375,325,000,000 population for the year 2000 A. D.—more than 2,000 for each person now living.

What would humanity do if the earth were crowded to that extent? Where would the necessary food, fuel and clothing be found? Computing all the tillable portion of the earth at twenty-five million square miles or sixteen billion acres would give but one acre for the support of two hundred and ten people, or less than five square yards each. At the close of a second such period, 3900 A. D., at the same rate, there would be ten persons for each square foot of standing-room. In other words they would stand fifteen deep on each other's heads. What shall we think of the wisdom that tells us that the Millennium is fifty thousand years off? The answer is found in Isaiah's prophecy (xxix, 14).

Are we asked how the Millennium if at once introduced would avert the difficulties of the first statement, two hundred and ten people for each acre of the habitable earth? We reply that the Scriptures clearly intimate that the rapid increase of our race is associated with man's fallen condition; as our Creator declared to mother Eve after her disobedience, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrows and thy conception" (Genesis iii, 16).

The Earth Shall Yield Her Increase.

The Scriptures also intimate that with the return of humanity towards perfection the average increase will be less, and that eventually the human family will come to the condition where there will be neither marriage nor giving in marriage, and where sex conditions will be lost in a uniform standard of humanity embodying the qualities at present displayed in the two sexes. Further, God's promise for the Millennium is that under his blessing the earth will yield her increase and the waste places be reclaimed, springs breaking forth in deserts. Furthermore, recognizing the Divine power in connection with the matter we can readily see how vast continents can be raised in the Atlantic and in the Pacific Ocean. But aside from these miracles which properly enough could accompany the Millennial Kingdom of Christ, what can the world who ignore the Bible expect? In other words what shall they expect who claim that the present order of things is to continue, saying, "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the world?" (II Peter iii, 4.)

Some may inquire, What about the resurrection of the millions who have died? We reply that the world has been only gradually working up to its present dense population. The people living in the world for the past six thousand years, according to what we believe are trustworthy evidences, would number altogether about twenty thousand millions. But more than twice that number could be buried in the State of Texas in separate graves and more than eight times that number could find standing room in Texas, as a school-boy with his pencil could readily demonstrate.

But we need not look a thousand years ahead. The world will find itself in great trouble very shortly unless the Millennium be ushered in. Already there is a shortage of timber. What will be the condition of things one hundred years from now? Already our capitalists are buying up the coal deposits on speculation, realizing that its rapid consumption is making it more valuable every year. Already geologists are calculating the number of tons of coal not yet mined and telling us that with the present average of increase in the consumption of coal the entire supply of the world will be exhausted in less than two hundred years. What will be the price of coal as the vanishing point is neared? and how will mankind do without it, and without wood for fuel unless the Millennium come promptly with its miraculous provisions?—the taking of fuel from our atmosphere, and from water, by methods which will, no doubt, be simple, when mankind come to understand them fully, but which at present are so expensive as to be of little service.

Other scientific men have been studying the increase of insanity and telling us that progress in this direction is terrific. Some have estimated that in less than two hundred years the entire world, at the present rate, will be insane. How opportune it would be for the Millennial Kingdom of the great Life-Giver to be ushered in with its uplifting influences, mental, moral and physical!

Last but not least the combination of wisdom and selfishness in our day, known as Unions and Trusts, is so influential that prices in every commodity are rising. Yet the trusts are not quite ripe yet. Their managers have not fully learned their power. Gradually the upper and the nether millstones will apparently be drawn closer together, while necessity will force the masses through the hopper. How great would those "giants" become within another century or so, if the Millennium be not ushered in in the interim to "lift the poor and needy out of the dunghill"—using the scriptural figure of the work of the Kingdom (Psalm cxiii, 7.)

My friends, let us stick to the Bible and its Millennial theory. So doing we will be guided by the wisdom from on high and enabled to pray with the spirit and the understanding also, "Thy Kingdom come; they will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," and to labor intelligently as co-workers with God! Let us prepare as pupils in the School of Christ for the great work whereunto God has called us by the Gospel Message.

"Even so, Come, Lord Jesus; Come quickly!"

"Thy Kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth, even as in heaven."

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely known; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

OUR HIGHWAYS THE WORST.

Englishman Declares That He Found No Such Poor Ones Elsewhere.

While on a visit to this country recently Robert H. Jackson of Walburn Lodge, London, had during an interview occasion to criticise the condition of our highways. Mr. Jackson said: "No country I have visited has such poor roads as the United States. This is surprising to me, for if there is any improvement a nation can make that pays for itself it is the building of first class highways. I spent several weeks in Indiana—at Terre Haute—and as I am interested largely in farming I made frequent trips through the surrounding country. Some of the roads were six inches deep in dust, and in the winter, I doubt not, this dust becomes sludge. How the farmers can get to market with their crops is beyond me. Your roads wherever I have been are generally very bad. In England we have excellent roads, as in other countries of Europe.

"Road building and road improvement are done through the township unit system. Nearly every township has one or more steam rollers, and the cost of improving the roads or building new ones is borne by the property owners in proportion to the valuation of their holdings. Most of the modern roads of England have a foundation of brick—not of ordinary brick, but brick of large size. Upon this foundation are placed several inches of soil and on top of this soil bluestone, which is ground into the soil by means of the steam rollers. This makes a first class, durable road that will keep in good condition during all seasons of the year. Over here most of the roads are made by simply turning the turf and grading. At least that is how they impressed me."

NEW MODEL HIGHWAY.

Hummelstown Pike, In Pennsylvania, an Example For Road Builders.

A modern road is the Hummelstown pike, near Harrisburg, Pa. It is made of a mixture of water gas tar, cement, liquid asphalthum, road oil, carbolic disinfecting powder, sulphate of copper and oil of wintergreen. The sulphate of copper is used to prevent the oils from becoming ignited, and the wintergreen counteracts the odor of the others. There is nothing disagreeable about the smell. A curious effect of the mixture is its disinfecting power. During the past year there was not a single contagious disease in that section. The cost of applying the mixture is 5½ cents a square yard. The cement holds the dirt together like stone, and the oils make it waterproof, so that it readily sheds water. The road is never muddy and, unlike a tar road, does not become slippery in winter time. Frost has no effect on it at all, as the mixture will not freeze. The cost of applying is very small, as it is sprinkled on like water. That the method and the mixture are perfect successes has been shown the past summer. Despite the heavy automobile and wagon traffic, the road is perfectly smooth and very hard, and it has met the test in every way.

UNIQUE GOOD ROADS MOVE.

Rural Carrier In Brenham, Tex., Forms an Association.

William Burnes, carrier for rural route No. 9, from Brenham, Tex., to Independence, is a strong good roads advocate and has some original ideas about the best way to improve the roads.

Some time ago he started an independent movement to get the people along his route to help him keep the road in good condition and asked them to form an organization, to be known as the Good Roads association of R. F. D., No. 9, and to contribute monthly dues to such an organization to maintain a team to work on this road, dragging it with a split log drag or doing such other work on it as could be done by this team, he agreeing, without compensation, to superintend the work.

He sent out circulars to all the people along his route, setting forth his plans, and asked them to join the association.

On one occasion he met a large number that live along this route at Prairie Hill. The association was organized, and Mr. Burnes was elected manager, secretary and treasurer and F. W. Quebe and Carl Marcus directors.

English Highway Policy.

Two points in the recently proposed British bill to provide for the economic development of the United Kingdom and the improvement of the roads therein are worthy of notice in the United States. The program of the bill provides for special motor roads to be exclusively or chiefly for the use of motorcars, the road board having authority to improve existing roads or to construct new roads for that purpose. The board may acquire land for this purpose by right of eminent domain and may also acquire land adjacent thereto for a width 220 yards distant from the middle of the road, which land they may sell, lease or control, the increment therefrom being used for the maintenance or construction of this class of highways.

Some Good Roads Pointers.

Good roads mean as much as good crops to the farmers.

If macadam roads are to be maintained at their best, the sprinkling cart is a daily necessity.

The longer the delay in building good roads the greater the cost.

Until produce is hauled to market it isn't really produced.

If the road is poor, good horses and good vehicles count for little.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Salmon Timbales.

One pound can of salmon, one-half cupful of breadcrumbs, one tablespoonful of butter, melted; one tablespoonful of lemon juice, one-half saltspoonful of cayenne and four eggs.

Remove the bones and skin and chop the salmon fine. Mix with it the crumbs, butter and seasoning and moisten with the beaten eggs. Pack it closely in small buttered tincups, set them in a pan of hot water and cook in the oven half an hour. Turn out on a platter, pour hollandaise sauce around them and stick a sprig of parsley in each timbale.

How to Make Koumiss.

Have ready three perfectly clean beer bottles with patent fastenings. Scald them out thoroughly. Dissolve a yeast cake in one and one-half teacupfuls of lukewarm milk and add six teaspoonfuls of granulated sugar. Fill each bottle three-fourths full of fresh milk heated to blood warmth and pour one-third of the yeast mixture into each bottle. Shake hard for several minutes, cork the bottle tightly and clamp down the cork. Keep the bottles in a warm room until the contents begin to ferment thoroughly, then set in the ice chest until wanted.

Creamed Cod In Potato Case.

Boil and mash six good sized potatoes, add one egg, a gill of milk, salt and pepper to taste and beat until light. Pick and scald a pound of salt cod, drain and scald again. Now press fish until dry. Put a large tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan and add two tablespoonfuls of flour. Mix and add a pint of milk. Stir till it thickens and add pepper to taste. Grease a pudding mold and line bottom and sides with the potato. Add the cod to the cream and fill the center. Cover the top with potato and bake a nice brown.

Lemon Pie.

After removing the crust from two slices of bread, each one-half an inch thick, pour over it one cupful of boiling water and one dessertspoonful of butter. Stir until smooth as butter. Add the juice and rind of one lemon, one cupful of sugar, yolks of two eggs and a pinch of salt. Beat well, fill your plate and bake in a hot oven. Let cool. Frost with the white of two eggs and four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Spread on the pie and return to the oven to brown.

Handy Kitchen Measure.

Housewives and cooks have an Iowa man to thank for a measuring device which enables them to dole out as many as eight cupfuls of ingredients at once and feel sure that the amount is accurately measured. The device is a cylinder of generous circumference, divided into four compartments, each of which has the capacity of two teacupfuls. The cylinder has slits in it at these points, and along one side is a rod to which a thin slide is attached. This slide can be moved to any part of the rod and inserted in any of the slots, thus forming a vessel of the capacity required—two, four, six or eight cupfuls.

Aunt Hittie's Corn Bread.

Take three quarts of cornmeal and pour on enough hot skimmilk to wet the meal through. Let stand about half an hour until it cools, then add one pint of buttermilk, one cupful of flour, half a cupful of sorghum or sugar, two well beaten eggs, two teaspoonfuls of soda and two tablespoonfuls of salt. Mix all together thoroughly and pour into a large, deep pan or two deep basins well greased. Bake in moderate oven for four hours.

Pork Cake.

Chop together one pound each of fat salt pork and raisins. Pour over these one pint of boiling water and add two cups of sugar, one cup of molasses and two eggs, well beaten. Mix thoroughly, then sift in nearly five cups of sifted flour, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of cloves, mace and soda. Beat thoroughly and bake in two tins lined with buttered paper about one hour. A slow oven is needed.

Chopped Red Cabbage Pickle.

Chop (not too fine) one head of either red or white cabbage and two small peppers (remove seeds), one tablespoonful of mustard, one-half teaspoonful of cloves, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one tablespoonful of white sugar and mix with the cabbage and peppers. Boil about one pint of vinegar, pour over while boiling hot and put in a stone or glass jar.

Ink Stains on Linen.

Place the part of the article containing the ink spot into a bowl and pour milk over it to cover the spot and let it stand until the milk is soured, then wash in cold water and repeat the milk bath. You will then have removed the ink without injury to the cloth.

THE WHITE PLAGUE.

How to Ward Off the Dreaded Scourge of Consumption.

"How can I keep from catching tuberculosis? You say we breathe a whole colony of the germs into our systems every day. Is it pure luck that keeps a man from becoming a consumptive?"

This question is often asked of physicians, who tell you how great a percentage of the population has the disease, and you wonder how to keep out of that percentage yourself. The formula is simple. Every one gets the germs into his system, but if a man's condition is healthy they can't gain a foothold.

Avoid excess of every kind. If a man drinks or smokes too much he gives an opening for the attack of the disease germs. The corpuscles which nature made for the watchdogs of the system and which normally chase down and devour the injurious germs go to sleep at the switch and lose interest in hunting.

Don't eat too much.

Get all the fresh air possible. It's still free.

Sleep with your bedroom windows down from the top and up from the bottom, and open 'em as wide as possible. But avoid drafts.

If you work with a man who is uncleanly reform him gently, but firmly. It may be a man's privilege to go unwashed, but no man has a license to become a passenger train for disease bacilli which have limitless transfer privileges.

Don't work too much.

Don't rest too much.

If great care is taken there is no danger of infection even if you live with a consumptive. The patient must use a cup or paper that can be scalded out or burned. Clothing and bedding used by the patient must be boiled regularly. The patient's room must be kept free from carpets and hangings that would offer hiding places for germs. There should be separate dishes for the patient. There must be a generous use of antiseptics. The house must have plenty of fresh air and sunshine.

How to Keep Gold Embroidery Bright.

Gold embroidery is apt to cause many misgivings when a satin evening gown decorated in this manner is brought under review. However carefully the dress has been protected by soft tissue paper—opaque, black paper which is sold for the purpose—the smallest hole where air could enter will have had the effect of tarnishing the embroidery. To clean the gown is, however, fairly simple, ordinary stains being easily removed by rubbing the satin all over with stale breadcrumbs which have been sifted with a little powdered blue. To remove crumbs and powder a thorough shaking will be necessary, together with flicking with a clean handkerchief, the rubbing being repeated where necessary. For the gold embroidery there is nothing so useful as crimson velvet. A small piece should always be kept at hand, and both before the commencement of the season and also on taking off the gown each time it is worn the velvet should be rubbed briskly over the surface until the original sheen is reproduced.

How to Cure Hiccoughs.

There is a young woman who suffers great discomfort, sometimes sharp pain, from an occasional attack of the hiccoughs. She tried all the prescribed remedies, from deep breathing to plums fresh and preserved, without success. Nothing availed, the pain often lasting an hour or more, until she tried aromatic spirits of ammonia, a teaspoonful diluted in a little water. The relief was instantaneous. All subsequent attacks have been cured by the same means. The trouble in acute form is somewhat out of the ordinary, but the annoyance it entails makes it worth while to pass this hint along.

How to Treat Linoleum.

The way to prolong linoleum's period of usefulness is to keep it clean. Dirt ground into the finished surface by the tread of feet is the floor covering's greatest enemy. Linoleum needs no soap, ammonia or strong cleaning agents. A simple wiping with a cloth just moist with warm water is all that is needed. Once or twice a year give the linoleum a wiping of good furniture polish to renew its smooth surface.

How to Know Cooking Measures.

Young housekeepers are often at a loss when a recipe calls for a cup of anything to tell what kind of cup to use or how much a cup measures. The accepted measure is a stone kitchen cup and means that cup filled to the brim. It is equal to one-half pint. A cup of solid butter, milk, chopped meat or granulated sugar is equal to about half a pound. A cup of sifted flour is equal to one-quarter of a pound.

How to Brighten Your Piano.

Take a basin of lukewarm water, wet a piece of soft cheesecloth in it; then pour a few drops of kerosene oil on the cloth and rub lightly over your piano. Keep repeating until you have been all over the surface; then take a dry piece of cheesecloth and polish until it is glossy. Your piano will look like new and that dull, smoky look will all disappear.

How to Clean Asbestus Mats.

"I had a set of asbestus mats given to me," said a housekeeper, "which kept my table from scarring and were a joy to me until they got so soiled I thought they must be thrown away. A friend told me to put them on top of the hot coals in the range to clean them. I did. The dirt was burned off, and they were as clean as when new."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson II.—Second Quarter, For April 10, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. ix, 35, to x, 15, 40-42—Memory Verses, ix, 37, 38. Golden Text, Matt. x, 8—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This is the only lesson we have on the whole of that most important section, chapter x, and we begin with the closing words of chapter ix, telling of Jesus going everywhere preaching the gospel of the kingdom and showing the power of the kingdom in mortal bodies, healing every sickness and every disease. The shepherdless condition of the multitudes filled Him with compassion for them, and the plentiful harvest and scarcity of laborers led Him to say to His disciples, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." There is something so strangely mysterious about it all to us earthly minded people that we cannot grasp it except the Spirit shall enlighten us. Here is the Lord of the harvest Himself, the King of the kingdom, manifesting His power over the souls and bodies of people and over wind and wave and full of compassion for people, but He wants associates from among men to whom He can intrust His power that they may go forth in His name and do as He had been doing. That is all wonderful, reminding us of Isa. vi, 8, where we hear the one living and true God in the persons of the Trinity saying, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" The wonder on our part is that so few respond to such an honor. But why should He ask us to ask Him or His Father to do this? Is it that in asking Him we may offer ourselves, saying, "Here am I; send me?" Would we be honest in asking Jesus Christ to send forth laborers into the wide world to work for His great cause if we did not first offer Him ourselves?

After an all night of prayer to God He had chosen twelve that they might be with Him and that He might send them forth, and now He gives them all the power that He had been manifesting and sends them forth by two and two to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick (Mark iii, 13; Luke vi, 12; ix, 2). When the kingdom comes we shall find the twelve apostles (some one in Judas' place) on twelve thrones ruling the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. xix, 28), but it will still be His power conferred upon them. It is true now and always will be—apart from Him, nothing. All power in heaven and on earth is His. How is it that we know so little of it? Are we not wholly His, fully yielded, simply trusting, willing and obedient? Has He not said, "As the Father sent Me, so send I you?" These twelve were, however, to go only to Israel at this time, not to gentiles or Samaritans (verses 5, 6). And to the woman of Canaan we hear Him saying, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. xv, 24). He worketh all things after the counsel of His own will, according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself, and we must be fully in that purpose and will, whether it refer to the Jew, gentile or the church of God (Eph. i, 9, 11; I Cor. x, 32). Dr. Scofield says in his notes on this chapter that the mission of the twelve was that of heralds, announcing to Israel only the kingdom as at hand, endued with the divine credentials of their office and manifesting kingdom powers. Verses 16 to 23 cover in a general sense the sphere of service during this present age, while verse 23 has in view the preaching of the remnant in the time of the tribulation and immediately preceding the return of Christ in glory. The remnant then will not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Lord comes.

If any cannot receive this suggested division let him lay to heart the general principles, remembering that all need to hear of the grace of God, the present salvation by grace, the daily life of service, the enduement of the Spirit for that service and the coming of Jesus Christ to set up His kingdom.

In this age we are commanded to go into all the world and give the gospel to every creature (Matt. xxviii, 19, 20; Mark xvi, 15, contrasted with Matt. x, 6), our object being not the conversion of any part of the world, but the gathering out of all nations a people for His name (Acts xv, 14), that He may come again with these called out ones to reign over the earth (Rev. v, 9, 10).

We must give more attention to being faithful messengers than to caring for our personal needs. If we are faithful He will see to our need (Matt. vi, 33; Ps. iv, 19). It will help us to remember that He counts all good or ill treatment of His messengers as done to Himself (verses 22-25, 40-42). It is an evil world. We must expect persecution, but we must not fear to die for His sake (16-18, 28-31). He must be more to us than the dearest on earth or than life itself (37-39). Remember the analogy "sheep in the midst of wolves" (16) and that the calling of sheep is to be fleeced and killed and eaten. In special emergencies we can count upon the Spirit to do the talking through us (19, 20), but He should always be allowed to do this. All service shall be rewarded (verse 42; xvi, 27; Rev. xxii, 12). What reward can compare with being one with Him for time and eternity? (Rom. viii, 16; Rev. iii, 21.)

GRANGE IN MICHIGAN

Patrons Propose to Organize a Life Insurance Company.

There Are 809 Granges In the Wolverene State With 48,000 Paid Up Members—Patrons' Fire Insurance For Farm Buildings an Important Feature—Proportional Representation In the National Grange Again Recommended.

If there is a livelier grange state in the Union than Michigan we do not know its location. When the Patrons assemble in annual session there is something doing from the first roll call of delegates until those same delegates pack their trunks for home. The recent session was no exception to the rule. They were there and every one enthusiastic over the grange and anxious to lend a hand and a voice, too, to promote the interests of the Order. There were seventy-seven counties represented, sixty-three having Pomona granges represented by 103 delegates and 320 subordinate granges represented. The total number of granges in the state is 809 and of paid up members 48,000. The report of the treasurer showed that on Dec. 1 there was cash on hand amounting to $7,152.93, receipts coming in since that time bringing the total to $24,774.04; disbursements, $20,195.05; balance, $4,578.99. The committee on co-operation has received from percentage on trade contracts the past year a total of $8,508.32. The expenses of this subcommittee were $2,564.64, leaving $6,203.68 to the credit of the grange. At the direction of the executive committee this subcommittee purchased during the year 6 per cent Oklahoma school bonds to the amount of $13,000, the total cost, including premium and interest, being $14,881.70. On Dec. 1, 1908, the total securities and cash in the care of this subcommittee was $39,355.36. On Dec. 1, 1909, the total of same was $43,266.55, a gain of $3,911.19.

N. P. HULL,

There was a spirited discussion over a resolution favoring the assessment of the iron and copper mines, in which northern Michigan abounds, on ad valorem basis. The resolution was adopted after a long discussion. Another, urging members of the grange not to vote for any candidate for the legislature who would refuse to pledge himself, through the papers, that, if elected, he would vote for that candidate for United States senator who receives the most votes in the state primary, was adopted. Other resolutions approved were these: Relative to pure food, that the name and address of every manufacturer be placed on the package; that delegates to the national grange be instructed to work for representation in the national grange based on membership; that a law should be enacted restraining any board of supervisors from granting any franchise to any person or corporation to control the water power of any stream in the state without compensation, at the rate of 10 per cent on the capital invested in said franchise and at the rate of an increase of 1 per cent each year thereafter.

The matter of organizing a grange life insurance was discussed and referred to the executive committee to perfect details and complete organization.

In the report of the committee on forestry it was recommended that there be an increased extension of the farm wood lot and a reforestation of all lands not fit for farming. On good roads the grange approved the state aid policy. The committee on temperance presented a recommendation that all liquor and questionable amusements be barred from the state and county fairs and that local option is the best method of combating the liquor traffic. The annual report of the secretary of the State Patrons' Fire Insurance company was as follows: The company now has 7,368 policies in force, amounting to $12,445,617. The report shows that during the year 1,063 policies were written and between 300 and 400 increases and only 60 decreases. It has also written 2,100 reinspective policies.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1910.

THE legislature was a very expensive one, but that is not equivalent to saying that its value equaled its cost.

INDEPENDENT Democrats and Republicans will now get together to save the state from the dishonor cast upon it by the Crothers machine.

WHEN Citizen Roosevelt speaks somebody begins to dodge. He has a habit of always hitting upon a truth without regard for the wishes of those who dislike the truth told.

THE Supreme Court, in an opinion handed down by Mr. Justice Harlan, has said:

"Beyond question the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment had the effect in law to remove from the State Constitution or render inoperative that provision which restricts the right of suffrage to the white race. Thenceforward the statute which prescribed the qualifications of jurors was itself enlarged in its operation so as to embrace all who by the State Constitution, as modified by the supreme law of the land, were qualified to vote at a general election."

And yet a young, briefless, Democratic lawyer from Southern Maryland would have the people of this state enact a law in direct violation of that decision.

Back, back, back to the pines of Southern Maryland.

SAVE THE STATE'S HONOR.

Maryland is in the hands of a revolutionary junta. The Democratic legislature that passed with barred doors the bills dictated by the unscrupulous leaders of the Democratic party raised the banner of revolution. They have made imperative a call for the combination of all the forces of political rectitude. The patriotism of the men of Maryland is at stake. The bosses have made this state a spectacle for men and angels. It is in the most deplorable political condition of its entire history. The tide of reaction has swept back forty years and Maryland alone among the commonwealths is knocking at the door of state's rights. One of the leaders in the political incendiarism declared the Constitution of the State of Marvland to be above that of the United States. Were this not the vaporing of an empty pate it would be rank sedition. It would be a revolutionary assertion, a declaration that would range against the state all the other states of the Union and the concerted power of the federal government. The outburst was modified by a more astute Democrat into a statement that the Digges bills place Maryland's Constitution above the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. This modification does not alter the fact.

The Democrats know in their hearts that they have raised the banner of statutory rebellion. They appreciate to the full that, so far as they could effect the end, they have withdrawn Maryland from the federal compact—for that compact includes the despised amendments. They understand full well that they have set out upon the sea of political piracy. They do not need to be told that they have invited scuttling by a federal broadside. They appreciate the desperation of their case. They have put themselves in the most perilous plight of any body of Americans during the past forty years. They have degraded the state to the lowest point they could possibly drag it. They have entered upon a political filibuster in which the stake is the capture of the state pending the decision of the courts, which they hope to stave off until after they have had a vote upon the subject of the disfranchisement of the colored voter, with that voter, whose rights are affected, deprived of the ballot. They know full well that Major Venable was talking by the book when he warned those who shall be the active agents in the work of ravishment of the registration to prepare for a longer or shorter term of residence in the Penitentiary. As surely as the American citizens of this state who account their citizenship above the schemes of a revolutionary junta vastly surpasses in numbers the servile caterers to the band of desperadoes who have taken the high-handed course of political pollution, so surely will the wrongdoers be brought to book. The Republicans, the Independents and all decent Democrats banded in coalition of revolt against revolution will bring that end to pass.

Aroused through the passion appeal acts of the Democratic clique, the people demand that Maryland shall not be featured in the history of the country in connection with successful political outrages. Mr. Hanna has announced the intention of the Republicans in the citizenship combination that is already being fashioned to challenge the Democratic polluters at every step. They have sown to the wind and must reap the whirlwind. They have sown to the flesh and must reap corruption. The inevitable law of public retribution has been set to work, and the men who lightly assumed the role of defrauders of the guaranteed rights will find that they have reckoned without their host.

The flag has never been lowered over any element of the population once brought within its protection. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments are covered by the Stars and Stripes. The puny hands that have dared attempt to lower the flag in this particular will find that they laid hands of outrage upon the rights of the people, not alone of this state, but of the Union. It is the duty, it is the pleasure of the people of the country to see that in no instance shall any state seek to make its own distinction between what is and what is not the constitutional requirements to which it shall be held. The central government will not go back a step, and those who believe they have conceived a method of cheating justice while in the pursuit of their nefarious purposes will discover that the hand of the law is heavy and an aggregate offense no less culpable than an individual.

MARYLAND NULLIFICATION.

It is rather late in the day for the Maryland Legislature to declare the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States null and void. To crown its folly it should have also abolished the Supreme Court of the United States.

Several schemes have been devised for disfranchising the negroes in Southern States. The Maryland Legislature has tried it twice before and failed through the disapproval of the voters of the State. But this last measure is the most brutally unconstitutional method yet attempted of barring the negro from the polls.

Lest the majority of the Maryland Legislature deceive themselves as to the ingenuity of their plan, let them consider the plain letter and the full force of the fiteenth amendment.

1. The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

2. Congress shall have power to enforce the provision of this article by appropriate legislation.

The South Carolina nullifiers were content to nullify an act of Congress. They did not undertake to nullify the Constitution of the United States.—New York World.

BETTER EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

The problem of improving the public school systems in the country districts is deservedly attracting universal attention. It is conceded that one of the disadvantages that render farm life undesirable is the backward condition of our rural schools, and that the improvement of these schools would be an important factor in making country life more attractive. The United States Bureau of Education can, in cooperation with the school officials of the various states, render valuable assistance in securing the adoption of such changes as will establish the new kind of school recommended in the President's message to congress, which will give the farmers' children a proper education for country life. The extension of that bureau's activities along these lines will be urged by the Grange, and this matter will be brought to the attention of congress, so that suitable appropriations may be made.

The farm boy and girl have the same rights and should demand that school facilities in the country should be at least equal to the city school and that they be given an opportunity to receive a technical education along the lines of scientific agriculture and domestic science, thus placing them on an equal plane with others who have received this special training along other lines; provided always, of course, that they be first well grounded in the rudiments of spelling, reading, writing and arithmetic.

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

Man, Woman and Child Were Seriously Injured.

Three Austrians, a man, woman and child are in a hospital at Davis, W. Va., undergoing treatment for burns received at a camp which burned at Douglas. While their burns are rather serious they will recover. The fire originated from a spark from the oven and in the absence of a good supply of water little could be done to save the camp and it was soon reduced to ashes. The woman was burned by going into the camp for some article she wished to save, probably her purse. To add to the danger nearby was the dynamite house, containing 150 pounds of dynamite. It fell a prey to the flames; when the dynamite let go with a detonation that was heard for many miles around.

The man was blown about 20 feet from the house when the dynamite exploded and the wonder is that he was not blown to atoms. His burns was caused by the explosion which hurled fire brands in all directions. The stable was the only thing not burned at the camp. The fire spread to the woods and threatened further disaster by burning the timber. A force of one hundred men under the supervision of Supt. R. C. Weigel and Woods, Subt. F. W. Viering fought the fire and extingnished it by Tuesday morning. Eighty men were employed at the camp.

A Lady Enumerator.

Mr. Frederick T. Dorton, Supervisor of the Census in Baltimore city, has appointed all of the census enumerators who will do the work in that city, some three hundred being required. Out of the three hundred only eighteen women were designated, and Miss Irene Haulenbeek was number three on the list of eighteen. She resides on East Twenty-fourth street in Baltimore, and the territory to which she has been assigned embraces the street on which she lives and the adjacent streets, that of North Charles street, St. Paul and North Calvert street. Miss Haulenbeek spends every summer at Deer Park and often finds it pleasant to drive to Oakland where she has many friends.

Garrett County Farmers Missed It.

The necessity of raising more hogs is not arousing farmers in Maryland as it should. The necessary thing to do is to find out from a careful reading of newspapers how prices are soaring and for what, and endeavor to raise that which will meet the demand and receive the money for it.

Last winter a Baltimore paper printed an article showing that farmers should go into the business of raising hogs more generally, as there was good money in it, prices then being on the rise, and a leading town in Pennsylvania rescinded its ordinance about hogs within the town limits so that people, not farmers, could go into the business of raising hogs.

In Garrett county today there is a scarcity of pig products and if the warning given by the Baltimore paper in the winter had been heeded the farmers in Garrett would be money in pocket and would be enjoying the profitable situation.

In Baltimore county there is a scarcity of pigs, the Baltimore county farmer also having failed to heed the warning of last winter. Farmers in Garrett county now who have pigs for sale can command their own prices. H.

Mr. Harvey as a producer of maple syrup and sugar marketed half a ton of the product this season at a fair price. The crop was exceedingly short but the water produced more sugar to the barrel than for a number of years, the average being about thirteen pounds, and is accounted for because of the dryness which prevailed during the harvest.

Funeral of Miss Offutt.

The funeral of Miss Nellie Thornton Offutt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt, of Oakland, occurred last Thursday afternoon from the home of the deceased lady's parents, with interment in the Oakland cemetery.

The esteem in which Miss Offutt was held and the love entertained for her by the people of Oakland was beautifully expressed in the many floral tributes laid upon her bier by friends here and from other points.

The services were conducted by Rev. J. A. McClelland, of the Grafton Presbyterian church, who spoke feelingly of the blameless life lead by Miss Offutt, of her beautiful Christian spirit which was evident throughout her years of suffering and of the reward she has entered into by reason of her faith.

The funeral was largely attended by friends and relatives from Oakland and elsewhere.

Rev. E. Manges will leave Oakland this evening for Manchester, Md., a charge he served prior to coming to Oakland, where he will visit Rev. Flick and other friends for a few days and from that point will go on to York and other Pennsylvania towns where he will be the guest of relatives until the latter part of next week. In consequence of his absence from Oakland there will be no preaching service in St. Mark's Lutheran church Sunday.

Mr W. Creed Dunnington, of the Park, who has been operating the Creedmore Hotel at Grafton since early last fall, was in Oakland Monday on business connected with the reopening of the Chautauqua and Mt. Lake Hotels at Mountain Lake Park, which he operated very successfully last year. Mr. Dunnington has disposed of his interests at Grafton and will be at the Park within a few weeks to supervise some improvements to be made upon his leased holdings there.

Mr. Roy Hamill, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Hamill, was in Oakland yesterday for a few hours, going from here to Morgantown. He has accepted a position with a large mining company at Logan, West Va., as superintendent, at a lucrative salary, and will leave for his new field of work Monday morning. As an operator Mr. Hamill has been uniformly successful in his undertakings and the best wishes of a large circle of of friends in Oakland will follow him.

A young girl in Massillon, Ohio, is charged with slaying her older sister in order to obtain possession of her new clothes and hat. For more than a year she had been receiving mail at the general delivery wicket. More than one girl's road to a bad life has been by way of the general delivery. Many of the divorce has grown from the same source. Some regulation of the general delivery of letters to girls and young women, and, in fact, to any one who possesses a house address, is highly desirable.

Mr. J. E. Francis, of Punxatawney, Pa., arrived in Oakland last Thursday night and is making preparations to resume work on the State road. A number of cars of material is already on the way to Oakland and as soon as it is received work will begin. Mr. Francis expects his family here within the next ten days and should he be awarded the contract for the extension of the work on the road to McHenry he will probably remain here for a year. The contract for this piece of work is to be awarded today by the State Road Commission.

Mr. Gilead Broadwater, of near Grantsville, came to Oakland last Monday morning for the purpose of buying a number of horses for himself and some of his neighbors. Oakland as a horse market for good animals is becoming prominent in many sections of the country and as a result men come here from several states with the intention of buying. There were also present in Oakland on Monday buyers from Uniontown, Pa., and a nearby point in West Virginia. One breeder of animals sold a four year old colt for $225, while another farmer disposed of a team of large draft horses for $500.

State Senator Speicher and Delegate D. E. Bolden returned to Oakland yesterday morning from their Legislative labors at Annapolis. Later in the day Senator Speicher drove to his home at Accident, being accompanied by Mr. Henry Smouse, of near town. The county's representatives are somewhat chagrined because of the non-passage of several local measures, among them the killing of the Mountain Lake Park incorporation bill and the measure creating the Garrett County Electric Railway Company. Other measures that failed to see light after being referred to committees were the compulsory school attendance bill and the bill concerning the attachment of wages for debt.

ROOFINGS.

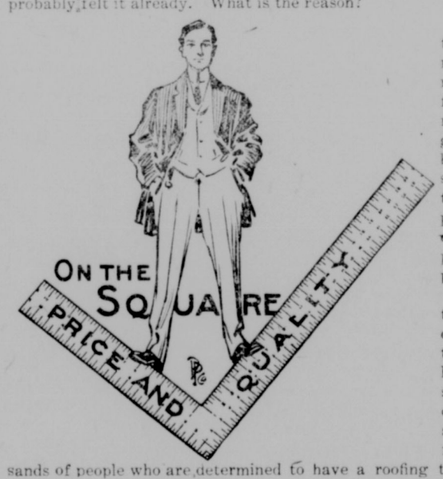
NEW YORK WASHINGTON CHICAGO

The General Situation on Ready Roofing March 1, 1910.

To J. M. Davis & Sons, Oakland, Md.:

The reaction against all cheap ready roofings is here.

Dealers in every state in the Union are feeling it and you too have probably felt it already. What is the reason?



It is now about three years since most of the cheap ready roofings were first put onto the market. They were good for a few years but that's all—tney sold on price and extravagant claims to people who had every reason to expect a high grade product.

The failure of thousands of these cheap roofs within the last few months has meant thousands of dissatisfied customers, thousands of roofs to be repaired and thousands of people who are determined to have a roofing that will last. This year, and every year after, you are going to have the greatest demand for a high grade ready roofing that you ever had.

IN CHOOSING ROOFING YOUR CUSTOMERS WILL NOW DEPEND UPON YOUR JUDGMENT MORE THAN EVER BEFORE. POINTING TO PAROID ROOFS THAT HAVE STOOD THE TEST OF YEARS AND YEARS OF WEAR WILL BE A CONVINCING ARGUMENT. THEY WILL SEE THE WISDOM OF BUYING THE ROOFING ABOUT WHICH THERE IS NO QUESTION AS TO QUALITY.

PRICES.

Isn't it an accepted fact that one usually gets what he pays for? It is just as true with ready roofing as with any other commodity.

While nearly all roofing manufacturers have been making ridiculously low prices on their "just as good" roofing, we have maintained the price of PAROID ROOFING. It is the highest priced ready roofing made. Not only have we maintained the quality of PAROID but we have improved it every year for the last twelve years and what's the result? PAROID ROOFS cost the owner far less in the end than any of the "cheapest first ost ready roofings."

Some manufacturers claim that their extremely low prices are made possible by large production and not inferior quality.

We do not care to boast of our size but it is a fact that we have three of the largest roofing mills in the United States and Canada running day and night the year round. We believe we are the largest producers of high grade ready roofing—we know we are the only ready roofing manufacturers to make roofing complete from felt to fixtures.

If we thought that our business and your business would be more permanent and profitable if we made a cheap roofing, quality considered, we could make a ready roofing as cheap as any other roofing manufacturer.

What other ready roofing manufacturer can show the following record: The United States Government bought almost the first lot of PAROID ROOFING ever made in 1898, twelve years ago. This roofing although exposed to most severe conditions is still giving good service. The United States Government is still one of our largest customers. Last year it ordered over a million square feet.

GUARANTEES.

Guarantees of all sorts are used to sell ready roofing of unknown value but read one of them and you will find that it becomes invalid if any of its many conditions are not fulfilled. Your customers stands every chance to lose on such guarantees. Your best guarantee on any thing you sell is your reputation but beyond that your standing guarantee, "If it is not right we will refund your money," is the strongest guarantee that can be made—it covers everything. That's why we say to you and ask you to say to your customers: "When you see PAROID on your building, if you are not satisfied tell us and we will send you a check for the cost of the roofing and the cost of laying it." If a broader guarantee than this could be made we would make it.

Yours very truly,

F. W. BIRD & SON.

CHAPTER X.

THE IRON COUNT.

WHEN King, in the kindness of his heart, grasped the old woman to keep her from falling to the floor he played directly into the hands of very material agencies under her control. The next instant something struck him in the face. Then with a fierce jerk this same object tightened about his neck.

A noose had been dropped over his head. As he was pulled backward his startled, bulging eyes swept the ceiling. Above him a square opening had appeared in the ceiling. Two ugly, bearded faces were leaning over the edge, and strong hands were grasping a thick rope. He was strangling. Frantically he grasped the rope, lifting himself from the floor in the effort to loosen the noose with his free hand. A hoarse laugh broke upon his dinning ears, the leering faces drew nearer, and then as everything went black a heavy yet merciful blow fell upon his head.

Not many minutes passed before consciousness, which had been but partially lost, returned to him. It was pitch dark, and the air was hot and close. Not a sound came to his throbbing ears. With characteristic irrepressibility he began to swear softly, but articulately. A gruff voice, startlingly near at hand, interrupted him.

"Spit it out, young fellow! Swear like a man, not like a blamed canary bird."

The hidden speaker was unquestionably an American.

"Where am I?" demanded the captive.

"You're here, that's where you are," was the sarcastic answer.

"Are you an American?"

"No; I am a Chinaman. I was born in Newport"—as an afterthought—"Kentucky."

"This is the worst high handed outrage I've ever"—

"Better save your breath, young fellow. You won't have it very long, so save what you can of it."

"You mean I am to stop breathing altogether?" asked the prisoner.

"Something like that."

"Why?"

"You'll find out when the boss gets good and ready. You wanted to get a poke at the old man's eye, did you? By thunder, that's like an American—never satisfied to let things alone. See what it got you into?"

"The old man's eye? What old man?"

"That's for you to find out, if you can. You've made a poor start at it."

"How do you, an American, happen to be mixed up in a deal like this?"

"It's healthier work than making barrels at—I was going to say Sing Sing, but I hear they've changed the name. I prefer outdoor work."

"Fugitive, eh?"

"You might call it that. I'm wanted in seven states. The demand for me is great."

That he had fallen into the hands of a band of conspirators was quite clear to King. Whether they were brigands or more important operators against the crown he was of course in no position to decide. Time would tell.

It was enough that they expected to kill him sooner or later. This in itself was sufficient to convince him that he was not to be held for ransom, but to be disposed of for reasons best known to his captors.

Like a shot the warning of Olga Platanova flashed into his brain. His guard had mentioned "the old man." Good heavens! Could he mean Spantz? The cold perspiration was standing on King's brow. Spantz! He recalled the wickedness in the armorer's face. But why should Spantz wish him evil?

The anarchists! The reds! Olga was an avowed anarchist. "By gad, they think I am a detective!" he exclaimed, light coming to him with a rush.

"What's that?" snapped the other. Truxton could almost feel the other's body grow tense despite the space between them. "Are you a detective? Are you? If you are, I'll finish you up right here. You"—

"No! They're on the wrong scent. By Jove, the laugh's on old man Spantz."

"Oho! So you do know what's up, then? Spantz, eh? Well, what you've guessed at or found out won't make much difference, my fine young fellow."

The glimmer of a light came bobbing up from somewhere behind Truxton. He could see the flickering shadows on the wall. Two men crept into the room a moment later. One of them carried a lantern; the other turned King's body over with his foot. Truxton saw that the three ruffians were great, brutal faced fellows, with bared arms that denoted toil as well as spoils. The third man grasped the prisoner by the feet, swearing in a language of his own. The Yankee desperado took his shoulders, and together, with earnest grunts, they followed the man with the lantern. He could see that they were crowding through a low narrow passage, finally depositing him with scant courtesy upon the rocky floor of what proved to be a rather commodious cave.

Daylight streamed into this convenient "hole in the wall;" lying upon his side, Truxton faced the opening that looked out upon the world. Near the opening stood the tall, gaunt figure of a man, thin shouldered and stooped. His back was to the captive, but King observed that the three men, with two companions who sat at the back of the cave, never removed their gaze from the striking figure outlined against the sky.

"BETTER SAVE YOUR BREATH, YOUNG FELLER. YOU WON'T HAVE IT LONG."

The watcher turned slowly to take in the altered conditions behind him. King saw that he was old, gray haired and cadaverous. This, then, was the "old man," and he was not William Spantz.

"Your name is King, I believe," came from the thin lips of the old man.

"Yes. May I inquire"—

"No; you may not inquire. Put a gag in his mouth. I don't care to hear anything from him. Gag him and cut the rope from his feet. He may walk from now on."

Three men sprang to do his bidding. King felt in that instant that he was looking for the first time upon the features of the Iron Count, Marlanx the dishonored. He lay there helpless, speechless for many minutes, glancing at this cruel tyrant. It was enough that Marlanx suspected him of being in the way. To be suspected was to be condemned.

Marlanx was speaking. Truxton looked up, as at an executioner. The Iron Count sat upon a bowlder near his feet.

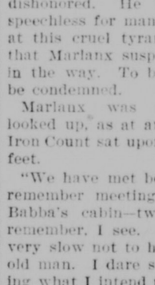
"We have met before. Perhaps you remember meeting my eye in Dame Babba's cabin—twice, I think. You remember, I see. Ha, ha! You were very slow not to have caught such an old man. I dare say you are wondering what I intend to do with you, now that I have you. Well, I am not the man to mince words. Mr. King, you are quite young, but the good die young. I am very old, you observe. I will not say that you are to die tonight or tomorrow or any day, for I do not know. I am going to send you to a court. Not an ordinary court, Mr. King, but one of extreme perspicacity. I fancy you will die before long. We can spare you. I do not approve of meddlers. It seems to be quite settled that you are a police agent."

The steady, cruel eyes fascinated King. He knew that he was in desperate straits.

"I am glad you called again at my temporary abode, Mr. King. Americans are always welcome; the sooner they come, the sooner it's over. It may interest you to know that I am very partial to Americans. Were I a cannibal I could eat them in relish. If I had my way, all Americans should be in heaven. The earth surely is not good enough nor big enough for them, and hell is already overcrowded. Yes, I love the Americans dearly. I should enjoy a similar visit from Mr. John Tullis. I expect him to visit me in my humble castle before many days. I should like to have him remain there until his dying day."

King shuddered.

"Night is coming. I must say farewell, my bold young friend. My way lies to the north. This is merely a land of promise to me. You go southward, to the city of Edelweiss. But not through the gates; oh, no! There are other ways, as you will find. Goodby, my brave Sir Galahad, I may never see you again."



"FAREWELL, MY BOLD YOUNG FRIEND."

With a courtly bow he turned from the tense muscled captive and directed his final instructions to the guards. With a curt nod to the men, he strode out through the mouth of the cave and was gone. Dusk had settled down upon mountain and valley. One of the men cut the rope that bound Truxton's feet.

"Get up," said the Newport man. "We've got to be movin'."

Still gagged and somewhat dizzy, King was hurried off into the narrow mountain path, closely surrounded by the five men.

The silent, cautious march down the valley, through the gap and along the ridge carried them far into the night.

This much he knew—they were in the hills directly above the northern gates. The vague, black shadow of a lightless house loomed up before them. In a twinkling he was hustled across the road and into a door, then down a flight of stairs, through pitchy darkness, guided by two of the men, a whispered word of advice now and then from the Yankee saving him from perilous stumbles. He was jerked up sharply with a command to stand still. A light flashed suddenly in his face, blinding him for a moment.

Soon he saw that they were in a broad, bare cellar; three men in heavy black beards were in earnest conversation with several of his captors; all were gesticulating fiercely.

His Newport companion enlightened him between puffs of the pipe he was struggling with. "Here's where we say goodby, young fellow. We turn you over to these gents, whoever they are. You go into the village gay with these 'swabs' by the sewer line, I guess." Truxton pricked up his ears. "The old man has had a hole chopped in the sewer here, they tell me, and it's a snap to get into the city. Not very clean or neat, but it gets you there. Well, so long! They're ready, I see. They don't monkey long when they've got a thing to do."

In another moment his guardianship was transferred; he was being hurried across the cellar toward an open doorway. Down a few stone steps he was led by the bearded crew, and then pushed through a hole in what appeared to be a heavy brick wall. He realized at once where he was. The gurgle of running water came up to him. It was the great sewer that ran from the hills through the heart of the city, flushed continuously by a diverted mountain stream that swept down from above.

He did not know how long they traversed the chill sewer. In time, however, the water got deeper; rats began to scurry along the sides of the circle or to swim frantically on in front of the disturbers.

At last the strange journey ended. They came to a niche in the slimy wall. Up into this the men climbed. The man above was cautiously tapping on what appeared to be solid masonry. To King's surprise a section of the wall suddenly opened before them. He was seized from above by strong hands and literally jerked through the hole, up narrow steps and then into a long, dimly lighted room, in the center of which stood a long table.

He was passed on into a small room adjoining. Some one, speaking in English, told him to sit down. The gag was removed from his stiff, inflamed mouth.

"Fetch him some water," said a voice that he was sure he recognized—a high, querulous voice.

"Hello, Spantz!" articulated Truxton, turning to the black bearded, bent figure.

There was an instant of silence. Then Spantz spoke, with a soft laugh: "You will not know so much tomorrow, Herr King. Give him water, man. He cannot talk with a dry throat."

King was pushed out into the larger room, where he was confronted by a crowd of bewhiskered men and snaky eyed women with most intellectual nose glasses. It required but a glance to convince him that the whiskers were false.

For nearly an hour he was probed with questions concerning his business in Edelweiss. Threats followed close upon his unsatisfactory answers, though they were absolutely truthful.

"We'll find a way to make you talk tomorrow, my friend! Starving is not pleasant."

"You would not starve me!" he cried.

"No. You will have the pleasure of starving yourself," said a thin eyed fellow whom he afterward knew as Peter Brutus.

He was thrown back into the little room. To his surprise and gratification the bonds on his wrists were removed.

He found a match in his box and struck it. There was no article of furniture. The floor was bare, the walls green with age. A chimney hole in the ceiling was perhaps the only means by which fresh air could reach this dreary place. Sleep was claiming his senses. He made a pillow of his coat and stretched his weary bones upon the relentless floor.

"No one will ever know," he murmured, his last waking thought being of a dear one at home.

CHAPTER XI.

UNDER THE GROUND.

THE second day after his incarceration began King was given food and drink. It was high time, for he was almost famished. Thereafter twice a day he was led into the larger room and given a surprisingly hearty meal.

Peter Brutus had just voiced the pleasure of the majority by urging the necessity for physical torture to wring the government's secrets from the prisoner. King, half famished, half crazed by thirst, had been listening to the fierce argument through the thin door that separated the rooms. He heard the sudden, eager movement toward the door of his cell and squared himself against the opposite wall, ready to fight to the death. Then there came a voice that he recognized.

A woman was addressing the conspirators in tones of deadly earnestness. His heart gave a bound. It was the first time since his incarceration that he had heard the voice of Olga Platanova, she who still must be his friend.

"No! You shall not torture him. I have said he is no spy. I still say it!" she was exclaiming.

"God, girl, we cannot turn him loose now. He must die." This was from Spantz.

"We cannot release him, I grant you," she said, and Truxton's heart sank. "Not now, but afterward, yes. When it is all over he can do no harm. But hear me now, all of you. If he is harmed in any way I shall not perform my part of the work on the 26th. This is final."

"You cannot withdraw!" exclaimed Peter Brutus. "You are pledged. You are sworn. It is ordained."

"I, Olga Platanova, say this to you. It is not a plea, not a petition; it is an ultimatum. Spare him or the glorious cause must suffer by my defection."

"Sh! Not so loud, girl! He can hear every word you say!"

"Let him hear. Let him know that I, Olga Platanova, am to hurl the thing that is to destroy the life of Prince Robin. I am not afraid to have him know today what the world will know next week. Then the world will say that Olga Platanova was not a beast, but a deliverer, a creator! Let him hear!"

The listener's blood was running cold. The life of Prince Robin! An assassination! "The thing that will destroy!" A bomb!

For half an hour they argued with her, seeking to turn her from the stand she had taken. Then they came to terms with her. Truxton King owed his life to this strange girl, who knew him not at all, but who believed in him.

Truxton was brought into the room a few minutes later. He was white with emotion as he faced the committee of ten. Before a word could be addressed to him he blurted out:

"You cowards! Weak as I am, I would have fought for you, Miss Platanova, if I could have got through that door. Thank you for what you have done to convince these dogs! Only don't do this awful thing! Think of that dear little boy!"

Olga Platanova cried out and covered her eyes with her hands. She was led from the room by William Spantz.

Peter Brutus stood over King, whose arms were held by two stalwart men.

"Enough!" he commanded. "We spare you not for her sake, but for the sake of the cause we serve. Hear me! You are to be held here a prisoner until our plans are consummated. You will be properly fed and cared for. You have heard Miss Platanova say that she will cook the food for you herself, but you are not to see her."

King interrupted him. "I haven't the least doubt that you will kill me in the end. She may not be here to protect me after—after the assassination."

"She is prepared to die by the same bomb that slays the prince," was all that Brutus would say in response to this, but King observed the sly look that went around among them. He knew then that they meant to kill him in the end.

Afterward, in his little room, he writhed in the agony of helplessness. The prince, his court, the government—all were to be blasted to satisfy the end of this sickening conspiracy. Loraine! She, too, was doomed! He groaned aloud in his misery and awe.

"WEAK AS I AM, I WOULD HAVE FOUGHT FOR YOU."

There was a telegraph instrument in the outer room. He could hear it ticking off its messages day and night and could hear the discussion of reports as they came in or went out. It soon became clear to him that the wire connected the room with Marlanx's headquarters near Balak, in Axphain, a branch instrument being stationed in the cave above the witch's hut.

On his third night he heard the committee discussing the conditions at the castle.

"The count is more afraid of this man Tullis than of all the rest," averred Peter Brutus. "He has reasons to hate and fear the Americans. That is why he desires the death of our prisoner. He has said time and again over the wire that King will in some way escape and play the deuce with our plans. It does not seem possible, however. We have him absolutely secure."

"This is the 22d; Saturday is the 26th. Nothing could be done to stop us in four days," said one of the women.

"Count Marlanx will be ready on the 26th. He has said so. A new strike will be declared on the railroad on the 25th, and the strikers will be in the city with their grievances. Saturday's celebration will bring men from the mountains and the mines to town. A single blow, and we have won." So spoke Brutus.

"We must not—we cannot fail," grated William Spantz, and the cry was reiterated by half a dozen voices.

The next morning, after a sleepless night, Truxton King made his first determined attempt to escape.

He knew that two armed men stood guard in the outer room day and night. The door to the stairway leading into the armorer's shop was of iron and heavily barred; the door opening into the sewer was even more securely bolted. Besides, there was a great stone door at the foot of the passage. The keys to these two doors were never out of the possession of William Spantz. One of his guards held the key to the stairway door. His only chance lay in his ability to suddenly overpower two men and make off by way of the armorer's shop.

When his little door was opened on the morning of the 23d Truxton King's long, powerful figure shot through as if sped by a catapult. The man with the candle and the knife went down like a beef, floored by a blow on the jaw.

The American, his eyes blazing with hope and desperation, kept onward, to find himself face to face with Olga Platanova!

"HE HAS NOT THE KEY."

She was staring at him with frightened eyes, her lips apart, her hands to her breast. He turned.

"He has not the key," she cried, "nor have I. You have no chance to escape. Go back!"

A key rattled in the door. When it swung open two men stood in the aperture, both with drawn pistols. The girl leaped between them and the helpless, defeated American.

"Remember!" she cried. "You are not to kill him!"

Peter Brutus had risen from the floor, half dazed, but furious. He made a vicious leap at King, his knife ready for the lunge.

"I'm glad it's you!" roared King, leaping aside. His fist shot out, and again Brutus went down.

"Miss Platanova, call your uncle," she was ordered. "It is now necessary to bind the fellow's hands. They are too dangerous to be allowed to roam at large in this fashion."

All day long Truxton paced his little prison, bitterly lamenting his ill timed effort. Now he would be even more carefully guarded. His hands were bound behind his back. He was powerless. If he had only waited! Luck had been against him. How was he to know that the guard with the keys had gone upstairs when Olga brought his breakfast down? It was fate.

The 23d dragged itself into the past, and the 24th was following in the gloomy wake of its predecessors. Two days more! He began to feel the approach of madness. His own death was not far away. It would follow that of the prince and of Olga Platanova, his friend. But he was not thinking of his own death; he was thinking of the prince's life.

Forty-eight hours! That was all!

Early that night as he lay with his ear to the crack of the door he heard them discussing his own death. It was to come as soon as Olga had gone to her reward. She was not there to defend him. Spantz had said that she was praying in her room, committing her soul to God. Truxton King suddenly pricked up his ears, attracted by a sentence that fell from the lips of one of the men.

"Tullis is on his way to the hills of Dawsbergen by this time. He will be out of the way on the 26th safe enough."

"Count Marlanx was not to be satisfied until he had found the means to draw him away from Edelweiss," said another. "This time it will work like a charm. Late this afternoon Tullis was making ready to lead a troop of cavalry into the hills to effect a rescue, Santa Maria! That was a clever stroke! Not only does he go himself, but with him goes a captain with 100 soldiers from the fort. Ha, ha! Marlanx is a fox—a very exceptional fox!"

Tullis off to the hills with soldiers to effect a rescue! Truxton sat up, his brain whirling.

"A wise fox!" agreed Peter Brutus thickly. "I wonder what our fine prisoner will say to it when the new prisoner comes to keep him company over the 26th."

New Method of Road Maintenance.

The road commissioners of a county in Georgia are considering a new plan for maintaining the highways. The idea is to organize a gang of road walkers, to be composed of free labor that can be sent anywhere in the county on short notice and without the expense of guards, as in the case of convicts. Superintendent Winship will be supplied with an automobile so that he can traverse the 555 miles of roads in the county and plan out the work in advance.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

BEING entirely satisfied with oneself is one of the very first essentials of being disagreeable.

If we could get out an injunction against ourselves restraining us from giving the things we so much want ourselves to some one else, perhaps we would be happier.

Sometimes men are disappointed because so many girls refuse to take an engagement seriously.

The best part of a woman's letter is apt to be on edge.

Moving Along.

How the years slip away,
Like the swift river's flow,
As softly they come
And as softly they go!
Our hand is extended
A new one to greet,
And, lo, ere we reckon
Its days are complete!

A stately procession,
They go as they came,
No slower, no swifter,
But always the same,
In joy or in sorrow
In pleasure or pain,
Proceeding unheeding
Through sunshine and rain.

They wait not for orders,
They halt not for kings,
They laugh at injunctions
And such puny things.
Strong chains cannot bind them
Nor slacken their pace.
No congress can cause them
Their steps to retrace.

They go, and in going
They leave not behind
A mark save on memory,
That book of the mind.
On down with the others
A well beaten track,
And never—no, never—
Comes one of them back.

"No, not a bit."

Mean.

"Too bad? What do you mean by that?"

"Yes."

"Dear me! Mr. Slowon, don't mention it. I hadn't noticed you were here."

Paradoxical.

"What! Me?"

"Yes, you! What made you act that way?"

"Just human nature, I suppose."

WORK FOR MARRIED WOMEN.

Professor Thomas' Views on Her Position in the World of Today.

Problem: How should the married woman occupy herself? A few decades ago the question, even if addressed to advanced students of sociology, would scarcely have been regarded as one involving anything seriously problematic. The answer would be simple—a married woman should occupy herself in making a home for her husband and rearing her children. Further elaboration of this obvious answer might suggest that the ideal wife, in order to make a true home, would participate sympathetically in whatever interests her husband, and would be unceasing in her care to provide her children with high incentives to right living. But her occupation would still be limited to that one sphere of activity—the home.

The sociology of today, however, does not content itself with the simple answers of the past. Woman's position in the world has become a sort of storm center with many students of social science, and the old ideals, popularly voiced in the fictions of Dickens and Thackeray, have been called in question. Copperfield's Agnes may have been capable, intelligent, devoted to wifely duties, but was she, after all, the best kind of wife? A sociologist, in analyzing her character today, might find her very charming and lovable, quite superior to Dora, David's first matrimonial venture, but he would, in all probability—if he were very up-to-date sociologist—dismiss her finally as being altogether too narrow in her way of looking at things and making the best of her opportunities.

Such, at least, would be the attitude, it is safe to say, of W. I. Thomas, professor of sociology in the University of Chicago.

A passage in one of Professor Thomas' articles deploring the "present abnormal and almost impossible matrimonial situation," suggested to the interviewer the opening wedge of a question: Why is the matrimonial situation abnormal and impossible?

"Because our married women have not, as a rule, interests and occupations that render them independent of their husbands," was Professor Thomas' quiet answer. "Dependence of the wife on the husband is one of the chief obstacles in the way of a truly normal, happy marriage."

"But in rearing children and in making and running the home is there not enough work, and of a suitable kind, for women to undertake?"

"A child is only an incident in the life of a woman. The woman whose activities are restricted to the rearing of children must inevitably find herself, sooner or later, without employment. If her children furnish her with her only, or her chief, occupation, she will be Oslerized at the age of 40 or 50. There is nothing more serious, of course, nothing more important to the future welfare of the community than the rearing of children. But the woman who knows nothing, through her own practical experience, of the world's activities, whose horizon is limited by the boundaries of her home, is really unfitted to bestow the best care on her children and is preparing for herself an unutterably dreary old age.

"There is no question of woman's ability," continued Professor Thomas, "to take up the work of the world. The difficulty lies in her lack of practice."

"And in her strength to add outside work to her already confining duties as wife and mother," was suggested.

"Physiologically woman is much stronger than man in matters requiring prolonged powers of endurance. She can do more work than man without suffering the breakdown that so often comes to him under the guise of that disheartening malady known as 'overwork.' Women's malady is underwork. Because she is the 'bearer of the torch of life' nature has endowed her with an amount of surplus energy that is more than sufficient to make her an active worker outside the home. This physiological superiority is well recognized by men of science, and is merely the result of statistical tests in various ways.

"But the outside occupation for the married woman, the occupation that will bring into her life the broadening influences of the world that lies above and beyond her little hearthstone and that will enable her to meet her husband on the common ground of the mutual friendship and esteem that is fostered by a mingling of independent and impersonal interests—where find this occupation? It should be of a renumerative character. Playing at work is a meaningless business, after all, and has been the cause, among other things, of forcing woman into her present artificial position. Moreover, it should adjust itself to the functions that come with motherhood. Woman needs work in order to become the best kind of mother; it is merely a habit of thought, based on a wrong premise, that leads her to the belief that an outside occupation should be abandoned when she marries.

"Woman, of course, will solve this question for herself—and she is solving it already. In Chicago—and I donotdoubt that much the same thing is in evidence in other great cities—the whole question of the relation of the child to the State is absorbing woman's attention and inspiring her to the development of innumerable new activities. Thus, it was the women of Chicago who brought about the segregation of children from adult criminals; it was the women, practically, who created our Juvenile Court and who subsequently organized the School of Detention for young criminals. The whole view of child life has been modified by women since they have thus interested themselves actively in a phase of it that has heretofore been left to the men, and the result in the future betterment of the race is quite beyond estimate.

"With woman once more taking an equal part with man in the work of the world, we may expect to see the development of a more humane society, an extension of 'the quality of mercy' that man, by the very composition of his nature, has not known how to use, but which, in the hands of woman, is bound to have a transforming effect on the world."

HISTORY AND USE OF BELLS

Their Ringing Has Told Of Grand Events In Affairs of Men.

Bells were used in India and China long before they were known in Europe. Their history is full of interest. In civilized times they have not only been associated with social and religious affairs, but also with a great many important historical events. In the year 1282 at the ringing of the Sicilian vespers 8,000 French were slain in cold blood by John of Procida, who thought that he would thus free Sicily from Charles of Adjou. Again on St. Bartholomew's Day 1572, bells gave the signal for the slaughter of the Huguenots to begin, while, to come to later years, when the news of Nelson's victory and death came to England the bells of Chester rang a joyous peal, alternating with a single toll of the passing bell. Bells have rung over both victorious and defeated cities, and indued, through the whole of Europe, to commemorate events as widely apart from each other as life and death.

There are several old bells in Scotland, Ireland and Wales; the oldest are often quadriangular, being made of thin iron plates which have been hammered and riveted together. At the monastery of St. Gall in Switzerland the four-sided bell of the Irish missionary St. Gall, who lived in the seventh century, is still preserved; but more ancient still is the bell of St. Patrick in Belfast, which is ornamented with gold and gems and silver filigree work. The curfew bell is that about which most has been written and said. It has been thought that it was used only in England, but it was quite common on the Continent in the Middle Ages.

The ringing of bells by rope is still very popular in England, especially in the country, where almost every hamlet, however small, has its church and peal of bells, which are often remarkably well rung. To the town dweller church bells do not strike the same personal note which the countryman hears in them, where for miles around each village every man, woman and child is known, the one to the other. The plowman in the fields hearing the tolling of the passing bell of the joyous wedding peal knows at once for whom they ring. What the bells mean to him is well expressed in the lines:

> Say, how canst thou mourn?
> How canst thou rejoice?
> Thou art but metal dull!
> And yet all our surroundings
> And all our rejoicings—
> Thou dost feel them all.

The first peal of bells in this country was sent by Pope Calixtus III to King's College, Cambridge, and was for 300 years the largest peal in England. About the beginning of the year 1500 sets of eight bells were hung in a few of the large churches. In the middle of the Seventeenth Century a man named White wrote the famous work on bells, in which he introduced the system of numbering them, 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., on slips of paper to different orders, according on the changes intended to be rung. It is calculated that to ring all the changes upon 24 bells, at two strokes a second, would take more than 117 billion years.

One of the most famous bells in the world is the first great bell of Moscow, which now stands in the middle of a square in that city and is used as a chapel. This bell was cast in 1733, but was in the earth for more than 100 years, being raised in 1836 by Emperor Nicholas. It is nearly 20 feet high, and has a circumference of 60 feet, is two feet thick and weighs almost 200 tons. The second Moscow bell, which is the largest in the world that is actually in use, weighd 128 tons. There are several bells extant which weighs 10 tons and over, of which Big Ben, the largest bell in England, weighing between 13 anc 14 tons, is one. Big Ben is, unfortunately, cracked.

Small bells are used for such a variety of things that it is almost impossible to enumerate them. There are bells for almost everything from electric bells down to ferret bells, to which, by the way, the bells used in olden times for hawking were very similar. Perhaps the prettiest in sound of all small bells is the cowbell, so often heard in Switzerland and Italy. Although frequently made of baked earth this is wonderfully sweet and clear, and nothing is prettier or more fairylike than that tinkle of the bell in the distance. As the cattle come slowly down from the upland pastures after a heavy fall of snow, the look at first mere dots on the mountainsides, but even then the faint tinkle of their bells can be heard. In one Swiss canton there used to be a herd of cattle which either by accident or design possessed a set of bells which, when rung at the same time made perfect harmony.

Althought a few of the old uses to which the bell was put have gone out, a great many new ones have come in. The old way of exorcising an evil spirit—That is by cursing it with bell, book and candle—no longer survives, or at any rate is never heard of. The bell of the dustman is a thing of the past, even the town crier with his "Oyez, oyez, oyez," has all but left us, although he still survives in a few places. On the other hand, the telephone bell, the bicycle bell, the submarine bell and the electric bell in all its various forms were things undreamed of by our ancestors. In fact, it is only a little more than 100 years ago that house bells worked by means of wires came into use. In some shape or form the bell is now a part and parcel of every-day life, so much so that we cannot imagine a bellless world.—London Globe.

GOOD ROADS BUILDING.

Plans For Better Highways to Be Discussed In First Structure of Its Kind.

The Washington state good roads building on the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition grounds, facing Nome circle, is the first building of its kind to be erected in America. Here is shown a well equipped laboratory, where road materials may be tested for determining their value. In another room is shown a model in miniature of one of the four quarries which the state is now putting in operation for supplying crushed rock for road building. This plant is now being installed on Fidalgo island, near Deception pass, in Puget sound. The total appropriation made by the last legislature for improving the roads of the state was $1,300,000.

The good roads building has an auditorium capable of seating 300, which is complete in all appointments, being provided with stereopticon for illustrated lectures. Beginning at 3 p. m. each day a series of beautiful pictures will be shown of scenes in the state of Washington. At 4 p. m. each day an illustrated talk on roads is given, touching methods of construction, maintenance, repairs, dust prevention, etc., as practiced in the United States and other countries.

Here the first American congress of road builders convened on July 5 to 8, inclusive, when delegates from every state in the Union were present as well as from Canada and England.

The good roads building has been placed on a permanent concrete foundation and will be used by the University of Washington as the future home of the department of highway engineering.

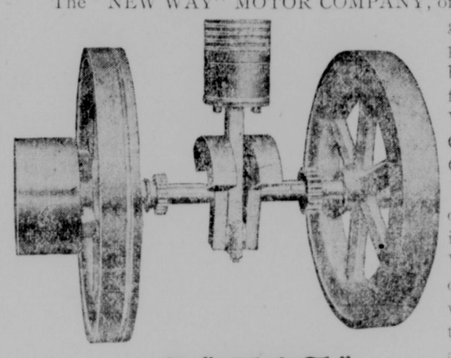
HIS MIND BECAME UNBALANCED

Because of the heavy strain due to a succession of depressing experiences and many discouragements.

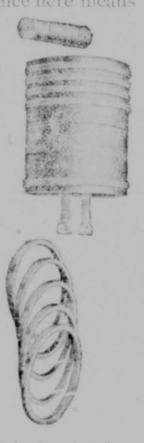
Normally all parts of the human frame are perfectly balanced. Every vital organ works in perfect harmony and is so arranged that when there is an unusual strain on any one organ the rest at once prepare to relieve the strain with a supply of new tissue food.

The "NEW WAY" MOTOR COMPANY, of Lansing, Michigan, adopted this perfect system in building their famous "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINES.



THE "New-Way"

See the figure opposite, illustrating the "NEW WAY" method of balancing the weight of the piston by weights attached to throw of crank shaft. engines do not have weights on the fly wheels to give momentum. Perfect balance here means no strain, steady power, no wear and tear, and long life.

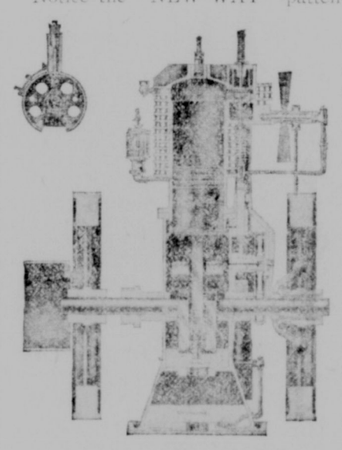


The water-cooled engines have the fly wheels weighted on one side. This puts a strain on the bearings, the engine cannot give its full power and soon is in need of repairs.

The "NEW WAY" piston is shown in the opposite illustration. See those five rings, four above and oil ring at the lower end. Look for the two or three rings used in any other engine and you'll see why "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINES have as good compression after years of use as they had the day they were bought.

The oil ring at the lower end keeps oil on the entire piston surface touching the cylinder. The four rings at the top are pinned into place and cannot turn so as to lose compression.

Notice the "NEW WAY" patented governor in this cut. It is the simplest possible in form, nothing to cause trouble, hit and miss type, uses no fuel or electricity, except when necessary to keep up speed. Only one oil cup on the whole engine, no grease cups at all and nothing to watch to be sure that your engine is getting proper lubrication.



We have the "NEWWAY" AIR COOLED ENGINES in our store room, and shall be glad to have you call and look them over thoroughly. We know that once you are convinced of the many superior points in a "NEW WAY" engine, you will not be satisfied until you own one. Watch this space next week for the "NEW WAY" system of lubrication.

4. That the said real estate estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein as above stated, and that in order to make division of said interests, it will be necessary that said real estate be sold, and the proceeds thereof divided amongst the parties according to their several interests.

Ettie Hamilton vs. Alexander Hamilton.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states that the parties were married in the town of Oakland, Garrett county, State of Maryland, on the first day of January, 1899, and that they lived together for a period of three years, at and after which time the defendant deserted the plaintiff and has remained away ever since, which desertion has now lasted for over eight years, is final, uninterrupted and without any reasonable hope of reconciliation.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1910. NUMBER 7

DOCTOR SHOT FRIEND'S WIFE IN PITTSBURG

Mrs. Violet Getty, Daughter-in-Law of Dr. O. G. Getty, Seriouly Wounded.

A telegram dated at Pittsburg April 11th, to the press, contained the following account of the shooting of Mrs. Violet Getty, wife of Dr. William G. Getty, of Hyndman, Pa., who is a grandson of the late William R. Getty, of Grantsville, this county:

Mrs. Violet Getty, the young wife of Dr. W. G. Getty, a well known physician of Hyndman, Pa., was shot down at her mother's feet tonight by Dr. Mark Blackburn, who then turned the revolver on himself. Mrs. Getty is in a critical condition at the Allegany Valley Hospital, while Dr. Blackburn is at the Homeopathic Hospital with no hopes of recovery.

Both the physicians come of Pennsylvania stock, which antedates the Revolution. They were classmates at college in Pittsburg seven years ago and both were suitors for the hand of Violet Mars, a beautiful Pittsburg girl Getty won and some years ago was married to the young woman.

Mrs. Getty came to visit her mother at 108 Ninth street, Pittsburg, today, and Dr. Blackburn, hearing she was in Pittsburg, went to the home of Mrs. Mars this evening. After some talk Dr. Blackburn told Mrs. Getty that he wanted her to elope with him tonight. She ordered him from the house, and he returned later with a revolver.

When she refused to open the door for him Dr. Blackburn fired through the glass, then entered the house and shot the prostrate woman twice more. Thinking her dead he then shot himself through the head, his body falling unconscious over Mrs. Getty's.

The Gettys, from whom Dr. Getty comes, are an old Maryland family, his grandfather having been Senator Getty, of Grantsville. The young doctor is the son of Dr. O. G. Getty, the most famous physician in Somerset county. Young Dr. Getty, with the wife now shot, has been living at Hyndman.

Blackburn is a son of Mrs. R. M. Blackburn, of Wilson, a suburb of Pittburg, and the family is one of the wealthiest in that section. His father, deceased, made a fortune in the grain business there. He is about 35 years old and had studied to be a dentist, but, although he got his degree, he is not known to have practiced. Instead, he was employed recently as a superintendent of a coal mine at Kaylor, Pa.

Three brothers who visited the hospital to see him tonight would make no comment on the shooting.

Case Against Mr. Miller Fails

Mr. John P. Miller, of Miller Bros., Westernport, Md., who was indicted in the United States court at Wheeling, W. Va., last September, for shipping liquor into districts in West Virginia where its sale is prohibited, was acquitted of the charge in the U. S. court at Wheeling. Judge Dayton ruled that the act was not in violation of law, and the charge was dismissed.

ELECTED GRAND PRELATE

Dr Henry W. McComas Honored By Maryland Pythians.

At the present session of the Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias of Maryland, Dr. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, was elected Grand Prelate of the order.

Dr. McComas was nominated a year ago for the position and has been very active in Pythian circles to secure the election which came on Tuesday night when other grand officers were elected.

At the meeting Mr. J. C. Renninger replied to the address of welcome made by Mayor Mahool of Baltimore.

Deer Park in the Field for Summer Visitors.

THE REPUBLICAN has noted in its columns from time to time the march of improvement in Deer Park, and has commended those engaged in the work. The cleaning up and improving of an adjoining town cannot but help and benefit Oakland, the county seat.

Deer Park has a mayor in the person of Mr. W. W. Hennen, who is fully alive to the wants and needs of the town over which he presides. He believes in having good brick sidewalks and clean, wide streets. The town council is composed of sensible business men who know that improvements of the character indicated will be of great benefit.

Deer Park is fortunate in having as an ally in improvement work the friendship and support of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society, and that body at its meeting in May will pass on a motion to make a generous and liberal appropriation to the Deer Park improvement work.

As one form of work begets another, painters are at work and a general polishing up is being done.

The Deer Park Village Improvement Society was organized a few years ago by Dr. John K. Mitchell, J. Swan Frick and George Truesdell, and the present inspiration to improve Deer Park in part comes from the work of the Society in the past. G. W. H.

For Church Benefit.

A play entitled "The Gibson Family Reunion," will be produced in the Oakland Opera House by local talent on June 9th and 10th, for the benefit of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church. The play is a pastoral comedy, brimming over with fun and will require forty or more people in the cast. The "artists" appearing will be drilled for their parts by Miss Anna Manges.

M'HENRY STORE AND POSTOFFICE LOOTED

Thieves Entered Building, Blew Safe, Secured Money and Jewelry, Escaped

The store of Brenneman Bros., in which is also located the postoffice at McHenry, this county, was entered by a side door last Friday night by thieves and robbed of about $75 in cash, postage stamps amounting to $42, jewelry, knives and razors and after blowing the safe and almost wrecking the department in which the postoffice was located, made their escape through the front door of the building.

The proprietors of the store estimate their loss, including damage to property, at $350. When the door of the heavy iron safe was blown from its fastings it dropped to the floor and broke a great hole through it, besides smashing out a number of windows and damaging counters and shelving.

Sheriff Shartzer and deputies, as soon as they were made acquainted with what had occurred, secured bloodhounds from Fairmont and on Saturday afternoon went to McHenry where the animals were put to work upon the trail and followed it to Kendall where they arrived a number of hours after and there lost the scent. It is believed that the parties implicated in the robbery reside not far from the scene of the crime.

Personals from Meyersdale Republican

Mrs. George Peifer and little daughter arrived here from Mount Pleasant last Thursday evening and spent that night and the day following as the guests of relatives and friends in this city. They were on their way to Cumberland, Md., where they will in the future reside. Mrs Peifer is a daughter of the late Frederick Hady, who will be remembered by our older residents as having resided here a number of years ago.

Dr. and Mrs. C. G. Keller, of Grantsville, Md., left for Hudson, O., last Monday to visit the former's brother, Dr. B. T. Keller and family, for a few days. Later they will go to Cleveland, where Mrs. Keller will consult a specialist for a nervous affection.

Mrs. Bruce Lichty slipped on a rug in her home while hastening to answer a telephone call, informing her of her husband's team running away last Thursday morning and killing one of the horses, and had a bad fall resulting in a bruise on the face and the spraining of her left arm.

FIRE AT MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The Rev. J. B. Young Cottage Entirely Consumed By Fire Yesterday.

The Young cottage, in the extreme southwestern section of the Park and near the railroad was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday. The fire was started by a spark from the flue igniting the shingles on the roof, and because of the extreme dryness of the material the blaze made such rapid progress that the house was enveloped with the devouring flames before anything could be done to check them. The cottage had been occupied by Mrs. Mann and a son and daughter only a few days, and they lost most of their household goods and clothing.

The cottage was the property of Rev. J. B. Young, D. D., and is an entire loss the insurance having lapsed a short time ago.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

With all members of the Court present Tuesday the following business was transacted by the Orphans' Court at its session that day.

Stuart F. Hamill appointed guardian of Annie E. and Harry R. McRobie, minor children of Lafayette McRobie, who was recently killed on the Baltimore and Ohio tracks west of Oakland by being run down by passenger train No. 55 while in the discharge of his duties. The children named above will receive from the railway company the sum of $100 each which is to be held in trust by the guardian until they become of age.

The court ratified the first and final report of James Guard, administrator of the personal estate of Jonas Wass.

Letters of administration upon the personal estate of Mary V. Spiker were issued to J. M. Spiker.

A Lad Operated Upon.

Master Sydney Crowe, twelve years of age, of Grantsville, Md., was brought to the Western Maryland Hospital yesterday at noon and shortly thereafter was operated upon for appendicitis. So far the operation is successful and at a late hour last night the boy was resting comfortably.—Cumberland News.

GOVERNOR CROTHERS AS A REAL BOSS

He Has Forged to the Front in His Party.

Developments during the closing days of the General Assembly and since adjournment last week have put Governor Crothers at the front in the Democratic party. He may be regarded henceforth as a real boss and not as a "me too" of the party. He has long harbored a desire to break away from some of his erstwhile partners, and while not desiring to go into business alone and for himself only, he has had an ambition to be considered a full-fledged member of the political firm now controlling the destinies of the Democratic party in Maryland.

Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus is also admitted into full partnership in the firm.

Senator Gorman has voluntarily quit the political business after an unpleasant experience with some of his partners from whom he had a right to expect better, fairer and more frank treatment. It will be the simple life for him. He will devote his time and energy to his law practice, to his farm and to management of his extensive private interests.

Gen. Murray Vandiver, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, may look forward to a combined assault upon him all along the line.

United States Senator John Walter Smith, who combined his forces with those of Governor Crothers in time of the latter's battles, while his known attitude on the Straus primary election bill demanded a fight on his own line, will be able to take care of himself. He will be backed by the Eastern Shore, with the possible exception of two or three counties, in any political understanding into which he may embark. Because of illness followed by death in his family circle he banished politics entirely from his mind during the last two or three weeks of the General Assembly and since its adjournment.

Mr. John J. Mahon will be a storm center in city politics. He has been under fire during the last month or two. This is a taste of what is to come. He has been under fire before and is not apt to run. He is not a quitter. Whether his party is a winner or a loser, he will still head the organization in Baltimore. Those who are trying to unhorse him will find him to be a very desirable and necessary factor in a political campaign. The Democratic party was defeated in 1895, and again in 1907, in both state and city, but Mr. Gorman did not relax his hold upon the state organization, nor did Mr. Rasin lose his grip on the city machine. Mr. Mahon will continue to be on the job.

The lesser lights in the party will keep their ears close to the ground. When the time comes for them to act they will find the conditions imposed upon them by the "new crowd" to be too harsh to be accepted or tolerated, and they will cast in their lot with the "old crowd," even though they may go down to defeat.

Who will come to the front, if there are changes in the Democratic management, remains to be seen. A certain Baltimore reformer in 1895 said he create conditions in the Democratic party by defeating the party, and would await the time when the new conditions would create new leaders.

The Democratic party was defeated and new conditions were created, but Mr. Gorman and Mr. Rasin held on just the same.

The fact must not be lost sight of that Governor Crothers has "stood in" with the Democratic organization in Baltimore and it has been loyal to him.

By withholding his approval from the Digges bills Governor Crothers made a bold stroke to help his own political fortunes. If these bills had been approved and if the negroes had been denied the right to vote the Democratic leaders would have been so sure of their future safety that they would have nominated whom they pleased for governor and that man would not have been Austin Lane Crothers. He may not want to be governor again. In fact he has said it is his ambition to retire to private life upon the expiration of his term as governor. Indeed, he has gone so far as to say that he will not again be a candidate for governor. Others just as sincere have said the same thing and have then yielded to what they termed "party calls." There may be a "party call" for Governor Crothers. Its leaders and prospective new leaders may think that he will be the strongest candidate and he may be induced to try his luck again despite the fact that no man has been twice elected governor of Maryland since the election of the executive was placed in the hands of the people 75 years ago.

Governor Crothers has used his "big stick" in compelling his party to respect its pledges, and in doing so he aroused the criticism of the strict adherents of constitutional form. He has stirred up the anger of those who hold to the idea that the government is divided into three parts—the legislative, executive and judicial—that each department is separate from the other, and that there should be no interference by one with the other. The Governor is accused of using the "big stick" on the legislature just as President Roosevelt used it on Congress. The average man likes results. He likes men who "do things," who translate their words into deeds. Hence, the applause for the Governor within his own party.

The Governor has made possible the creation of a powerful political machine by adding new parts to it. He has gained complete control of the state road commission by consolidating with it the road department of the State Geological Survey. By the appointment of another commissioner he can disturb the equal balance heretofore existing in the road commission. He has proceeded on the theory that as his administration will be held responsible for road building, he will assume full authority and power.

The Public Utilities Commission can be made a most powerful political machine. It is now too late to bewail the fact that such an undesirable factor in politics and business should have been forced upon the state. The fact is the power to name the commission has been placed in the Governor's hands, and it is up to him by naming proper men to say whether the law for which he and Attorney General Straus are primarily responsible shall be at least tolerant or a failure. Already scores of names for the commission are being brought forward, and while it would seem that the Governor has abundant material from which to select, as a matter of fact when he looks over the names of the men suggested he will find but few who will be completely equipped for the important duties to devolve upon them. At least this will be the case if he determines to be guided by a sincere desire to name a commission which will be fair to the public and which will not at the same time persecute corporations.

The Governor will have other appointments to make, including the motor-vehicle commission. He has yet to assign the police justices and to fill two judicial vacancies.

In fact there are busy times ahead, and his troubles are not over, even though the legislature is off his hands.

THE COUNTY TAX RATE WILL BE $1.15

Increase Made Necessary by Expenses for New Assessment.

The county tax rate has been fixed by the Board of Commissioners at $1.15 on the assessable property of Garrett county, an increase over previous years.

The increase is made necessary on account of various items appearing in the levy which are new and also because of additional amounts being appropriated for schools and bridges.

Information from the Commissioners' office is to the effect that $1,000 additional has been appropriated for schools; $5,500 for bridges and the new assessment will require $4,000 to meet the expenses incident to carrying out the provisions of the law. In addition to the above $4,000 has been set aside to improve the court house grounds. The levy in full will be published in these columns next Thursday.

EIGHTY-SIX TODAY

Jacob Brown, Esq., Oldest Member of Cumberland Bar, Passes Another Milestone in His Long Career.

"My eighty-sixth birthday will come greeting me on the seventh of April, nineteen hundred and ten. No celebration.—Jacob Brown."

Such is the inscription on a card which came to The Republican several days ago. There are hundreds of people in Somerset county, Pa., and Allegany and Garrett counties, Md., who will join The Republican in wishing Mr. Brown many happy returns of this day, and the hope that he may live to round out his century of usefulness

Jacob Brown, Esq., is the oldest living member of the bar of Allegany county, Md., and one of the oldest practicing attorneys in the United States. He was admitted to the bar at Cumberland in 1849, and has practiced continuously in that city ever since. All of the members of the Allegany county bar at the time of his admission have long since been dead. He is as the last leaf upon the tree, but is still firmly holding on.

The editor of The Republican happened to arrive in Cumberland one year ago today, when Mr. Brown was celebrating his 85th birthday. The Cumberland bar held a special meeting to show their respect for their venerable fellow counsellor. It was an impromptu affair gotten up without Mr. Brown's knowledge. He was summoned into the presence of his fellow barristers, and after being compelled to listen to many eulogies of himself, he was presented a large purse of gold as a further and more substantial token of esteem. The old gentleman was overwhelmed by the kindness shown him and responded in a most feeling manner.

Jacob Brown was born in the vicinity of Mason & Dixon's line a few miles south of Salisbury—on which side of the line we are not at present able to recall though we have often been at the site of the old Brown homestead, but close enough to Pennsylvania in any event to be counted as one of the "Frosty Sons of Thunder." He is probably the best informed man on the early history of Allegany and Garrett counties, Md., and Somerset county, Pa., that is living today, and during the last fifty years he has contributed many columns of most interesting historical matter to the newspapers of the counties named, besides having published a book entitled "Brown's Reminiscences."

It was our pleasure to pay this grand old man a visit at his office in Cumberland, just a few days prior to the date on which we assumed control of The Republican. We were rejoiced to find him looking so well and sprightly in his old age, as it had been many years since we had seen him, and he was then, even, an old man. He still pursues his literary avocation, besides attending to such law business as comes his way. We are proud to number him among our readers, and hope to have an occasional contribution from his facile pen, which we know many of our readers would enjoy.—Meyersdale Republican.

OUR SOUTHERN LETTER

Some Eye Openers as to the Growing Importance of Southern Ports.

New York is the foremost seaport of all the world. Therefore New York is the foremost seaport of the United States. Now do you know which is the second seaport of this country?

Do you figure that it is Philadelphia?

Try another guess.

Boston, maybe, you pick on the next attempt.

But it is not Boston, for Boston drags behind Philadelphia in her shipment of American exports. The fact is that neither of these cities is second, nor even third. They are both outclassed by two Southern ports, and there is no likelihood that either Boston or Philadelphia will ever be higher in rank than now.

Both are too far from the heart of the country.

The second port of the United States in volume of foreign business is Galveston, Texas, and the third is New Orleans. Galveston's exports exceed those of Philadelphia and Boston combined with Portland, Maine, thrown in for good measure. Savannah exports almost twice as much as the two leading ports of the Pacific, San Francisco and Puget Sound, while Mobile leads either of the two, and Wilmington crowds both of them closely with her export trade.

From this it is easy to see that if it were not for New York alone the foreign commerce of the United States would be largely Southern trade. This condition is destined to continue or to incline more to the growth of Southern ports, as can be seen if a map is consulted.

New York became a great port because when it started it was close to the farm and the factory. Philadelphia and Boston gained some prestige in the same manner.

But as the country grew the area of production grew away from the seaboard. New York held her trade with the Erie canal. Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston clung to what they could and were important ports for a long time. But Boston is too far away. Philadelphia, not so far away, is behind a great range of mountains over which traffic must be hauled, and Baltimore is not much better off.

New Orleans has down grade all the way from the farms of the Mississippi valley and water transportation if it is desired. New Orleans is nearer the place of production. Galveston also is near the farm. From Indiana west the country is as near to Galveston as to New York and with easier grades to get there. From Indiana west the great export crops are raised. So Galveston is lively with foreign shipping, which carries away from Galveston half a million dollars' worth of merchandise for every day of the year, New York alone exporting more than this. The exports from Galveston are greater than the total exports of several countries. Japan does not export as much as Galveston. Neither does Sweden, Norway, Spain, Mexico or Denmark, and it hurries China, with all its vast population, to equal the trade of the one American port of Galveston.

When the Gulf of Mexico cut into the heart of North America it made this country possible. Without this vast body of water the United States would be a desert except along a narrow strip of the Atlantic coast for the rains of the whole country east of the Rocky Mountains are largely from the moisture that comes from the gulf to be condensed by the cool winds that come down from the northwest. Mexico is a rainless region. The United States west of the extreme end of the gulf is practically rainless, for no moisture blows from the gulf any distance to the west.

The gulf provides the rainfall and after the rainfall has afforded the crop the gulf is far enough into the interior of the continent to provide a way to get the exports out and to move domestic commerce around the coast.

As the Mississippi valley becomes more densely settled and bulky freight is made in greater quantity, Galveston and New Orleans must continue to become more important shipping ports, and faster each year they will pull away from the Atlantic ports that are too far distant from the place of production.

If you look at the map you will see that a line drawn from Rochester to New York is just as long as a line drawn from Rochester to Philadelphia. New York is the nearest seaport to the country east of central New York. All the great territory west of central New York and eastern Pennsylvania is nearer to some other seaport than to New York, and with the exception of Philadelphia all the ports are in the South.

Florida has a longer coast line than any other State. Florida has a longer water front on the Atlantic than all of New England has. Florida has more water front on the gulf than the coast line of all the Northern States that front on the Atlantic, and almost as much of a total coast line as all of the other States that front on the Atlantic. The water frontage of the ten Southern States is fully as long as that of all the other States on both oceans. And the valuable feature is that the southern coast line is abundant in those bays and gulfs that penetrate the interior of the country where business can be reached.

Of the eighteen leading ports of the United States Detroit is the one on the great lakes that does the leading foreign commerce. Two are on the Pacific coast, Boston and Portland are in New England, New York and Philadelphia in the middle States. The other eleven are in the South. Of the eighteen leading ports the ten Southern States lack but one of having two-thirds of the entire number.

New York has the first place, and will probably hold that lead for some time in spite of natural disadvantages, because New York is the commercial headquarters of the United States. But even with that advantage the other ports are growing on New York, which is not holding its lead.

There is no doubt that Galveston and New Orleans will be two of the great ports of foreign commerce in the future, for the rapid and substantial growth that this country is to make will be in the territory tributary to those two cities.

The progress of the South Atlantic seaboard will have an influence on Wilmington, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah and Mobile, and all of these promise to be big commercial cities, but the tendency is all the time to concentrate the heavy traffic at points where great cargoes can be handled by big ships and contributed by well equipped railroads that traverse productive territory.

Trunk lines are making steady efforts to reach the Southern ports and facilities at those points are steadily increasing for handling train loads and transferring them to vessels. Railroads are building rapidly in this country. Each year sees enough new construction to equal an entire line from Boston to San Francisco and another from Minneapolis to New Orleans. A large share of this work is on lines that run to the seaports, and a fair share of it is on lines that run to the seaports of the South.

Galveston is destined to be a great commercial city, and if I am any guesser, several of these Southern seaport towns have a promising future ahead of them. More is the pity that our export trade is not carried by American ships. But while the American people seem to be satisfied with doing their foreign commerce in foreign ships it may not be becoming for a fellow who lives where we plow the fields instead of the raging main to offer too many suggestions.

BACK TO THE HOG ALSO TO THE HEN

Meaty Editorial from St. Joseph, Mo., Daily Stock Yards Journal.

We are indebted to Cashier Richard Beachy of the State Bank of Esbon, Kansas, for a copy of the St. Joseph, Mo., Daily Livestock Journal containing the following meaty editorial on "The Hog And The Hen."

A press dispatch says that the town council of Meyersdale, Pa., a mountain town of about 6,000 inhabitants, has repealed the ordinance against keeping hogs in the corporation limits. It did this because a wave of enthusiasm for hog culture is sweeping over the town and everybody is building pigsties, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The back-to the-hog movement is, of course, one of the effects of the high prices of meat. The citizens of Meyersdale have discovered the astonishing fact that if you raise your own meat you won't have to buy it. And with commendable generosity they have permitted the discovery to be given to the press and thus to the world.

The discovery of the pleasure and profit of urban hog culture should not be lost on the tens of thousands of suburbanites whose thoughts at this season of the year are naturally turning towards hens. At first the suggestion of a hog in place of a hen may prove shocking to the hen culturist. But in the end the hog might prove a more profitable diversion.

There should really be less disappointment in hogs than hens. A hog is not expected to do anything but grow fat, and, if given half a chance, he will answer this expectation to the full. With hens it is, of course, different. A hen is expected to lay, an active instead of a merely passive service, sometimes she does and generally she doesn't.

There is another thing about a hog. A hog is always there right in his little sty. When you take a friend out to lean with you over the rail and listen to what you know about hogs and to inspect the proof of your assertion, the hog is there.

On the other hand, a hen is a shifty creature. If she can get under the house it is ten to one she will be under the house. Sometimes it is necessary to go over into the neighbor's garden to see that hen. All of, which is very annoying.

The whole situation may be summed up in the statement that the hog is less temperamental than the hen. If incapable of lending excitement to suburban life by his vagaries, he can perform the really superior service of being a living lesson of content—of suggestion that, after all, you might as well take things easy.

We do not allude to the fortune to be made from having a hog about the place. Those who understand the money possibilities of a few carefully tended suburban hens will need no instruction on this point. And the others would hardly believe the figures if we gave them just as they were prepared by a conservative advocate of the hog's suburban exploitation.

Great things often come from small beginnings. Meyersdale Pa., may some day be looked to as the source of a great back-to-the-hog movement which will make the "back-to-the-land" excitement seem trifling in comparison.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

MOUNTAINS SWEPT INTO THE SEA

"We Will Not Fear Though the Mountains Be Carried Into the Midst of the Sea" (Psalm xlvi, 2).

April 10.—Pastor Russell, accompanied by Dr. Jones, who will serve him as stenographer, and by a representative of this Journal, sailed from New York April 5th for Jerusalem—via Paris, Berne, Naples, Alexandria, Cairo and the Pyramids, Jaffa, to Jerusalem and vicinity. His return will be via Rome, Vienna, Warsaw, Berlin, Elberfeld and London. Meetings have been arranged for enroute. His longest stay will be in Great Britain, where about twenty appointments in the principal cities await him. He will be speaking practically every day. His Sunday discourses will be specially reported in these columns. Special interest will center in the discourses at Jerusalem and Rome. The many readers of his sermons will follow the Pastor in his journey with great interest. He is scheduled to be back in Brooklyn June 5th, when his topic will be "Jerusalem." In anticipation of a large audience on that occasion Brooklyn's largest Auditorium, the Academy of Music, has been secured. His sermons now reach six million families weekly, and assuredly many of these wish him God-speed.

On the Atlantic April Tenth.

I have chosen for my text a sea topic, a symbolical prophecy which, I believe, is rapidly nearing fulfillment. All Bible students recognize the fact that many of the Psalms are Messianic; that is to say, they apply to the time of the inauguration of Messiah's Millennial Kingdom. Some of them detail the peace and joy and blessings which will then prevail amongst men, when the great leveling processes of that time will raise all the worthy poor and degraded and will humble all the proud, establishing Society under such new conditions that the new order of things is symbolically styled in the Scriptures "a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (II Peter iii, 13). Others of the Psalms describe in highly figurative terms the work of the Millennial Age. For instance, we read:

"Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee" (Psalm xlv, 3-5). Here the great Redeemer is pictured as the glorious conquering King of the Millennial Age, and his victory over every opposing influence is emphasized—"Unto him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess" (Isaiah xlv, 23). His right hand that will teach terrible things is the symbol of the Divine power which will be exercised at the inauguration of the Kingdom. The sharp arrows which will pierce the enemies to the heart and cause them symbolically to fall before him slain represent his messages of Truth and Grace which then will conquer as they do not now, except in the hearts of the few. A sample of those now slain after this manner by the Word of Truth is furnished us in the account of St. Peter's sermon on the Day of Pentecost. He preached the Truth plainly, thrusting in the "Sword of the Spirit" up to the hilt. He told his hearers how they and their rulers had crucified the Prince of Life. They were "cut to the heart," and it was the greatest blessing that could have possibly come to them (Acts ii, 23). Similarly during the Millennium, the "arrows" of Truth will smite down all opposition; and mankind, cut to the heart with proper appreciation of their own sinfulness and God's mercy, will fall before the great King, accepting mercy upon his gracious terms—full surrender.

The Day of Trouble Pictured.

The Psalm of which our text is a part is one of the Messianic Psalms. Prophetically and symbolically it tells about the trouble incident to the passing away of the present order of sin and selfishness and the inauguration of the new order of righteousness and love under the great Mediatorial Kingdom of Christ. Whether the events which the Scriptures predict shall come in our day or not, we hold that they will come and be in full comportment with these prophetic pictures. They were surely written for our instruction (II Timothy iii, 16). And as Bible students we do well to take heed to every item of the Divine revelation, that thus we may keep ourselves in touch with the Infinite One and in sympathy with all the features of his great and wonderful Program. Let us note the particulars of the Psalm in detail.

The Refuge of His Saints.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble" (Psalm xlvi, 1). How beautiful! How comforting! How strengthening! Those who have entered into covenant relationship with God through Christ, through faith and consecration, and who are abiding in his love, may feel serene in any trouble—in every trouble—not merely in the final trouble, with which sin and sorrow will be brought to an end. Not merely when Satan shall be bound will God be the refuge of his saints, but in all times and under all circumstances "the peace of God which passeth all understanding" will keep the hearts and minds of his faithful.

"Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." Fear is the great torment of the majority of our race. It is the lash which the Adversary frequently uses to drive away from God those who need his sympathy and love and succor. To such the Lord speaks tenderly saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And again, God declares his name to be Love and says, "Their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men"—not by his Word (Isaiah xxix, 13). He would have us trust him as a great, loving, generous Father, saying, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord compassioneth those who reverence him" (Psalm ciii, 13). As love, more love, perfect love, comes into our hearts it more and more casts out the fear which the Adversary would inculcate and which has burned into men's minds and consciences the "doctrines of devils," to which the Apostle refers (I Timothy iv, 1).

"Fear not their fear, neither be afraid," says the Lord to those who are his people. "Let the peace of God which passeth all understanding rule in your hearts!" Be faithful! Be trustful! Accept the assurance that "All things shall work together for good to those who love God—to the called ones according to his purpose" (Romans viii, 28). This class will not fear when the earth shall be removed and when the mountains shall be carried into the midst of the sea. They might indeed be astonished and in trepidation if these were literal mountains; but they are symbolical. The people of the Lord, under his instruction, will not be in darkness that that day shall overtake them as a thief, although it will come as a thief and as a snare upon the whole world (Luke xxi, 35). In the symbology of the Bible the term earth is used to represent the social structure, as the mountains which constitute the backbones of the earth symbolize the kingdoms of the world supported by the social order. As the earth represents the fixity of the social order, the sea represents the restless, turbulent, dissatisfied classes which lash against the earth and continually seek to swallow it up. The removal of the earth symbolizes the disturbance of the social order. The swallowing up of the mountains in the seas represents the overwhelming of some of the great kingdoms of the earth by the uprising of the people in anarchistic rebellion against social order.

"The Powers That Be Ordained of God."

The fact that the Scriptures prophetically describe the overwhelming of the social order and the great governments of the earth must not be understood to signify that the Bible counsels revolution or anarchy. On the contrary, all of God's people throughout the Scriptures are counseled to live peaceably with all men, so far as possible. They are counseled not to use carnal weapons, not to take to the sword for the settlement of disputes, but rather to suffer injury. They are counseled that God is the great Over-Lord, and that although he is not now ruling directly amongst men he is fully the Master of the situation in that he could at any time overthrow all opponents. He does not acknowledge that his will is now done in the earth, but tells us that it will be done by and by and encourages us to pray and to hope and to wait for it. He tells us that Satan is now the "Prince of this world" by virtue of the fact that he deceives the minds and hearts of the majority. God would have his people understand something of his great Program, but he would keep this hidden from all others; hence the impossibility of explaining spiritual things to a carnal mind (I Corinthians ii, 14). "None of the wicked shall understand" (Daniel xii, 10).

The great Creator has contented himself with such a supervision of human affairs as leaves much responsibility in human hands. He merely interferes to raise up or to cast down on occasions when the interest of his Cause and Program may demand. For instance, the case of the Pharaoh raised to the throne of Egypt, in Moses' day. God there raised to the Throne a man of great determination, and hindered from reaching the throne other men not so favorable to the carrying out of the Divine Purposes. Thus, without interfering with the free moral agency of the King, God used the wrath of man to praise him and the remainder he restrained. Similarly, God previously raised Joseph to the Governorship of Egypt for his own purposes.

The Prophet describes the tumult of that day of overwhelming trouble when God's Kingdom will be established, saying of the sea that will swallow up the mountains, "The waters roar and be troubled; the mountains shake with the swelling thereof" (Psalm xlvi, 3). It is probably true that such socialistic and anarchistic roarings have many times in the past caused the kingdoms of earth and their rulers to tremble. But some day, according to the Scriptures, the final catastrophe will occur. How near that day may be who can tell? Quite a good many earnest Bible students concur in the thought that such a climax is indicated in the prophecies, for the year 1915. But be the date as it may, the fact remains. The prophecy we are examining is nearly three thousand years old, but it is as good, as sure, and as meaningful today as ever it was.

We are not of those who would harass the minds of our fellows with fear. Rather we would point them to the fact that behind this cloud of trouble there is a glorious silver lining of Millennial joy and blessing for all the families of the earth. Rather we would encourage all who have the hearing ear to zeal and faithfulness in their consecration, that they may "make their calling and their election sure" to a share in the Kingdom glories and "escape those things coming upon the earth" (Luke xxi, 36). In a word, the Gospel of Christ is not a message of damnation and fear and torture, but, as the angels declared, "Good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people" (Luke ii, 10).

Deliverance of the Church Pictured.

In the fourth and fifth verses following our text the Church is symbolically pictured as the City or Kingdom of God, his dwelling-place. And the stream of Truth is represented as a river making the City clean and fresh and glad. The proclamation is made, "God is in the midst of her! She shall not be moved! God shall help her early in the morning"—early in the Millennial morning. The Church is to be "a first-fruits unto God." Her salvation as the Bride of Christ will be accomplished early in this Millennial morning. Oh, how glad will be all those accounted worthy of a place in that elect Church—"the Church of the First-borns, whose names are written in heaven!" "She shall not be moved," is in agreement with the first verse in assuring us that God's people will be preserved from fear and doubt and misunderstanding of the events of that "time of trouble" and that their faith will enable them to triumph at a time when others will be in great distress and perplexity (Luke xxi, 26).

The Gentiles Raged.

Beginning with the 6th verse the Prophet gives a brief synoptical picture of the time of trouble and its consummation and the inauguration of universal peace. "The heathen (Gentile peoples) raged!" These words describe the tumult which will prevail amongst humanity in the great time of trouble before the climax is reached. "Raging," angry voices arise from public meetings, and in the more private meetings of the lodges of Labor and Capital, and through the columns of the Press to the extent permitted. In Germany the "raging" Press for some time has been muzzled. The same is true in other nations. In Great Britain, in the United States and in France there is a fear of tumult through public Press "raging," and everything possible is done to restrain it. Whoever sees that anarchy is the most dreadful terror confronting Civilization must realize the wisdom of reasonable restraints upon his own tongue and upon the tongues of others. Nevertheless the Scriptures show us that all effort to suppress the tumult and the angry voices of men selfishly "raging" out against each other will fail.

The prophetic picture continues—"God uttered his voice; the earth melted." The unfaithfulness of humanity, the clamor of greed, both in rich and in poor, will be answered by the Almighty, "Giver of every good and perfect gift." He will "utter his voice," or, as another prophet declares, "He will speak to the people in his anger," for their correction, for their reproval. The result will be that the symbolical earth (society) will melt—the social structure of civilization will disintegrate. Another Scripture declares that that disintegration will be so great that "every man's hand will be against his neighbor."

But the Prophet hastens to assure us that in the midst of all this tumult the Lord will be with his consecrated people. We read, "The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge." This promise applies primarily to the consecrated Church of Christ—Spiritual Israel. But it also secondarily applies to fleshly Israel, the Jewish nation, which will participate in this time of trouble, but be saved out of it, as the Scriptures declare (Jeremiah xxx, 7). In this time of trouble the Lord's jewels, his saints, will be gathered to their heavenly home, after which Divine favor will begin to return to Israel (Romans xi, 25-30).

The Psalm closes with a picture of the devastation which will prevail throughout the world as a result of human selfishness and blindness. Capital and Labor will rise up to a terrible cataclysm of anarchy, awful for rich and poor alike. Only God's saints will then have peace, and that because of their knowledge of the grand outcome; because of their faith in God and their willingness to accept whatever his providence should send. Mark the grand symbolic apostrophe with which the Psalm closes! May its lessons draw us nearer to the Fountain of Grace and give us rest, peace and joy through obedience of heart to him. "He (Immanuel) maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow in sunder; he burneth the chariot in fire. Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen (Gentiles); I will be exalted in the earth."

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Feeding Horses In Winter.

Last winter the experiment station at the Michigan Agricultural college entered into a series of experiments that are extending over a series of years on the wintering of the farm horse.

The horses that were used in the feeding experiment were under normal winter conditions—that is, they were given the usual amount of winter work. The experiment results centered about twelve horses, which were divided into lots of six each. One lot was used as a check and fed in the ordinary manner—that is, given eleven to twelve pounds of oats and eighteen to twenty pounds of timothy hay daily and bran once a week. The other six were given the cheap ration, which was as follows: Morning feed, oat straw, five pounds; carrots, four pounds; ear corn, three pounds. Noon feed, timothy hay, four pounds; oats, two pounds. Night feed, shredded cornstalks, eight pounds; carrots, four pounds; feed mixture, two pounds. The feed mixture consisted of the following: Dried beet pulp, four pounds; bran, one pound; oil cake, one pound.

The period covered by the experimental feeding was Dec. 1 to Feb. 8. The average cost per head a day for feed last winter for the horses fed on timothy, oats and a little bran was 29 cents, while for those fed on the cheap feed it was 17.7 cents a day. A saving was made by the use of the cheap ration of $49.12 on the feeding of six horses ten weeks.—Farm and Fireside.

Old Time Poland-Chinas.

The hogs of thirty years ago were very mellow, easy feeders, could be fattened at any age, yet if carried to eighteen to twenty-four months of age grew into very large, shapely, profitable hogs. I speak in this instance from personal experience, for in 1880 I bred, personally fed and marketed a bunch of May pigs, selling them the following January at an average of eight and one-half months old. Their average weight was 317½ pounds. The next year I fed and sold just double this number at nine months of age, and they weighed 315⅞ pounds. I sold the sire of these pigs as a stag at two years old, weighing 960 pounds. This stag had a considerable white on him, but was one of the mellowest and easiest feeders that I ever owned. —W. M. Lanbing Before Iowa Swine Breeders' Association.

Treatment For Curb.

For curb in a horse put the animal in a box stall for a month and use the compound biniodide of mercury and cantharides ointment on it as a blister once in twelve days. Prepare by mixing a dram each of biniodide of mercury and powdered cantharides in two ounces of vaseline, adding also one dram of the oil of turpentine. Rub a quantity of this ointment in well. The second day afterward grease with lard. Wash off and pick off all scabs before reapplying. Continue to blister until the swelling is well removed. Before using the horse or turning out again have the toe of the foot made short and put on shoes with heel but no toe calks.—National Stockman.

Improving the Sheep Flock.

It is very important to select a good ram. His eyes should be full and aggressive, with broad chest, as shown by a front look at the ram, with fullness of the ribs behind the shoulders, all of which are indications of that high type of vigor which is so essential for the ram at the head of the flock. You will find to improve your sheep is more difficult than to improve your dairy stock. There is no question but that one of the most important things is to secure the better breeding of the fullbloods which we need for our farm flocks, so that we shall not only have good mutton quality with a good wool product, but also have a high type of vigor.

Ducks and Turkeys.

Ducks are practically immune from cholera, roup and gapes. Their favorite diseases are spinal meningitis and paralysis.

Ducks kept entirely on land must have deep drinking vessels, so they can get their heads under water. Where shallow vessels or troughs are used they gum up about the eyes, become listless, sit about, lose appetite and eventually die.

On farms having high, dry land which has a light growth of grass and where a new breeding gobbler has lately been introduced the largest flocks and the most thrifty looking turkeys are found.—Western Poultry Journal.

Alfalfa and Corn.

Alfalfa as a farm crop is an ideal complement to corn. It is an ideal crop to precede corn, and better yields cannot be got any place than from corn grown on alfalfa sod. As a feed it makes an ideal ration when fed in connection with corn. There is a greater possibility of profit in these two crops when grown together than in any other crops that can be grown by the American farmer.—Professor H. C. Price, Dean of Ohio College of Agriculture.

Mongrels and Scrubs.

A mongrel and a scrub fowl are not necessarily the same, says Western Poultry Journal. The mongrel may be a large composite fowl of pure blood—that is, may be made by a cross of pure bloods or a cross of pure bloods upon common stock. In either case it is removed from a scrub, which is a measly, small, common fowl, without a trace of good blood in its veins.

NEW TYPE OF ROAD.

Telford Blocks With Liquid Asphalt as a Binder to Be Tried in Jersey.

New Jersey is to experiment with a new type of road, and the experiment will be tried in Essex county, where the county engineer, James Owen, proposes to lay roads in West Orange, Nutley, Belleville, Verona, Short Kills, Millburn, West Caldwell and other places. The state is to pay one-third of the cost of these new roads, each municipality one-tenth of the cost of the roads within its limit, and the county pays the balance. Mount Pleasant avenue, West Orange, is to be the first scene of the new road trial. Telford pavement is to be used under a new formula prepared by Mr. Owen, and he thinks that such a road will stand automobile traffic splendidly, and, while it will not be absolutely dustless, it will be less dusty than any other road of a similar kind.

After the telford blocks are laid instead of using clay as a binder liquid asphalt will be used. This has been successfully tried as a binder in connection with patent road formula, and, while it will add about 15 cents a square yard to the cost, it will be cheaper in the end. The foundation of the road will be constructed in the ordinary way and chinked in the usual manner. Then a coating of stone screenings will be applied and rolled. Next will come a four inch layer of broken stone and another thorough rolling. On top of this will be put a thin layer of screenings to fill the interstices; then the liquid asphalt will be put on hot in the proportion of one and one-third gallons to each square yard of surface. It will then be given from five to ten hours to penetrate and then another coating of screenings and the road rolled again, and then it will be ready for use.

LAYING A TELFORD FOUNDATION.

Many will not agree with Mr. Owen that telford block is good for automobiling, as it is well known it is very hard on tires, but it makes a very solid, even road, and until the horse drawn vehicles make it bad it is all right.

What county engineers and other road builders should try to do is to build a road that will stand the horses and the iron shod wagons, and after doing that they will have solved the good roads problem.

GOOD ROADS IN GEORGIA.

Talk of a Seven Hundred Mile Road Between Atlanta and Washington.

The Good Roads club of Georgia has started a movement for the construction of an improved highway between Atlanta and Washington, about 700 miles. The plan is that each of the counties in the different states should agree to maintain the highway after it has been completed. The rapid spread of interest in automobiles has aroused the Georgia men to the urgent need of better roads in the south, and they believe that an improved highway from Atlanta to the national capital would give a great impetus to the good roads movement all over the south.

It has been suggested by the projectors of the proposed highway that the authorities of each county agree to round up, roll and ditch one of the existing connecting roads from border to border and improve it with a macadam surface as soon as possible. It is believed that this plan can be carried out so that motorists will be able to travel over a continuous stretch of fairly good roads by the middle of the coming summer. It is suggested that the dirt roads which must be included in the highway be kept in condition by using split log drags similar to the one devised by D. Ward King of Missouri. The farmers of Georgia are just as enthusiastic over the plan as the automobilists of the state.

Irrigation and Good Roads.

J. C. Osgood, honorary vice president for Colorado of the seventeenth national irrigation congress, which will meet at Spokane, Wash., Aug. 9, recently wrote a letter to the secretary of the board of control in which, among other things, he said:

"I think a good roads convention would add greatly to the interest of the coming congress, but I go further than wanting merely good roads. I want the very best roads, and I believe that the people of the irrigation states have a claim on the government for large expenditures in the building of the principal roads through the mountainous and sparsely settled sections of the country equal in character to the best roads of France, England and Germany."

Good Move of Rural Mail Carriers.

An effort is being made to organize good roads clubs in every county in Georgia. By common consent the rural mail carriers, of whom there are about 1,500 in the state, are taking the lead in the agitation and forming the nucleus for the thoroughly perfected state organization which is aimed at

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson III.—Second Quarter, For April 17, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xi, 1-19. Memory Verses, 4, 5—Golden Text, John v, 36—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After the commission of last lesson both Jesus and His disciples departed and went through the towns preaching the gospel and healing everywhere. See verse 1, with Mark vi, 12, 13; Luke ix, 6. We may imagine the result from such a passage as Matt. iv, 24. In Luke vii, 16-18, we read that after Jesus raised the widow's son to life the people glorified God, saying that a great prophet is risen up among us and that God hath visited His people. And this rumor of Him went forth throughout all Judea and throughout all the region roundabout. And the disciples of John showed him of all these things. This explains how, according to verse 2 of our lesson, John heard in the prison the works of Christ. We learn from chapter xiv that John was put in prison because he had fearlessly rebuked sin in high places, a dangerous thing to do if one's own comfort is considered when the powers that be are in league with the devil. So Micaiah, son of Imla, found it when for speaking the truth he was put in prison and fed on the bread and water of affliction. Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, was stoned to death because he testified that the people were in trouble because they had forsaken the Lord (II Chron. xviii, 25, 26; xxiv, 20, 21). The hatred of the world, however, is not strange, for the devil is the god of this age, and he is the great adversary of God and man. But when one is suffering for righteousness' sake and our God, whose we are and whom we serve, seems not to hear us and sends no deliverance then it becomes very perplexing to any but the strongest faith. See Joseph as slave and prisoner, Martha and Mary with a sick and dying brother and John the Baptist seemingly neglected and forgotten. In reply to John's question by his two disciples Jesus in that same hour wrought many miracles and said to the messengers, "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see" (verses 3-6; Luke vii, 20, 21). He also said as much as "Do not be offended, John, if I do not come to see you, and do not think it strange if I do not release you." We must remember His words in John xvi, 1-3; Isa. l, 10.

The messengers from John having departed, Jesus said to the multitudes concerning John that he was the one foretold by Isaiah and Malachi as the messenger who would prepare the way of the Messiah (Isa. xl, 3; Mal. iii, 1). He also said that among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist (verse 11). We remember that Gabriel said, "He shall be great in the sight of the Lord, * * * he shall filled with the Holy Ghost, * * * shall go before Him in the spirit at power of Elias" (Luke i, 15-17)—not great in the sight of men, but ready to testify or suffer or die that God may be glorified. In connection with John's greatness our Lord added, "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he" (verse 11). This has perplexed many because, perhaps, they have not noticed that Jesus did not say "the least in heaven," but the least in the kingdom of heaven, or kingdom of God (Luke vii, 28), which means the kingdom to be set up on this earth when Jesus shall be king over all the earth. When the kingdom comes John himself shall be greater than he ever was when here in humiliation. The least in the glorified body, like Jesus Himself (I John iii, 2), shall be greater than the greatest here in a mortal body. There is more light for us upon this in due time, but let us consider the greatness of being "like Him" and so continually behold Him as to be more like Him now.

The kingdom suffering violence (verse 12) evidently refers to the violence which John was now suffering and which Jesus, the King, was soon to suffer at the hands of the rulers. See Luke xvi, 16, R. V. They killed the herald and also cruelly murdered the King. They they violently pressed against the kingdom and caused its postponement till He shall come again in His glory. Stephen summed it up in his discourse when he said, "Ye stiff necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost—as your fathers did, so do ye. Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? And they have slain them which shewed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers" (Acts vii, 51, 52).

John the Baptist came in the spirit and power of Elijah, and had they received him and the Messiah whom he heralded the kingdom would have come (verse 14); but, having acted as they did, the real Elijah must come to herald the return of Christ in glory (Matt. xvii, 10-13). Let those receive it who can.

They said that John had a demon, and Jesus they called a glutton and a winebibber and a friend of publicans and sinners. We must not therefore think it strange if we receive similar treatment and are numbered with transgressors, reviled and persecuted for His sake. We must consider Him who endured lest we become weary. He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength.

"ONE OPERA CLOAK, $250."

High Handed Methods Won Where Meekness Had Failed.

By FRANCESS GROFF.

Miss Lilian Fairweather's state of mind was far from pleasant as she sat in one of Schenck & Schenck's stuffy little fitting rooms. Nicholas the meek, Nicholas the downtrodden, had turned. The words of his letter stood out vividly before her eyes:

Jacob served seven years for Rachel and then got her sister. I have served five years, see no hope of getting you in seven, and you have no sister. Unless you say yes in a week to the question I have asked you so often I sail on the Mesaba for Europe. Remember, at a signal from you I shall turn back at the last moment, but my terms are unconditional surrender.

Nicholas had been the subject of gibes, both to his face and behind his back. One that she had coined she gave current issue among her friends because she fancied it was clever.

"Church on Sunday, theater Monday, flowers Tuesday, candy Wednesday, new book Thursday, dinner Friday, dead sick on Saturday of Nicholas Purdy."

It did not seem so clever to her now after a week during which there had been no one to carry her prayer book to church, no one to take her to first night performances, no flowers, no candy, no books, no dinners, no Nicholas Purdy, but there had been a wearied feeling. Much to her own surprise, she found that she missed the man more than his attentions.

This was the day of sailing for the Mesaba. From some feeling—curiosity, of course—she knew the pier from which it started, the car lines leading to it and the time it took to get there. She certainly would not give in to him, especially after the insolent tone of the letter. Yet it was from a fear that she might so far forget herself as to go down to the dock and lose her supremacy over Nicholas forever that had brought her here. Her suit very opportunely needed alteration. Miss Macy, the head fitter, had hurried off with it, promising to seek something to throw around her form a few minutes till it was ready.

Then a girl had appeared with a gorgeous pink opera cape. Such raiment was far beyond the slender means of the struggling artist, but for once she forgot to revel in its richness. She was looking anxiously at her watch. Three-quarters of an hour and then the Mesaba would clear her docks.

How fast the minutes flew by! Half an hour now!

She pounded on the door. Miss Macy hustled in. "I'm so sorry, Miss Fairweather. I've been delayed with some customers. You shall have your dress shortly."

"But I must have it at once!"

"Impossible!" And Miss Macy bustled off.

Lilian was now frantic.

She caught the next girl that passed.

"Give me a dress, any kind of a dress!"

A moment later she was tearing a price mark off a sloppy dress of a dirty chocolate color. She rushed into it, quite unmindful of the fact that it was two sizes too large, long waisted and bulging at the hips. Throwing the opera cape around her, she stuck on her blue hat and rushed madly from the store.

She hailed a passing cab. "Five dollars if you get me to pier 17 before the Mesaba sails!"

It seemed an eternity until she was rushing down the long wooden shed. Pushing aside the man who demanded her ticket, she ran up the gangplank, and her feet had scarcely left it when it was withdrawn. No Nicholas was in sight. She approached the steward and asked him where Mr. Purdy's stateroom was. He replied that no such party was booked.

Then Lilian gave a gasp. She ran to the end of the steamer nearest the dock only to find that the vessel had begun to move. She uttered a cry, which attracted the attention of a youngish man sitting on the piles at the corner of the pier hanging his heels over the water.

He jumped up and whistled, for he realized the full enormity of the situation. She was going, and he was to be left behind. The ocean would separate them, besides a sea of misunderstandings. His bluff had worked beyond his expectations.

He ran to the steamer's starting place and found a stout commercial looking man in a state of great excitement bargaining with the owner of a small tug to take him to the outgoing steamer. Nicholas joined forces with him. A common object—to catch the steamer—bound them together.

The thing was all arranged in a few minutes. They quickly got alongside and hailed the steamer.

There was already great excitement aboard the Mesaba. A woman in a dirty brown gown, a pink opera cloak and a blue hat was begging hysterically to be taken back to land.

The captain saw peace for him when he perceived the tug. The steamer stopped, and Lilian was transferred to meet her shameless lover and the justly indignant costumer. She began to upbraid the former when the commercial man interfered:

"Easy now, easy. What about m, $250 wrap, not to mention the dress? I see you have damaged the cloak so we can't take it back. Now, how do I know you can pay for it?"

Poor Lilian! Two hundred and fifty dollars on demand! Her cheeks burned as she faltered, "I can't."

"Well, then, I will have you arrested for grand larceny!" cried the irate Mr. Schenck.

But Nicholas now interrupted angrily. "How do you dare, sir, to speak so to my wife?"

"Your wife? She is Miss Fairweather, and we have her name on our books."

"My wife. We were starting for Europe today, but were both detained, as you see."

Despair and rage and thankfulness mingled in poor Lilian's mind. But she acknowledged to herself that Nicholas had taken the only way out of the difficulty and caught at the proffered suggestion.

"Miss Macy took my dress to fix it and kept it until I knew I should miss the steamer." And she burst into tears.

"Now, sir, do you understand, and will you accept my check for $250? I will send it tomorrow. You know me. I think, Nicholas Purdy of the firm of Purdy & Bros."

"Yes, sir. I thank you, sir, and I beg the lady's pardon. I did not know she was Mrs. Purdy."

"Well, that's settled. Here are our two cabs. You go in one, my wife and I in the other."

With the look of a loving and obedient wife Lilian staggered into the cab. Once inside, her expression underwent an astonishing change. There were several moments of silence, while the storm gathered fury and broke.

"Scoundrel! Liar! To harrow my feelings for a week, to get me down like this and then to find it was all a bluff! I might have known you would not have spirit enough to do it!"

"I like you when you're mad. But if I were you, Lil, I wouldn't take on so in that thing. High tragedy and it don't agree. By the way, the cloak's mine. I might strip it from you and expose you to the public gaze in the other enormity."

"Oh, you are too bad! I suppose you think you have bought me with your $250!"

"I wish I could, were it a thousand times that amount—I mean your heart, my dear, and I know money can't buy that."

Silence for a few moments.

"You'll acknowledge, Lilian, the situation was awkward. Didn't I do the only thing I could do?"

"Oh, oh, oh, dear!" sobbing. "It's all been too much!"

"That's right, little girl; lean your head against me. That's where it ought to have been long ago, if only I had had the right sort of spunk."

"What do you call the exhibition you are giving me, then?"

"Well, little girl, I don't see what else I can do. When fair words for five years will not win a girl and yet a man finds that she does not care for him a little he is going to get her the way he can. You have shown me that the only way is to take possession as the savages do."

Ten minutes later the cab drew up in front of the boarding house where Miss Lilian Fairweather occupied a fourth floor back room.

"Goodby, savage," then to herself as she mounted the stairs: "It is not so bad to be taken possession of. I do like a masterful man!"

Designed For a Profession.

It was impossible to shake James Martin's self esteem or satisfaction in any way. He had not been the Willowville shoemaker for twenty-eight years to acquire modesty. "I'm glad to hear your boy Willie's got a chance to teach in the college your money put him through," he said loftily to a summer resident as he sewed in the tongue of her shoe. "I always thought he'd be a good one for such a job."

"You did?" said the lady indifferently.

"I certainly did," and James Martin looked at her from his seat on the bench as from a pinnacle of wisdom. "I said to a number of folks after one or two conversations with him as to his prospects when he's just through high school—I said, 'Take a young feller like him that can't tell kid from pebble goat without you point out the difference, and best thing for him would be a so called profession,' I said, 'where he could make use of books, have 'em handy and not trust his own intellects, brain powers nor judgment except in extreme cases, sech as would seldom or never occur.'

"That's what I said then, and I say it now, ma'am."—Exchange.

An Intelligent Dog.

A gentleman once had a very handsome and intelligent collie in his possession. One day he lost the dog when taking it through the city. The creature in vain searched everywhere for his master and at last, seeing a hansom cab creeping leisurely along, jumped into it and settled himself determinedly on the seat. The driver tried to entice it out, but without success, and a little crowd collected. None dared to tackle the dog, but at last a facetious spectator shouted out, "I say, Bill, darn me if he don't want to be druv home!" "That's it; that's what he wants," they all agreed amid shouts of laughter. Then one examined his collar and found an address clearly engraved upon it. Without further ado cabby jumped up and drove up to this same address, which proved to be the correct one. Needless to say, the cabman was substantially rewarded. The dog had been in the habit of driving home every evening with his master in a hansom and, with doggie reasoning, had decided to follow his usual custom when he had given up hope of finding his master.—London Opinion.

THURSDAY, APRIL 41, 1910.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1910

The Democrats were overwhelmingly in the majority in both branches of the General Assembly and they seized this opportunity to enact vicious partisan legislation very much as though they were in doubt whether the chance would come again. They began business by squandering money on a horde of useless employes and from the start good legislation had a rough road to travel while bad legislation required the constant efforts of the press and patriotic men of both parties, to knock out. To read the history of their daily doings was to arouse a feeling of resentment and disgust and all over the State good people were praying that its sessions would soon end. True, some measures demanded by public sentiment were passed after the most vigorous hammering was done by the press and by good men of both parties, but the Democratic majority had a high time and as far as they could they sought to take every advantage of the minority, from enacting petty party measures on up to their open defiance of the laws of Maryland and the Constitution of the United States by the passage of the Digges law refusing registration to negroes. All important measures were kept on ice until the closing hours and then rushed through under suspension of the rules. The Digges bill was introduced at 11 o'clock at night and finally passed at 2 o'clock in the morning. Perhaps on the theory that so foul was the deed that it was fitting that it should be accomplished in the dead of night when honest folk were asleep. Hundreds of bills were rushed through without six members on the floor knowing the subject matter. In the House clerk frequently would not call more that five or six names on the roll call for members to vote "aye" or "no" on pending measures and the Speaker would announce an arbitary number as voting, say 75 or 80 in favor of the measure and declare it passed. Members objected to being "voted" in that manner but were ordered to sit down. Uncle Joe Cannnn doesn't know anything. He should have attended the sessions of the Maryland legislature to get a few points!

PADDED PAYROLL COST.

It would be mighty interesting to know just what the running expense cost of the session of the Maryland legislature would have been if the controlling majorities in both branches had been as intently determined to economize as they were, by the indications, bent upon squandering. The padded payroll graft, according to the estimate of Governor Warfield in his last message, dipped out of the state treasury in 1904 about $75,000 and about the same amount in 1906. And in making this estimate the governor seems to have made a liberal allowance for all legitimate expenses of each of the sessions referred to.

It develops since adjournment that this 1910 session has broken all previous records in paying out money to "people who rendered absolutely no service to the state in return for the amounts they received." At the beginning of the session, when economy talk was the fashion, a bill was put through providing a lump sum expense fund of $150,000. This amount, according to ex-Governor Warfield's estimate, was $25,000 more than enough for all legitimate expenses. Near the end of the session, however, a deficiency bill was put through providing $50,000 additional, or a total of $200,000. Now it transpires that there is yet a shortage of between $4,000 and $5,000.

The cost of the last session exceeded the cost of any previous high-cost sessions by from $7,000 to $10,000. It does not appear that the legitimate expenses of this session are any greater than the legitimate expenses of the 1908 session. The cost of carrying the extras—the padded payroll crowd that rendered no service—has apparently been raised from $75,000 to $82,000.

THE DEATH RECORD.

REV. J. B. SHOUP.

Rev. J. B. Shoup, well known and loved by the majority of Garrett county Lutherans, died at Fitzgerald, Ga., last Friday after a year's illness of a complication of diseases. Rev. Shoup was 72 years of age. Born in Ohio he was educated for the ministry but about the time he entered into active work the war between the States broke out and he enlisted on the side of the Union and was assigned to a Pennsylvania battery of heavy artillery. The campaign carried him virtually all over the south and east and at the close of hostilities his command was at Fortress Monroe where he was retained a year or more in the service. While at Fortress Monroe it fell to Mr. Shoup's lot to personally guard Jefferson Davis while he was a Federal prisoner at that point. Mr. Shoup, until recently, was engaged in the ministry at Bittinger, this county, going to the South last fall and had planned to return here this summer. He will be missed by hundreds of people in Garrett county and elsewhere. A more extended notice of Mr. Shoup's history will be published in a later issue of this paper.

JACOB KEPNER.

Members of the family of Mr. E. D. Kepner, of Oakland, were in receipt of the information on Sunday of this week of the death of Mr. Kepner's son, Jabob, who died at Fort Worth, Texas, on Saturday. The deceased had been working in that city for a number of months and had intended to move his family there about June from a point in Pennsylvania, where they are at present residing. The deceased was about fifty years of age and leaves his wife and a number of children, nearly all of whom are grown.

Raymond Nelson, aged five years and six days, son of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Cleary, died at the home of his parents at the Weber farm, near Oakland, yesterday afternoon at 1.15 o'clock after an illness of several weeks. The little boy was an interesting child and was dearly loved by all. The funeral will occur today with interment at Deer Park where the remains will be buried by the side of a younger brother who died but few weeks ago. The parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

JOHN H. RAFTER.

Mr. John H. Rafter, one of the leading residents of Kitzmiller, Garrett county, died at his home in that place yesterday morning after a brief illness of typhoid fever, aged 62 years. Chappell.

MRS. LILY BIGGS.

Mrs. Lily Biggs, wife of Harry Biggs and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Meese, of near Deer Park, died at her home yesterday morning after an illness of several weeks of pneumonia. She leaves besides her parents her husband and twin children, now about a year old. Her age was twenty-five years.

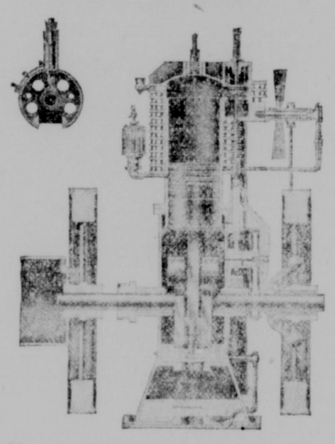
A HOT BOX



on the rear car of the special train made President Taft stop on his recent Western tour till the train crew investigated.

They discovered that there was no oil in the bearing case, and the President of the United States had to wait because some one "forgot" to put in a supply of oil.

Machinery must have oil in order to run properly, and farmers must have machinery in order to do their work.

The best gasoline engine is the farmer's best friend. But there are engines and engines.

You recall the water cooled engine you or your neighbor bought.

Most every day you learn of a new pocket or hole to oil that you did not know was there at all. Then you were busy, and, after oiling the 13 grease cups, you overlooked oiling a little hole in one of the bearings. When you were in your biggest hurry the thing broke and the engine would not go. You had to wait three days for the expert to come out from the factory to repair it.

Now when you can get a gasoline engine that will oil every bearing automatically wouldn't you rather have it and do away with your troubles? I sell the only air cooled automatic-oiling engine in the world—made by The New Way Motor Company, Lansing, Michigan.

The New Way Motor Company absolutely guarantee that their 2½, 3½, 6 and 7 H. P. engines will automatically oil every bearing. Every New Way Air Cooled engine I sell carries that positive guarantee. See the sectional view of a 3½ H. P. "NEW WAY" engine. There is just one oiler to fill then you can start the "NEW WAY" and leave it pumping or working till noon.

The crank shaft turns in a bath of oil which is in the "NEW WAY" engine when you buy it. The piston's movement automatically forces the oil into the fan, the valves, gears and governor. It also pumps the gasoline into the intake valve.

Isn't the "NEW WAY" better than going at the water cooled engine with a nail or the spout of the oil can or a wire to pull the dirt and grease out of the oil socket? Besides, the nail always pushes some dirt into the bearings or gears and the oil will carry it along farther. Nothing will cut your bearings quicker than oil and dirt. Then you wonder why your water cooled engine has loose bearings and won't give its full power.

Wouldn't it pay you to use a "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED automatically-oiled engine and have everything run fine, no trouble, no worry, no expense, no loss of time!

You should always consider the oil you waste on your water cooled engine. You have more than a dozen places in which to squirt oil and in your hurry you use twice as much oil as necessary.

Then some rainy day you get busy and rub off all the surplus waste oil until you can actually see the paint on your engine again. Isn't it better to use the "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED automatic oiling engine, when the saving in oil and the prevention of wear and tear on your bearings will more than pay your gasoline bill for the year.

I have now on display a "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINE. It will do more than I claim for it. Come in and look it over and see it run and learn how superior it is to the very best water cooled engine ever sold.

Then when you want the very best engine for your farm get the "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED. Watch this space in next week's issue for a few more "NEW WAY" reasons.

A Story of Graustark

CHAPTER XII.

A NEW PRISONER ARRIVES.

IT was far past midnight when King was aroused from the doze into which he had fallen. Was it the 26th? Loud, quick commands came to his ears.

"They are here at last," he heard some one say. "God! This suspense has been awful. But they are here."

"Stand ready, then, with the guns!" cried Peter Brutus. "It may be a trick, after all. Don't open that door down there, Spantz, until you know who is on the outside."

"It's all right," came at last in the relieved, eager voice of Peter Brutus. "Clear the way, comrades. Give them room. By our holy father, this is a brave triumph. Ah!"

Heavy footsteps clogged into the room, accompanied by stertorious breathing and no small amount of grunting from masculine throats. Not one but three or four languages were spoken by the excited, intense occupants of the other room. King could make nothing of what they said. Finally the sharp, incisive voice of William Spantz broke through the babble, commanding silence.

"Still unconscious," he said when some measure of order was secured.

"Yes," grunted one of the men.

"We will have our instructions tomorrow. The count is to inform us before nightfall where she is to be removed to. Next week she is going to go to Schloss Marlanx," Brutus added a cruel, heartless laugh.

A woman, thought Truxton. The countess! They had brought her here from Balak, after all. What a remorseless brute Marlanx must be to maltreat his beautiful wife!

"To my mind she is more beautiful than his own wife," observed Anna Cromer. "She will be a fine morsel for the count, who has even cast longing eyes on so homely a mortal as I."

"All woman are alike to him," said Spantz sententiously.

"We must put her in the room with the American for the present. You are sure he will take her away before Saturday? A woman's cries are most distressing." It was Spantz who spoke.

"I'll stop her crying," volunteered Anna Cromer harshly.

"She's regaining her senses!" exclaimed one of the men. "Stand back, every one. Give her air."

Presently the door to King's room was thrown open. He had got to his feet and was standing in the center of the room, his eyes blinking in the glare of light.

"Hello!" cried Peter Brutus. "You up, eh? We've got a fair lady for you, my friend. Get back there, you dog! Keep in your corner."

"You are a fine bunch of human beings!" blurted Truxton.

A man with a lighted candle entered first, holding the light above his head. He was followed by two others, who supported the drooping, tottering figure of a woman.

"Let her sit there against the wall, Drago. Julius, fetch in more candles. She must not be left in the dark. He says she is not to be frightened to death. Women are afraid of the dark and strange dogs. Let there be light," scoffed Peter Brutus, spitting toward King.

"I'll get you for that some day," grated the American, white with anger.

"Enough!" commanded William Spantz. "We are not children." Turning to King, he went on, a touch of kindness in his voice: "Cheer her if you can. She is one of your class. Do not let the lights go out."

Raising his hands, he fairly drove the others from the doorway.

For a time King stood in his corner, watching the figure huddled against the opposite wall. Suddenly he started forward, his eyes wide and staring. He had seen that gray riding habit before. Two eager steps he took and then halted halfway.

"MY GOD, IS IT YOU?"

"Great Jehovah!" he gasped, unbelieving. "You! My God, is it you?"

He dropped to his knees before her, peering into her startled eyes. A look of abject terror crossed the tired, tear stained face. She shrank away from him.

"What is it? Where am I?" she moaned. "Oh, let me go! What have I done that you should bring me here? Let me go, Mr. King! You are not so wicked as"— "I—I bring you here!" he interrupted, aghast. Then he understood. Utter dismay filled his eyes. "You think that I have done this thing to you? God above us! Look! I, too, am a prisoner here. They are going to kill me after tomorrow."

"Oh, Mr. King, what does it all mean? Forgive me! I see now. You are bound; you are suffering; you are years older. What have you done? What have I done?"

"Don't shrink from me," he urged. "Try to calm yourself."

Then, with the utmost gentleness, he persuaded her to rise and walk about the little room with him.

"It will give you courage," he urged. "Poor little girl!"

She looked up into his face, a new light coming into her eyes.

"Don't talk now," he said softly. "Take your time. Hold to my arm, please. There!"

For five or ten minutes he led her back and forth across the room very tenderly. At first she was faint and uncertain; then, as her strength and wits came back to her, courage took the place of despair. She smiled wanly and asked him to sit down with her.

"Where are we? What is it all about?" she asked.

"Not so loud," he cautioned. "I'll be perfectly candid with you. You'll have to be very, very brave. But wait. Perhaps it will be easier for you to tell me what has happened to you, so far as you know. I can throw light on the whole situation, I think."

She became more excited. Her eyes flashed; she spoke rapidly. On the morning of the 23d she had gone for her gallop in the famous Ganlook road, attended by two faithful grooms from the royal stables.

"I was in for a longer ride than usual," she said, with sudden constraint. She looked away from her eager listener. "I was nervous and had not slept the night before. A girl never does, I suppose."

He looked askance. "Yes?" he queried.

She was blushing, he was sure of it. "I mean a girl is always nervous and distrait after—after she has promised, don't you see."

"No; I don't see."

"I had promised Count Vos Engo the night before that I— Oh, but it really has nothing to do with the story. I"—

Truxton was actually glaring at her. "You mean that you had promised to marry Count Vos Engo!" he stammered.

"How very strangely you talk! Are you sure—I mean, do you think it is fever? One suffers so"—

He sighed deeply. "Well, that's over! Whew! It was a dream, by Jove!"

She waited a moment and then, looking down, said very gently, "I'm so sorry for you."

Then she resumed her story.

She had gone six or eight miles down the Ganlook road when she came up with five troopers of the royal guard. One of the troopers came forward and respectfully requested her to turn off into another road until a detachment passed, in charge of a gang of desperadoes taken at the inn of the Hawk and Raven the night before. Unsuspecting, she rode off into the forest lane for several hundred yards.

It was a trap. The men were not troopers, but brigands got up in the uniform of the guard. Once away from the main highway, they made prisoners of her and the two grooms. Then followed a long ride through roads new to her.

When night came they were high in the mountains back of the monastery, many hours ahead of any pursuit. They became stupidly careless, and the two grooms made a dash for freedom. One of them was killed, but one had escaped.

Some time during the slow, torturing ride through the forest she swooned. When she came to her senses she was in a dimly lighted room, surrounded by men. The gag had been removed from her mouth. She would have shrieked out in her terror had not her gaze rested upon the figure of a man who sat opposite, his elbows on the back of the chair which he straddled, his chin on his arms. He was staring at her steadily, his black eyes catching her gaze and holding it as a snake holds the bird it has charmed.

She recognized the hard, hawklike face. There could be no mistake. She was looking into the face that made the portrait of the Iron Count so abhorrent to her—the leathery head of a cadaver with eyes that lived. She broke down and cried herself into the sleep of exhaustion.

All the next day she sat limp and helpless in the chair they had brought to her. She could neither eat nor drink. Late in the afternoon Marlanx came again. She knew not from whence he came; he stood before her suddenly as if produced by the magic of some fabled genie, smiling blandly, his hands clasped behind his back, his attitude one of designing calculation.

"He laughed when I demanded that he should restore me to my friends. He chided me when I pleaded and begged for mercy. My questions were never answered. Where am I, Mr. King? Oh, this dreadful place! Why are we here—you and I?"

King's heart throbbed fiercely once more. A vast hunger possessed his soul. In that moment he could have laid down his life for her with a smile or rejoicing.

Then he told her why she was there, why he was there and of the 26th—the dreadful 26th!

"God in heaven!" she repeated over and over again in a piteous whisper.

The light was going out.

"Quick!" he cried. "The candle! Light a fresh one. My hands are bound."

She crept to the candles and joined the wicks. A new light grew as the old one died. Then she stood erect, looking down upon him.

"You are bound. I forgot."

She started forward, dropping to her knees beside him, an eager gleam in her eyes. "If I can untie the rope—will that help? There must be one little chance for you—for us. Let me try."

"By Jove," he whispered admiringly, his spirits leaping to meet hers, "you've got pluck. You put new life in me. I—I was almost a—a quitter."

At last, after many despairing tugs, the knot relaxed. "There!" she cried, sinking back exhausted. "Oh, how it must have hurt you! Your wrists are raw!"

His arms were stiff and sore and hung like lead at his sides. She watched him with narrowed eyes while he stood off and tried to work blood and strength back into his muscles.

"Do you think you can—can do anything now, Mr. King?" she asked after a long interval. "We must escape," she said as if it were all settled.

"It cannot be tonight," he gently informed her, a sickness attacking his heart. "Don't you think you'd better try to get some sleep?"

He prevailed upon her to lie down, with his coat for a pillow. In two minutes she was asleep.

For an hour or more he sat there looking sorrowfully at the tired, sweet face, the utmost despair in his soul. At last he stretched himself out on the floor near the door, and as he went to sleep he prayed that Providence might open a way for him to prove that she was not depending on him in vain.

CHAPTER XIII.

A DIVINITY SHAPES.

IT was pitch dark when he awoke. The sound of breathing came to his ears. He sat up. His hands were free. It had not been a dream. She was lying over there asleep. The candle had burnt itself out; that was all. He crept softly across the door. In the darkness he found her and touched the garments she wore—and drew back enthralled.

Afraid to move for fear of disturbing her, he sat quietly for an hour or more. All this time his brain was working like mad in the new found desire to perform miracles for the sake of this lovely, unattainable creature. He was forgetting the prince, the horrors of the 26th; he was thinking only of saving this girl from the fate that Marlanx had in store for her. Vos Engo may have had the promise, but what could it profit him if Marlanx had the girl?

Footsteps in the outer room recalled him to the bitter reality of their position. He awoke her and whispered words of encouragement into her bewildered ears. Then he put on his coat and threw himself on the floor, first wrapping the rope about his wrists to deceive the guard.

A key turned in the padlock. Old man Spantz stood in the doorway.

"It is noon," said the old man irascibly. Then he came in and lighted a candle.

"Noon of the 25th," said Truxton bitterly. "In twenty-four hours it will be all over, eh, Spantz?"

"At noon tomorrow."

Julius Spantz brought in the food for the prisoners, setting it on the floor between them.

"It is usually the duty of our friend Julius to feed me," observed Truxton to his fellow prisoner.

"Julius?" queried the girl from the castle, peering at the man. "Not Julius Spantz of the armory?"

"The same," said Truxton. Julius laughed awkwardly.

"Enough," snarled William Spantz. His manner changed completely, however, when he turned to address the young lady. "I beg to inform you, madam, that your stay is to be brief. Tonight you will be removed to more pleasant quarters that a friend has prepared for you. As for you, my friend," turning to Truxton and smiling ironically, "I deeply deplore the fact that you are to remain. When we next gather in the room beyond a new dispensation will have begun. You may be interested then to hear what we have to say out there."

With a profound bow to the lady and a leer for King he departed, bolting the door behind him. Instantly King was at her side.

"An idea has come to me," he whispered eagerly. "I think I see a way."

"Mr. King, what is it you intend to do? Please tell me. I must know. You heard what he said about taking me to the count's. He meant Marlanx. I will die first."

"No. I will die first. By the way, I may as well tell you that I wasn't thinking altogether of how we are to escape. Why should I save you from Marlanx just to have you hurry off and get married to Vos Engo? It's a mean thought, I know," hastily; "but, just the same, I hate to think of you marrying some one else."

"Some one else?" she questioned, a pucker on her forehead.

"Oh, I know I wouldn't have a ghost of a chance even if there wasn't a Vos Engo. It isn't that," he explained. "I recognize the—er—difference in our stations and"—

"What has all this got to do with your plan to escape?"

"Nothing at all. The point I'm trying to get at is this: Don't you think it's pretty rough on a hero to save the girl for some other fellow to snap up and marry?"

"I think I begin to see," she said, a touch of pink coming into her cheeks.

"That's encouraging," he said, staring gloomily at the food he had put aside. "You are quite sure you promised Vos Engo that you'd marry him?"

"No. I did not promise him that I'd marry him."

"You said you had promised"—

"You did not allow me time to finish. I meant to say that I had promised to let him know in a day or two. That is all, Mr. King." There was a suspicious tremor in her voice.

"What's that?" he demanded. "You—you don't mean to say that— Oh, Lord, I wonder—I wonder if I have a chance—just a ghost of a chance!" He leaned very close, incredulous, fascinated. "What is it that you are going to let him know—yes or no?"

"That was the question I was considering when the brigands caught me," she answered.

"Of course he is in your own class," said Truxton glumly.

She hesitated an instant. "Mr. King, has no one told you my name—who I am?" she asked.

"You are the prince's aunt. That's all I know."

"No more his aunt in reality than Jack Tullis is his uncle."

"Who are you, then?"

"I am Jack Tullis' sister, a New Yorker bred and born, and I live not more than two blocks from your"—

He stared at her in speechless amazement. "Then—then you are not a duchess or a"— he began again.

"Not at all—a very plain New Yorker," she said, laughing aloud. "You are not disappointed, are you? Does it spoil your romance to"—

"Spoil it? Disappointed? No! By George, I—I can't believe that any such luck—no, no, I don't mean it just that way! Let me think it out. Let me get it through my head.

THE WHOLE WEIGHT OF TRUXTON KING'S BODY WAS BEHIND THE TERIFFIC BLOW.

"Miss Tullis," he said, a thrill in his voice, "you are a princess just the same. I never was so happy in my life as I am this minute. It isn't so black as it was. I thought I couldn't win you because you"—

"Win me?" she gasped.

"Precisely. Now I'm looking at it differently. I don't mind telling you that I'm in love with you—desperately in love. It's been so with me ever since that day in the park. I loved you as a duchess or a princess and without hope. Now, I—I—well, I'm going to hope. Perhaps Vos Engo has the better of me just now, but I'm in the lists with him—with all of them. If I get you out of this place—and myself as well—I want you to understand that from this very minute I am trying to win you if it lies in the power of any American to win a girl who has suitors among the nobility."

"Are—are you really in earnest?" she murmured.

"I mean every word of it. I do love you."

"I—I cannot talk about it now, Mr. King," she fluttered, moving away from him in a sudden panic. Presently he went over to her. She was standing near the candle, staring down at the flame, with a strangely preoccupied expression in her eyes.

"Forgive me," he said. "I was hasty, inconsiderate. I"—

"You quite took my breath away," she panted, looking up at him, with a queer little smile.

"I know," he murmured.

Her troubled gaze resumed its sober contemplation of the flame.

"You won't leave me to my fate because you think I'm going to marry—some one else?"

He grew very sober. "Miss Tullis, you and I have one chance in a thousand. You may as well know the truth."

"Oh, I can't bear the thought of that dreadful old man," she cried, abject distress in her eyes.

He gritted his teeth and turned away.

Late in the afternoon Anna Cromer appeared before them, accompanied by two of the men. Crisply she commanded the girl to come forth.

She was in the outer room for the better part of an hour listening to Anna Cromer and Mme. Drovnask, who dinned the praises of the great Count Marlanx into her ears. They bathed the girl's face and freshened her garments. It occurred to her that she was being prepared for a visit of the redoubtable Marlanx himself and put the question plainly.

"No," said Anna Cromer. "He's not coming here. You are going to him. He will not be Count Marlanx after tomorrow, but Citizen Marlanx, one of the people, one of us."

Little did they know Marlanx.

"Julius and Peter will come for you tonight," said Mme. Drovnask, with an evil, suggestive smile.

Truxton was beginning to tremble with the fear that she would not be returned to their room when the door was opened and she came in.

Some time in the tense, suffocating hours of the night they heard the sounds of many footsteps shuffling about the outer room. There were hoarse, guttural, subdued goodbys and well wishes, the creaking of heavy doors and the dropping of bolts. Eventually King, who had been listening alertly, realized that but two of the men remained in the room, Peter Brutus and Julius Spantz.

An hour crept by and another. King was groaning under the suspense. The time was too slowly approaching when he was to attempt the most desperate act in all this sanguinary tragedy.

He had told her of his plan. She knew the part she was to play. And if all went well—ah, then!

Suddenly he started to his feet, his jaws set, his eyes gleaming. The telegraph instrument was clicking in the outer room.

Taking his position near the girl, who was crouching in real dismay, he leaned against the wall, his hands behind him, every muscle strained and taut.

The door opened, and Julius Spantz, bewhiskered and awkward, entered. He wore a raincoat and storm hat and carried a rope in one of his hands.

"Time you were asleep," he said stupidly, addressing King. He turned to the girl. "Come, madam, I must"—

He did not complete the sentence. The whole weight of Truxton King's body was behind the terrific blow that landed on the man's jaw. Julius Spantz's knees crumpled. He lunged against the wall. The man was stunned beyond all power of immediate action. It was the work of an instant to snatch the revolver from his coat pocket.

"Guard the door!" whispered King to the girl, pressing the revolver into her hand, "and shoot if you have to!"

A handkerchief was stuffed into the unconscious man's mouth. The long coat and boots were jerked from his limp body before his hands and feet were bound with the rope he carried. The bushy whiskers and wig were removed from his head and transferred in a flash to that of the American. Then the boots, coat and hat found a new wearer.

Peter Brutus was standing in the stairway leading to the sewer.

"Hurry up, Julius," he called imperatively. "They are below with the boat."

When a tall, grunting man emerged from the inner room bearing the limp figure of a girl in a frayed raincoat he did not wait to ask questions, but rushed over and locked the cell door. Then he led the way down the narrow stairway. His only reply to King's guttural remark in the Graustark language was:

"Don't speak, you fool! Not a word until we reach the river."

A moment later the girl was being lowered through the hole into rough, eager arms. Brutus and his companion dropped through, the secret block of masonry was closed, and off through the shallow waters of the sewer glided the party riverward in the noiseless boat that had come up to ferry them.

There were three men in the boat, not counting Truxton King.

SURFACE DRAINAGE OF ROADS

This Is an Important Feature When Constructing Highways.

Professor J. R. Davidson of the Iowa Agricultural college, who is an authority on the drainage of highways to those interested in the construction of good roads, says that all roads should be provided with surface drainage. The cross section should be of such a shape as to shed all rain at once to the side ditches. To do this the road must be oval or have a crown and must be smooth. The first of these is a matter of construction and the latter a matter of maintenance. The side drainage system should be called upon to carry as much water as possible. Water cannot be carried away by the tile drains until the water has sunk through the soil and softened it.

The crown of a road should be sufficient to shed the water readily. If the road is to be maintained and kept free from ruts and holes less crown will do than if the road is to be neglected. The Iowa highway commission recommended a slope one inch to a foot for a crown in the traveled way. This is sufficient for most conditions. The crown should not be too great. A steep crown causes the travel to be concentrated at the center, where ruts will be worn and washing result. Again, there is some difficulty in vehicles passing. On the side of the crown the wheels of the vehicles have a tendency to grind the road down. This action, together with the swerving or flow action of the lower part of the wheel, has a very marked effect.

The steeper the slope of the road the more important the crown, for there is a tendency for the water to run down the track rather than to the side. If water once begins to run down the center of the roadway it is but a short time until the road is gullied out.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

REFORMED.

IN years that have flitted
I've tried to reform
And good resolutions,
Both earnest and warm,
Have patiently written,
Believe me; but, say,
They seldom have lasted
To see the next day.

When I was a junior
A notion I had
That I could put failings
That way to the bad;
But, trying it often
As New Year's came round,
It wrought me no wonders,
I speedily found.

It's not in the thinking
Of what you will do
Nor yet in the writing
That pulls the thing through.
Not backed up by action
Nor won in a fight,
The good resolutions
Won't last overnight.

So when this year started
I thought I would try
Without resolutions
My faults to put by.
And I marked down in writing
The same as before
But one—"I resolve I'll Resolve nevermore!"

More Than Their Share.

"It is said that every one has a streak of insanity."

"What's that? An insane streak for every one"—

"Yes."

"I think there must be some people who have none."

"Why?"

"Because I know several people who have at least forty streaks apiece."

Soon Be Due.

"Why, what's the matter? You look as if an accident had happened to you."

"That's right."

"Serious?"

"Not so very—only uncomfortable."

"What was it?"

"Stumbled over a broken resolution, took a header and had a bad fall."

Wrong End.

"Did I hear you say you were dealing in coal?"

"Yes."

"Well, I will have to take off my hat to you. I didn't know you were in the coal business."

"I suppose you might call it that. I buy a load once a week now."

Hope.

Welcome, little new year!
We in you believe.
Still we can but wonder
What is up your sleeve.
If you're like the old one,
We will call it white.
If you treat us better,
That will be all right.

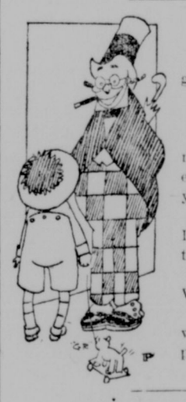
Nothing to Lose.

"Did you count the cost before going into this venture?"

"I can't say that I did."

"Would you call that good business?"

"What is the difference? I didn't have any money to pay them with anyway."



Explained.

"What is a graveyard, pa?"

"A graveyard?"

"Yes."

"Well it is—now, how shall I explain it to you?"

"Oh, I know; I have just thought."

"Have you? What is it?"

"It is a place where dead people live."

No Wholesale Criminal.

"Are you guilty as charged?" asked the judge.

"As charged?"

"Yes; in the indictment."

"Well, judge, I stole the ham all right, but I never did commit them other big words in that there paper."

Why They Scared Him.

"I never see him out with anybody."

"He fights shy of the girls."

"A woman hater?"

"Just a tight wad."

Natural Mode of Complaint.

"What is Jones barking about?"

"Says his wife treats him like a dog."

Wants Confirmation.

Though signs directing him about
Are clearly on display,
It's just exactly like a man
To stop and ask the way.

WHEN HEYBURN RISES OTHERS SEEK SAFETY

Oblivious Of Everything Except That He is Addressing Colleagues.

Ordinarily the front row of seats in the United States Senate is the most desirable in the Senate chamber, particularly during debate on an important piece of legislation. One of the exceptions to the rule is when Senator Heyburn of Idaho, rises and launches off into a speech of considerable length.

Senator Heyburn is very large—the largest man in the Senate, in fact. He likes plenty of room when he addreesses himself to weighty affairs of state, and he always gets it. The Senator himself is one of those favored with a seat in the front row. When he begins his speech he invariably stands at his desk for a few moments. His next move is to roll his chair aside in order that he may turn easily and direct his remarks to Senators at his rear. His chair goes bumping into the chair of the Senator sitting next to him. The Senator unconsciously pushes first one chair and then another until he has them rolling all about. Senators in the front row begin to get restive when they see a big piece of mahogany furniture rolling in his direction, and pretty soon they move to safer quarters.

Senator Heyburn, oblivious of the departing Senators, but realizing that there are more empty chairs to be moved, keeps on moving them. After he is well into his speech he has a clear track, all the front-row chairs are vacant and he parades back and forth, stopping now and then to pound the desk of a Senator in the second row by way of emphasis.

Senator Heyburn, by the way, dislikes the word insurgent. He can hammer away at a proposition brought out by a Republican committee as hard as ever it is hammered by Senators Dolliver, Cummins, La Follette & Co., but he does not want his criticisms labeled insurgency. His protests against provisions of certain bills are in the way of enlightenment, and if the Senate refuses to be enlightened, all well and good; he votes for the bill as the Republican majority wants him to vote for it.

That hard-working-pair—Elliott Woods, superintendent of the Capitol, and his assistant, David Lynn—have been handsomely rewarded by the Senate in the legislative bill just passed. The salaries of both these officials have been materially increased, and it was in this substantial manner that the Senate decided to compliment its two very faithful servants. Mr. Woods and Mr. Lynn have a multitude of details to follow. They must give attention to the complaints and wants and wishes of each individual member of both bodies just as though each member was the boss of the whole Government. In addition to this, the Capitol building, the two Congressional office buildings and other property directly under the authority of Congress is consigned to the care of the superintendent.

Sometimes the Senate adjourns because it runs out of work; sometimes it adjourns out of respect for a deceased member; sometimes it adjourns because the dinner hour approaches. Last Thursday, however, it adjourned to allow the Vice-President to go to the baseball game. Promptly at 2.15 Senator Hale proposed an executive session; promptly at 2.30 the body dissolved, and "Sunny Jim" Sherman hurried to the ball park.

The President was away at another Yale meeting and could not attend the game, he was to have rivaled the collegiate teams as a star attraction. Next to the President at such functions comes the Vice-President. This particular Vice-President happens to be a New Yorker, and is a neighbor to all Cornell men. When he talked Senate adjournment over with the floor leaders he urged that affairs of state could wait, and, the leaders agreeing, the affairs state waited.

This is just another precedent which "Sunny Jim" Sherman has set. As a Vice-Presidential precedent setter Mr Sherman is a wonder.

"Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senater from West Virginia?"

This was the mild way that Senator Curtis, acting as Vice-President, called down Senator Elkins during Senator Root's speech on the railroad bill.

Senator Root had paused when Senator Elkins unceremoniously stepped over to his side and began whispering something. According to the rules of formal debate, a Senator is not interrupted until he has addressed the Chair and until the Chair asks permission of the speaker. Senate debates are conducted on the lines of courtly courtesy.

Senator Elkins reddened to the very edge of all the hair he has left. Smilingly he withdrew and still smiling he took his seat. Senator Root smiled and the whole Senate smiled. There was no doubt that Senator Curtis had "put one over" on the genial statesman from West Virginia.

W. G. Conrad of Montana, candidate for the United States Senate from that State, is now at the Willard. He is East on private business, but he is observing political conditions at the same time.

Mr. Conrad is a banker, and a very rich one. He is a Virginian by birth, having been reared in Clarke county in that State. He went West many years ago and prospered handsomely. Now he has become one of the most potent political factors in the Democratic party in his state. He was much talked of as a possible Vice-Presidential candidate before John W. Kern of Indiana was chosen.

If the next Legislature is Democratic, it is said that Senator Conrad will be the successor of Senator Carter. His friends are already framing his campaign, and say that no other Democrat in the State can beat him.

Mr. Conrad's family is with him.

NEW WABASH LINE

Plan for Financing It Ratified by Western Maryland Stockholders.

Stockholders of the Western Maryland Railroad Company met in Baltimore, March 31, and ratified the financial plan as outlined by the directors for providing the cost of constructing the new extension from Cumberland, Md., to Connellsville, Pa.

The plan, as authorized, carries with it the sale of $25,496,670 unissued capital common stock of the company at $50 per share. Each stockholder will be accorded the privilege of purchasing, at the price named, an amount of the authorized issue equivalent to 75 per cent. of the amount of stock, either common or preferred, standing in his name on the books of the company.

Winslow S. Pierce, of New York, chairman of the board of the Western Maryland, explained that the portion of the new extension in Maryland would be built by the George's Creek and Cumberland Railroad, which is owned by the Western Maryland, and that a new company will be organized in Pennsylvania to take care of the construction work beyond the Maryland line. The Western Maryland, of course, will hold the securities of the company which is to be organized.

Now that the plan of the directors to build the road has been authorized, there will be no delay in completing the line, and it is hoped to have trains running into Pittsburg within two years.

While it is not definitely known yet, it is intimated that the Rockefeller interests will take a large block of the stock to be sold under the plan as decided upon. What remains unsold will be taken over by the syndicate organized by Blair & Co., of New York.

BONAPARTE SCORES NEW FRANCHISE LAW

Says Members Who Voted for It Had No Right To Places.

That a large proportion of the members of the Legislature who voted for the Digges disfranchising bill have been holding office and drawing their salaries dishonestly, and, furthermore, that they knew when they took their oath of office that no honest man would have accepted office under such circumstance as attended their "pretended" election under the Wilson ballot laws, was the bold statement made this morning to a reporter of The News by former Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte.

"Effrontery" is the word that Mr. Bonaparte applies to the action of the Legislature, along with other terms a little stronger even, when he stated that the Democratic party wants to make Maryland a one-party State and make cheating unnecessary on their part, "very much," says he, "as if a pickpocket should promise not to steal any more provided those from whom he had stolen would raise a sufficient fund for his benefit to enable him to live comfortably on the income."

Mr. Bonaparte also intimates very strongly that there may be no necessity to wait for the new law to be put in force before proceedings can be instituted to nullify the disfranchising scheme. Just what opening there is for such proceedings, however, he decline to disclose on the ground that it would be impolitic at this time. He does not desire, he says, to warn the Democratic party so that it may call an extra session of the Legislature and plug up some possible holes in its pet measure.

In speaking of the Digges plan Mr. Bonaparte said:

I saw the Digges bill only late yesterday afternoon. For some rather obvious reasons it was very difficult to obtain a copy. It is, to say the least, an extraordinary measure, and places the people of Maryland in a far from flattering light before the American Union. To understand its astounding impudence we must remember that a large proportion of those members of the Legislature who voted for it had no more right, in good morals, to the seats they occupied or the pay they drew during the session than you or I had. They were not elected by the people of their respective counties, but returned as elected through the shameless frauds and gross official perjury of supervisors of elections in some of the Wilson law counties, and they knew when they took the oath and knew when they voted for this bill that no honest man would have accepted office under such circumstances as attended their pretended election. They practically admit in the preamble of this bill that the Wilson ballot laws purposely omit all the essential guarantees of fair election and that the people of the State desire to repeal said laws and thus do away with what they call the widespread demoralization caused by the outrageous frauds committed in the counties where these laws prevail and to which they themselves owe their seats, and then they have the effrontery to propose that our election laws be so changed as to make Maryland a one-party State, and thus make cheating on their part unnecessary, very much as if a pickpocket should promise not to steal any more provided those from whom he had stolen would raise a sufficient fund for his benefit to enable him to live comfortabls on the income.

"Moreover, when the people of Maryland have twice rejected by large majorities proposals to amend the Constitution of the State as these gentry wish it amended majorities obtained notwith-standing all the frauds they could commit under the shelter of those very Wilson ballot laws, these beneficiaries of the crimes thus committed propose actually to force through another like amendment which they well know would be overwhelmingly defeated on a fair vote by the simple device of applying the amendment before it is adopted; or, in other words, usurping the powers of a Constitutional convention.

"I do not care now to comment in detail on the measure—this will be done in due time—but there are two provisions in it which deserve mention. At the end of Section 23 it is provided that any person appealing from a refusal to register him, or even any person against whose registration some one else shall have appealed, shall be deemed to have based his claim or defense upon this Act, and shall be estopped to set up any claim or defense on any other ground; In other words, the authors of this measure know so well it is unconstitutional that they attempt in this cowardly way to prevent the question of its constitutionality from being raised.

"Again in Section 35b. if is provided that 'no de facto election held hereunder shall be vacated ed or set aside on mandamus or other proceeding for the purpose, unless the petition for mandamus or such other proceeding be instituted by the Governer or Attorney General.' Once more those who pretend to believe in the validity of this law here show their utter insincerity, they are so reasonably afraid of the result of any test of its legality that they are trying to prevent such a test; for it is needless to say that they believe the Governor and the Attorney General can be relied upon to institute no such proceeding, and I may add that, so far as I can see, neither of them would have any standing in court if he did.

"I am glad to say, in conclusion, that I think this measure is no less ill judged than contemptible and immoral. I believe its unconstitutionality can be, and I hope will be, clearly and conclusive shown before it can be put into effect, and I see in it an issue for the Republicans of Maryland at the election of next autumn, which, if they are wisely guided and have worthy candidates, will very probably give us six Republican Representatives from Maryland in the next Congress."—Baltimore News.

AN AGED WOMAN'S DEATH RESULTED FROM BURNS

Mrs. Peter Miller, of Near Gortner, Died After Days of Agony.

Mrs. Peter Miller, aged 77 years, 11 months and 20 days, residing out toward the Red House from Oakland, was so badly burned last Thursday morning that she succumbed, as a result of her injuries, on Sunday night after intense suffering.

Mrs. Miller received her burns while out in a field burning grass which communicated to her clothing, and being alone her entire body from her ankles to beneath her arms was incinerated. At some distance from her, however, a young man was at work in an adjoining field and her cries attracted his attention, but when he arrived at the spot her clothing had been burned from her body and she was writhing in agony upon the ground.

She was carried to her home by neighbors who had been made acquainted with what had occurred and medical attention was rendered by Dr. Hinebaugh of Oakland, who applied soothing lotions and made the sufferer as comfortable as possible.

Mrs. Miller was quite a remarkable woman. Notwithstanding her horrible injuries she retained all her faculties up to within eighteen hours preceding her death. Her funeral took place yesterday, the interment being made near her home. She leaves surviving her an aged husband and a large circle of friends. She was a member of the Dunkard church.

Mrs. Martha Gregg will remove to Piedmont to live with her daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Loar and daughter, Miss Ethel, for the benefit of whose health they have been spending some months in Florida, have returned to their home here with Miss Ethel's health much improved by the trip.—Grafton Sentinel.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE

Caught by Rapidly Revolving Saw Joseph Kisner's Skull is Sawed Through.

Joseph Kisner, formerly of near Oakland but for several weeks past engaged in operating the Ashby saw mill near Deer Park, escaped with his life by a hair's breadth last Saturday morning.

Mr. Kisner was beneath the saw superintending an adjustment to the carrier which removes the saw dust when his hat came in contact with the machine. Quick as thought his head was drawn against the teeth of the saw and his skull sawed through to the membrane covering the brain. Had the saw penetrated his head the minutest fraction deeper death would have resulted.

His injuries were dressed by Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh and the patient is progressing rapidly toward recovery.

Obituary.

On April 13, the Death Angel again hovered over the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson S. Clary and this time took from their loving arms their only son, Raymond Nelson Clary, a bright little boy, aged five years and six days. The hearts of his parents and friends are bowed down with grief, for Raymond was the second child to pass away in five weeks' time.

We sometimes wonder why the best and brightest are taken, but when we remember how Jesus loved the little children while here on earth we cannot be surprised when he takes them from the sins and temptations of this world unto himself. The parting is hard for us to bear, but it is only for a time. Some day, some time, our Lord will come and we shall again meet all those who have gone before and then we shall clearly understand things which are now hidden from us. They have parted from us but not forever. In that better land we shall again clasp hands and again see the love light shining in those eyes which we here see closed in death.

Raymond was laid to rest in the beautiful Deer Park cemetery by the side of his baby sister who had preceded him to the spirit world by only a few weeks. The funeral services were conducted by C. W. Hudson, pastor of the Baptist church, assisted by Rev. Brumbaugh of the Methodist church. C. W. H.

A special meeting of the Board of County Commissioners will be held at the office of the Board next Wednesday for the purpose of appointing district assessors. While the Commissioners have not been officially notified it is understood at the office of the Board that these appointments must be made prior to May 1st and the district assessors will be required to meet at the court house on the 3rd to receive their instructions and be sworn into office, hence the short notice for the meeting of the Board to make the necessary appointments.

THE ARREST OF AN OLD-TIME OFFENDER

Arthur Fazenbaker, of Piney Swamp, Landed in Garrett County Jail.

Deputy Sheriff Shartzer brought to Oakland last Saturday a man named Arthur Fazenbaker, of Piney Swamp, back of Lonaconing, whom the officers have been seeking to round up for several years past. Fazenbaker stands charged with nearly all of the minor crimes on the calendar and is considered a "bad man." He has been under arrest a number of times, twice during the past three or four years making his escape from the officers while being brought to jail here. The following account of the arrest of Fazenbaker is taken from the Lonaconing correspondence to the Cumberland Times of Monday:

Arthur Fazenbaker, the terror of Piney Swamp, is cooling his heels in Oakland jail. For six years this crossroads desperado has evaded the sheriff of Garrett county and all his deputies. This "swamp angel" has been as nimble and evasive as the Irishman's flea. Fazenbaker is charged with every crime for which a penalty has been made and provided. He bushwhacked a deputy sheriff and winged him. He sent a charge of shot after Donald Simpson and fanned him so close that some of the shot was dug out of Donald's harveyized shirt front. He is suspected of burning a sawmill and he has maintained a harem in Piney Swamp for several years, and is the de facto sire of nine children.

The sheriff of Garrett county sent his son after Fazenbaker several months ago. Young Shartzer located Fazenbaker on Laurel Run, where he was employed in a sawmill. The young deputy got within a few feet of him and was reaching for him, when Fazenbaker sprang away and ran for the woods and escaped.

Last Friday afternoon the boy deputy came to Lonaconing with Ed White. They locked up Henry McLarkie and "Tug" Glenn, and arrangements were made to leave Lonaconing at 4 o'clock Saturday morning in a rig hired from Thomas Udy. The posse left on time, and about half-past five reached the shack in Piney Swamp, where Fazenbaker keeps his "wives" and numerous progeny. The deputy knocked on the door, but no one answered the summons. Then the door was forced in and the deputy and "Tug" Glenn entered with guns drawn and cocked. A man named Henry Shriver came down the stairs and wanted to know why this intrusion. The deputy forced Shriver up the stairs at the muzzle of his pistol and followed him, with "Tug" close behind. In the upper room they found two women and several children. There were three beds in the room. Fazenbaker wasn't visible. Turning up one of the bed ticks which bulged suspiciously on one side, the terror of Piney Swamp was revealed. He was ordered to throw up his hands and he did so. The deputy handcuffed him and led him downstairs.

While this was going on Henry McLarkie "surrounded" the shanty, which has only one door and one window, and with his .38 cocked, kept off nine dogs and took a "cussin'" from Granny Fazenbaker, who lives in another shack up against her son's seraglio. With the dauntless McLarkie on the outside and the boy deputy and "Tug" on the inside there was no possibility of escape.

The prisoner was brought to Lonaconing and lodged in the lockup until one o'clock, when he was taken to Piedmont and from there to Oakland on train 55.

Ed White went to Piney Swamp on Thursday and found that Fazenbaker had returned, and was down the run fishing. Sheriff Shartzer was notified, and he at once sent his son, Clyde, to make the arrest. Clyde took White with him to Lonaconing, and it was intended that White should assist in capturing Fazenbaker, but when the posse was ready to leave Lonaconing White didn't show up.

In the two shanties at Piney Swamp, which stand within three feet of each other, live fifteen Fazenbakers. Notwithstanding that two of the older men have an income of twenty dollars per month from the government, they live in squalor. The people of that section of Garrett will sleep all the sounder because the long-ranged bushwhacker is where he can keep his feet dry for a while.

GENERAL ASSESSORS FOR GARRETT COUNTY NAMED

By Governor Crothers in the Persons of U. M. Stanton and C. M. Miller.

Governor Austin L. Crothers, under the provisions of the assessment bill passed by the recent Legislature, has appointed many of the general assessors for the various counties of the State, among them being those for Garrett county, the executive having named on Saturday last Messrs. Uriah M. Stanton, of Grantsville, and Charles M. Miller, of Swanton.

Both gentlemen are progressive, and liberal minded and their selection gives general satisfaction to the people of the county. They will begin their labors at the time specified in the general assessment bill.

The district assessors will be named by the Board of County Commissioners at the meeting of that body to be held next week. A number of applicants for the positions have already filed their petitions to be appointed.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Epworth League was held in the M. E. church Tuesday evening, with Rev. P. Z. Musgrave presiding. After a service of song by the Junior choir, under the leadership of Mr. W. D. King and a duet by Misses Lee and Long an excellent address was delivered by Rev. G. R. Williamson, of Oakland, full of wit and wisdom. This was followed by a solo by Mr. Harry L. Streib, of Baltimore, who is spending a short vacation here. Then the social feature held sway for thirty minutes when lemonade and cake were served to every one present. These monthly meetings of the League are very enjoyable and should have a much larger attendance.

Mr. Geo. B. Miller and family moved into the Delph Feather cottage on Wheeling Avenue. Mr. Miller is a carpenter and comes from Luke, Md.

Judge T. J. Elliott, of Baltimore, is here superintending repairs on his cottage. Mr. Harry L. Streib has the work in charge.

Mrs. Amanda Michael has moved from the Pierce cottage on L street to a cottage on K street formerly occupied by the family of Mr. C. F. Dawson.

Mrs. Virginia Pierce has returned to the Park after an absence of several months. She is occupying her own cottage on L street.

The Virginia Homes, a popular boarding house belonging to Mr. P. T. Garthright, will be under the management of Miss Carrie Morrison this season.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Hayden will move into the Vance cottage May 1st.

Miss Ettie Springer took possession of the Yoder cottage on G street Tuesday and will conduct a boarding house the coming season.

Mrs. George Keckley, of Bond, this county, is visiting her mother, Mrs. John Whirl, of Loch Lynn, who is seriously ill.

There are no vacant houses in Loch Lynn. Reason: natural gas.

Natural gas has been put in the postoffice building, Loch Lynn.

There is some talk of changing the name of the postoffice here to Loch Lynn as the Mountain Lake postoffice is in that town and likely to remain there.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday evening at 7.45.

Rev. Joseph Lee, a former pastor of Andrews M. E. church of this city, spent a few hours here Monday en route to his home at Mountain Lake Park. He had been in Wheeling and delivered a sermon in one of the churches in that city Sunday.—Grafton Sentinel.

Mr. Richard Peam still holds on to his fine team of horses although he has been offered $560 for the pair.

Rev Stoneking, of near Loch Lynn, drives the finest span of ponies in the county. They are beauties.

The Fairmont Construction Company, owners of the Loch Lynn Hotel, have installed an electric plant in the hotel and will make their own light in the future.

To Mark Boundary.

Under the direction of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Maryland vs. West Virginia, representatives of the two states met in Washington on Tuesday and appointed surveyors to resurvey and mark the old Deakins line between the two commonwealths. Maryland will be represented on the survey by Mr. W. McCulloh Brown and West Virginia by Mr. Julius K. Monroe, of Kingwood.

A REMARKABLE SEWING MACHINE DEMONSTRATION

At Which One of The Free Make Was Given Away by the Manufacturers.

A startling and remarkable sewing machine demonstration closed yesterday afternoon at the store of Messrs. J. M. Davis & Sons, Second street, when one of the highest priced machines manufactured by The Free Sewing Machine Company of Chicago, Ill., was given away, Miss Alice Hesen, of Oakland, being the recipient, who is now the possessor of two of these excellent machines, the lady having purchased one earlier in the day.

The demonstration and giving away of the machine was for advertising purposes, and the patronage accorded the local agents during the three days' demonstration conducted by Mr. Eader, of Baltimore, general agent for Maryland and other eastern states, was eminently satisfactory to all parties concerned, ten or more of the machines having been purchased by as many persons during the three days of the demonstration.

The machine given away by the firm, as well as those sold and carried in stock by the local dealers, has a large number of improvements and patents not found in any other machine on the market. The advantages of The Free over other machines can only be appreciated by examination and demonstation at the hands of an experienced operator such as Mr. Eader proved himself to be. The rotoscillo of The Free sewing machine is the new movement invented by Wm. C. Free and is the reason it will sew with 120 cotton through wood, lead, muslin, chiffon, liberty silk, crepe, tissue paper and forty-eight thicknesses of muslin at one continuous operation without the changing of needles, length of stitch or loosening the tension.

Mr. Eader who has been in the sewing machine business for years with the old standard companies, seeing the advantages of The Free and that it was destined to become the leading machine, contracted with Mr. Free, less than a year ago, as general manager. He is untiring in his efforts to show the many improvements of The Free and hundreds of ladies attended the demonstration and examined the machine which resulted in making some ten or more sales during the week, among the purchasers being five dressmakers that have not only indorsed the machine but have backed up their indorsement by buying.

OAKLAND TO HAVE A NEW PLAY HOUSE

Plans Are Being Prepared for Knights of Pythias Building.

The building so long in contemplation by the local lodge Knights of Pythias as a home and also as an investment by the members of that organization who have formed themselves into an improvement association, is soon to be erected as plans for the structure are in course of preparation by Mr. D. E. Bolden, of Oakland.

The building will be erected on the lot owned by the association located on Third street and will be 44x100 feet, three stories high with all modern conveniences and improvements.

The plans contemplate, in addition to a large room for the lodge, an opera capable of seating several hundred. Entrance will be on the ground floor with two balconies and boxes above and below. Office rooms will also be provided and dressing rooms will be in the rear of the stage apart from the main building.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JOHN H. RAFTER.

John H. Rafter, one of the leading citizens of Kitzmiller, passed to his reward April 13th, at 6:45 a. m. He had been suffering from influenza which later developed into typhoid fever complicated by acute bright's disease. He was born in West Virginia in what is now Mineral county in the year 1846 and came to Garrett county in 1867. In 1869 he was married to Victoria E. Kitzmiller, who, with their four children, Roy O., Claude E., Mrs. Ethel Bender and Mrs. Lillian Chappell, wife of Delegate Chappell, survive him.

Mr. Rafter was one of the leading persons concerned in the development of the first mine opened in the vicinity of Blaine, now owned by the Blaine Mining Co. He was for several years the successful manager of the Blaine Mercantile Co., and was always interested in the building up of the town, and in this direction no doubt took the lead. At the time of his death he was serving his second term in the town council.

Mr. Rafter joined the Methodist Episcopal church in 1869, and remained a member until his death. He has done much for the advancement of the church of his choice in the community in which he lived. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Sutton, in the Kitzmiller Methodist church, and interment was made in the Kitzmiller cemetery. We do not weep as those "who have no hope, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." W. W. S.

JOHN H. CHASE.

John H. Chase, of Los Angeles, Cal., formerly of Garrett county, died Monday night at a point near Parkersburg, W. Va., while en route to his former home near Hoyes, this county, from Los Angeles, Cal., on train No. 2 of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Mr. Chase was being accompanied to this county by his wife, who was a daughter of the late Rev. Joseph DeWitt. While his death was expected it was hoped by his wife that she would be enabled to reach relatives and friends before dissolution took place. For a number of years the deceased was a resident of the far western city where he was engaged in contracting work. He and Mrs. Chase visited relatives in this county about three years ago, returning to Los Angeles where the deceased was stricken with tuberculosis the latter part of last year. The remains of the deceased were taken from the train here and prepared for burial by Undertaker Bolden and later sent to Hoyes where the funeral will occur either this afternoon or tomorrow.

Snow Storms In Vogue.

This has been a remarkably short summer, the season, apparently, having started along about March 1st and after more than a month of warm, at times, sultry, weather, winter descended upon this section of the country Tuesday morning covering the ground completely. The experience was repeated again Yesterday morning and up to noon flakes fell as thick and fast as at any time during February. The mercury, however, did not indicate freezing and the snow melted as it fell except in protected places where it remained late in the day. While farmers are pretty well satisfied that the fruit is still unharmed yet they fear results should the cold snap continue.

A Story of Graustark

CHAPTER XIV.

ON THE RIVER.

No word was spoken during this cautious, extraordinary voyage underground. The pseudo Julius supported his charge in the stern of the boat. Peter Brutus sat in the bow, a revolver in his hand, his gaze bent upon the opaqueness ahead.

At last the boat crept out into the rainy, starless night. He drew the skirts of his own mackintosh over her shoulders and head. The night was so inky black that one could not see his hand before his face.

At least two of the occupants opened their throats and lungs and gulped in wet, fresh air.

It was now that he began to wonder, to calculate against the plans of their unseen escort. Whither were they going? The occasional creak of an oar, a whispered oath of dismay, the heavy breathing of toilers, the soft splashing of the mist—that was all; no sound on the broad, still river.

Truxton began to chafe under the strain. His uneasiness was increased by the certain conviction that before long they would be beyond the city, the walls of which were gradually slipping past.

He considered their chances if he were to overturn the frail boat and strike out for shore in the darkness. This project he gave up at once. He did not know the waters or the banks between which they glided. They were past the walls now and rowing less stealthily. Before long they would be in a position to speak aloud. It would be awkward for him.

Suddenly the boat turned to the right and shot toward the unseen bank. They were perhaps half a mile above the city wall. Truxton's mind was working like a triphammer. He was recalling a certain nomad settlement north of the city, the quarters of fishermen, poachers and horse traders. These people, he was not slow to surmise, were undoubtedly hand in glove with Marlanx, if not so surely connected with the misguided committee of ten.

He had little time to speculate on the attitude of the denizens of this unwholesome place. The prow of the boat grated on the pebbly bank, and Peter Brutus leaped over the edge into the shallow water.

"Come, on Julius—hand her over to me!" he cried.

As he leaned over the side to seize the girl in his arms Truxton King brought the butt of the heavy revolver down upon his skull. Brutus dropped across the gunwale with a groan, dead to all that was to happen in the next half hour or more.

"HANDS UP! QUICK!" HE CRIED.

Leaning forward, he had the two amazed oarsmen covered with the weapon.

"Hands up! Quick!" he cried. Two pairs of hands went up, together with strange oaths. Truxton's eyes had grown used to the darkness; he could see the men quite plainly. "What are you doing?" he demanded of Loraine, who, behind him, was fumbling in the garments of the unconscious Brutus.

"Getting his revolver," she replied, with a quaver in her voice.

"Good!" he said exultantly. "Let's think a minute," he went on. "We don't dare turn these fellows loose, even if we disarm them. They'll have a crowd after us in two minutes."

"We'll keep the boat. There! Now push off, Newport." For King had recognized his guard in the witch's hovel in the person of one of the oarsmen.

"What the devil"— began Newport, but King silenced him. The boat slowly drifted out into the current.

"Now row!" he commanded. With his free hand he reached back and dragged the limp Brutus into the boat. "Gad, I believe he's dead!" he muttered.

"Can you swim?" demanded King.

"Not a stroke," gasped Newport. "Good Lord, pal, you're not going to dump us overboard! It's ten feet deep along here."

"Pull on your left, hard. That's right. I'm going to land you on the opposite shore."

Two minutes later they ran up under the western bank of the stream, which at this point was fully 300 yards wide. Under cover of the deadly revolver the two men dropped into the water, which was above their waists. The limp form of Peter Brutus was pulled out and transferred to the shoulders of his companions.

"Good night," called out Truxton King cheerily. He had grasped the oars.

"I'll row over to the east side," announced King to the girl, "but I don't like to get too close to the walls. Some one may have heard the shouts of our friends back there."

Not another word passed between them for ten or twelve minutes. She peered anxiously ahead, looking for signs of the barge dock, which lay somewhere along this section of the city wall.

At last the sound of rapidly working rowlocks came to the girl's ears.

"They're after us," grated Truxton in desperation. "They've got word to friends one way or another. By Jove, I'm nearly fagged too! I can't pull much farther. Hello! What's this?"

The side of the boat caromed off a solid object in the water, almost spilling them into the wind blown river.

"The docks!" she whispered. "We struck a small scow, I think. Can you find your way in among the coal barges?"

He paddled along slowly, feeling his way, scraping alongside the big barges which delivered coal from the distant mines. At last he found an opening and pushed through. A moment later they were riding under the stern of a broad cargoless barge, plumb up against the water lapped piles of the dock.

Standing in the bow of the boat, he managed to pull himself up over the slippery edge. It was the work of a second to draw her up after him. He gave the boat a mighty shove, sending it out into the stream once more.

In a few minutes loud curses came from the river, proclaiming the fact that the pursuers had found the empty boat. Afterward they were to learn that Newport's shouts had brought a boat load of men from the opposite bank, headed by the innkeeper, in whose place Loraine was to have encountered Marlanx later on, if plans had not miscarried.

By this time King had located the open space which undoubtedly afforded room for the transfer of cargoes from the dock to the company's yards inside the walls. Without hesitation he drew her after him up this wide, sinister roadway.

The pursuers were trying for a landing, noisily, even boisterously. It struck Truxton as queer that these men were not afraid of alarming the watchmen on the docks or the man at the gate above. Suddenly it came to him that there would be no one there to oppose the landing of the miscreants. No doubt hundreds of men already had stolen through these gates during the night, secreting themselves in the fastnesses of the city, ready for the morrow's fray.

They rushed up the narrow railway chutes and through one of the numerous gateways that opened out upon the barge docks. No one opposed them. No one was standing guard. From behind came the sound of rushing footsteps. Lightning flashed in the sky, and the rumble of thunder broke over the desolate night.

"They'll see us by the lightning," gasped Truxton, almost ready to drop from faintness and exhaustion.

Following a vivid flash of lightning, two shots were fired by the men who were now plunging up through the gates, a hundred yards or more away. The same flash of lightning showed to King the narrow, muddy street that stretched ahead of them. Instead of doing the obvious thing he turned sharply to the left, between the lines of freight cars. Their progress was slow.

At last they came to the end of their rope. They were literally up against the great city wall.

A car door stood open in front of them. He waited for a second flash of lightning to reveal to him the nature of its interior. It was quite empty. Without hesitation he clambered in and pulled her up after him. They fell over on the floor, completely fagged.

A few minutes later the storm broke. He managed to close the door against the driving torrents.

"We've fooled them," he managed to whisper close to her ear. "They won't look here. You're safe, Loraine. Gad, I'd like to see any one get you away from me now!"

She pressed his arm. Then she was fast asleep.

He sat with his back against the side of the car, a pistol in one hand, the other lying tenderly upon the drenched hair of the girl whose head rested upon his leg. She had slipped down from his shoulder. He did not have the desire or the energy to prevent it. Manfully as he had fought against the impelling desire to sleep, he could not beat it off. His last waking thought was of the effort he must make to reach Dangloss with the warning.

Something stirred in the far end of the car—a still small noise as of something alive that moved with the utmost wariness. A heavy, breathing body crept stealthily across the intervening space, so quietly that a mouse could have made but little less noise.

An instant later the bluish flare of a sulphur match struggled for existence, growing stronger and brighter in the hand of a man who stood above the sleepers.

CHAPTER XV.

THE GIRL IN THE RED CLOAK.

Inside of an hour after the return of the frightened, quivering groom who had escaped from the brigands in the hills Jack Tullis was granted permission by the war department to take a hundred picked men with him in the effort to overtake and capture the abductors of his sister. The dazed groom's story hardly had been told to the horrified brother before he was engaged in telephoning to General Braze and Baron Dangloss. A hurried consultation followed.

Baron Dangloss was sadly upset. Three prominent persons had been stolen from beneath his nose, so to speak. He was beside himself with rage and dismay. This last outrage was the climax. The old man adored the sister of Jack Tullis. He was heartbroken and crushed by the news of the catastrophe.

Captain Haas of the dragoons was put in charge of the relief party. The party was armed and equipped for a bitter chase. Word had been sent to Serros, the capital of Dawsbergen, asking the assistance of Prince Dantan in the effort to overtake the abductors. A detachment, it was announced in reply, was to start from Serros during the afternoon bound for the eastern passes.

Baron Dangloss rode to the southern gate with the white faced, suffering Tullis. "We will undoubtedly receive a communication from the rascals this afternoon or tomorrow," he said gloomily. "They will not be slow to make a formal demand for ransom, knowing that you and your sister are possessed of unlimited wealth. Hello! Who's this?"

A man who had ridden up to the gates, his horse covered with foam, was demanding admission. The warders halted him unceremoniously as Dangloss rode forward. They found that he was one of the foremen in the employ of the railway construction company. He brought the disquieting news that another strike had been declared, that the men were ugly and determined to tear up the track already laid unless their demands were considered and, furthermore, that there had been severe fighting between the two factions engaged on the work. He urgently implored Dangloss to send troops out to hold the rioters in check.

"What is your name?" demanded the harassed minister of police.

"Polson," replied the foreman. He lied, for he was no other than John Cromer, the unsavory husband of Anna Cromer of the committee of ten.

"Come with me," said Dangloss. "We will go to General Braze. Good-by and good luck, Tullis."

At that very moment Loraine Tullis was comparing notes with Truxton King in the room beneath the armorer's shop. Count Marlanx was hiding in the trader's inn outside the northern gates. The abductors themselves were scattered about the city, laughing triumphantly over the success of the ruse that had drawn the well feared American away on a wild goose chase to the distant passes of Dawsbergen. More than that, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon a second detachment of soldiers left the city for the scene of the riots in the construction camps, twenty miles away.

Surely the well laid plans of the Iron Count were being skillfully carried out!

All afternoon and evening men straggled in from the hills and surrounding country, apparently loath to miss the early excitement attending the ceremonies on the following day. Sullen strikers from the camps came down, cursing the company, but drinking noisy toasts to the railroad and its future. The city by night swarmed with reveling thousands. The bands were playing, the crowds were singing and mobs were drinking and carousing in the lower end.

At 3 o'clock in the morning word flew from brothel to brothel, from lodging house to lodging house, in all parts of the slumbering city. A thousand men crept out into the streets after the storm, all animated by one impulse, all obeying a single fierce injunction.

They were to find and kill a tall American! They were to keep him or his companion from getting in touch with the police authorities or with the royal castle, no matter what the cost!

At 5 o'clock a stealthy whisper went the rounds, reaching the ear of every vagabond and cutthroat engaged in the untiring vigil. Like smoke they fa[ded] away. The silent watch was over.

The word had sped to every [part] of the town that it was no lon[ger] necessary to maintain the w[atch] for Truxton King. He was no[w in] a position to give them tr[ouble] or uneasiness.

Gad, if these ruffians from the railroad possessed no more than pistols they could give us a merry fight. There must be a thousand of them. I don't like it. We'll have trouble before the day's over."

By 11 o'clock the streets in the neighborhood of the plaza were packed with people. At 12 the castle gates were to be thrown open for the brilliant cavalcade that was to pass between these cheering rows of people.

Shortly after half past 11 o'clock certain groups of men usurped the positions in front of certain buildings on the south side of the square, a score here, a half score there, others below them. They favored the shops operated by the friends of the committee of ten; they were the men who were to take possession of the rifles that lay hidden behind counters and walls.

From the distant castle came the sounds of shouts, crawling up the long line of spectators for the full length of the avenue to the eager throng in Regengetz circus, swelling and growing louder as the news came that the prince had ridden forth from the gates. Glad voices cried out tidings to those in the background. The prince was coming!

THEY SLEPT. HOW TIRED THEY WERE!

Bonny, adorable Prince Robin!

On came the splendid phalanx of guardsmen, followed by rigid infantrymen in measured tread. The great coach of gold, with its half score of horses, rolled somberly beneath nature's canopy of green, surrounded on all sides by proud members of the royal guard. Two carriages from the royal stables preceded the prince's coach. In the first were the Duke of Perse and three fellow members of the cabinet. The second contained Baron Dangloss and General Braze.

The curtains in a house at the corner of the square parted gently. A hawk faced old man peered out upon the joyous crowd. His black eyes swept the scene. A grim smile crept into his face. He dropped the curtains and walked away from the window, tossing a cigarette into a grate on the opposite side of the room. Then he looked at his watch.

* * * * * * *

The man who stood in the middle of the freight car looking down in wonder at the fugitives was a tall vagabond of the most picturesque type. No muffin was ever so tattered and torn as this rakish individual. His clothes barely hung together on his lank frame.

Long, thin lips curled into a smile of delicious regard. His sides shook with the quiet chuckle of undisguised glee. He was thinking of other days and other nights and of many a merry jape in far off lands and of countless jollifications in journeys in and out of strange company—short journeys and gentle ones, but not to be forgotten.

He lighted the stub of a cigar with great, sleepful deliberation. Ah, how enviable his misdoings, O wayfarer! How lover! They slept. How tired were! Whence had they come? Why should they wake here to spoil their waking hour? He would surrender him to them.

Softly he stepped apartment to his own corner of the car, tiptoed to the door, pulled up his bedlongings. He gathered stout violin case, a pack, an ancient goodly sized walking stick, worn cloth, a well done up in long, with long, frayed pair of sandals, he stole back to As gently he the door. He kissed sleeping girl, a kiss to the aglow with and was about gypsy face of his candle. Then mischief, he changed his mind.

With a deep sigh he shook of his head and a new flash of the eye, he calmly seated himself and began to open his ragged pack.

At last it is small store of food lay exposed. Without hesitation he divided the pieces of smoked venison, giving one part to himself, two to the sleepers, then the miller's bread and the cheese and the bag of dates he had bought the day before.

Again he blew a kiss to the prettiest girl he had ever seen. Snuffing his candle, he dropped to the ground and closed the door against all spying, uncivil eyes.

Daybreak found him at the wharf gates.

Coming to an empty flat car direct from the quarries, he resolutely seated himself upon its edge and, with amiable resignation, set about devouring his early meal, all the while casting longing, almost appealing, glances toward the next car but one. Busy little switch engines began chugging about the yards. The railroad at least was exhibiting some signs of life.

Down through the maze of sidetracks whisked the little train, out upon the main line with a thin shriek of greeting past the freight houses. It was then that Sir Vagabond sat up very straight, a look of mild interest in his eyes. Interest gave way to perplexity, perplexity to concern. What's this—leaving the city? He wasted no time. Clutching his belongings to his side, he vaulted from one car to the landing safely on his feet at the side.

He thought of the luckless pair in the empty "box."

Suddenly he stopped, his chin up, his hands to his sides. A hearty peal of laughter soared from his lips. The joke was on them. It was rich. The more he thought of their astonishment on awakening the more he laughed.

His immense levity attracted attention. Four or five men approached him from the shadows of the freight houses, ugly, unsmiling fellows. They demanded of him the cause of his unseemly mirth. With tears in his merry black eyes he related the plight of the pretty slumberers. He described the coup. Then with questions. Then the sinister fellows smiled. More than that, they clapped each other on the back and swore splendidly.

And so it was that the news spread over town at 5 o'clock that Truxton King was where he could do no harm. It was well known that the train would make for the steep grade miles an hour down into the lower valley.

When Truxton King first awoke to the fact that they were no longer lying motionless in the dreary yards he leaped to his feet with a startled shout of alarm. With frantic energy he pulled open the door. For a minute he stared at the scudding walls of stone so close at hand, uncomprehendingly. Then with the force of a mighty blow the truth burst upon him staggered back, his jaw dropping, his eyes glaring.

"Great God, Loraine! We're going We're moving!" he cried hoarsely. She shot to her feet and lurched to his side. "Don't fall out!" she almost shrieked.

Suddenly the train shot out into the open, farm spattered valley. Truxton fell back dumfounded.

"The country!" he exclaimed. "We've been carried away. God in heaven! The prince—he is lost!" He was beside himself, raging like a madman.

He had shouted to her that he must back to the city.

"You would be killed!" she cried, clutching his arm fiercely. "You never can jump, Truxton. See how we are running. If you jump I shall follow. I won't go on alone. I am as much to blame as you."

A small station flew by. "Ronn, seven kilometers to Edelweiss." He looked at her in despair.

"We're going faster and faster," he grated.

Just then his gaze alighted on the pathetic breakfast. He stared as if hypnotized. Was he going mad? An instant later he was on his hands and knees examining the mysterious feast. She joined him at once. No two faces ever before were so puzzled and perplexed.

"By heaven," he exclaimed, "I see it all! We've been deliberately shanghaied! We've been bottled up here and shipped out of town. Don't touch that stuff! It's probably full of poison. Great Scott, what a clever gang they are!"

Whereupon he proceeded to kick the unoffending breakfast out of the car door. To their dying day they were to believe that the food had been put there by agents of the great conspirator.

"Hello!" said he. "We're slowing up." He looked out and ahead. "There's a bridge over the road a bit—yes, there's our same old river! They're running

GOOD ROADS HELP TRADE.

Will Increase Population and Build Up Business of Local Tradesmen.

To no one more than the business man is the question of good roads a vital issue. The spreading of the doctrine of good roads will mean a large increase in the volume of business, will lead to great leaps in the development of this already rich country and will make money for every man in mercantile lines. While directly the building of good roads will benefit the farmers and stock raisers perhaps more than any one else and will raise the value of every farm reached by good roads, still the business men come in a close second.

Good roads will increase the productivity of the land because it will give the farmers a better outlet for their marketable stuff and will lead to such an increase in population that there will be more workers per square mile than there are under the old roads system. Good roads will open for settlement and cultivation land now lying out of the radius of profitable farming. It will put more square miles of territory within trade distance of your town.

The business men of any town are interested in bringing to that town trade from greater distances than is easily covered on our present roads. It increases the volume of business, and every man in business in the community receives his share of the benefit. The farmer is able to haul his grain and produce to market at less cost and makes a greater profit per year from his labor. This additional profit is represented by the additional amount of cash he has to spend with the home dealers. When the farms are made to pay larger dividends more settlers will come to your neighborhood, and all of them will have to spend money with you and your fellow business men. So, directly and indirectly, the business men are benefited by the building of good roads.

Harry Davis has just received a fine line of Spring and Summer Millinery. Come and see the goods; they speak for themselves. 5-5t.

By Right of Capture.

Who gave us permission,
I'd just like to know,
To harness the horses
And tell them to go,
To hitch to a wagon,
A cart or a dray
The large, handsome creatures
And bid them obey?

A horse may have feelings,
He'd much rather spurn
The dust of the prairies
Than labor to earn
His oats, though the measure
Were full to the brim,
And hay in the manger
Were furnished to him.

Pray, how would you like it
To stand by a fence,
Tied there in cold weather
And call it horse sense?
You'd act rather balky
If you were a nag,
Kick over the traces
And chew up your tag.

Who gave us permission?
We took it; that's all.
When called on for labor
Our strength was too small,
So straightway we captured
The beautiful steed,
Employed him, returning
His pay in his feed.

Exacting.

"Some people are so hard to please."
"For example?"
"My wife."
"How about it?"
"I have just given her a check book, and what do you think she says?"
"Search me."
"Wants me to give her the bank, saying they will be so lovely in a pair."

So Clear.

"How did you like the speaker?"
"Very well."
"Did you understand what he was talking about?"
"Certainly."
"Then that is where you had the advantage over him."

Easy.

"A man never knows what to do when a baby cries."
"Oh, doesn't he?"
"No."
"You bet I do."
"Well, what?"
"Make a getaway."

Made Him Scarce.

"See as much of Jonesy as you used to?" asked the friend who had been away for some time.
"I don't think I do."
"He used to be quite devoted."
"Oh, that was before we were married."

Obvious.

"They say that she is a woman with a past."
"Yes, I think she is."
"I don't see how she shows it."
"Doesn't she look as if she has had ample time to accumulate a past?"

Broken In.

"Jones is always so happy. I don't understand it."
"Why not?"
"He is married."
"Oh, but he is used to it by this time."

She Felt It.

"Don't act that way or people will say you married me for my money."
"What do you care what they say?"
"Of course I care. You know the truth always hurts."

The Rotundity.

"Think there is a fourth dimension?"
"Oh, yes."
"What is it like?"
"My rich uncle's vest is cut to fit it."

Good Idea.

"I have a great deal of trouble."
"So do I."
"What do you do with it?"
"I give a lot of it to my landlord."

Sufficient Cause.

"She doesn't like him a bit."
"Doesn't she? I wonder why."
"He remembers her from fifteen years ago."

We would have young people as they sincerely start in life to regard a well ordered life as a capital much surer to yield full returns than any other, unaffected by panics and failures, fruitful when all other investments li dormant, having a certain promise in the present life as in that which is to come.

"The insincere life is of no value. There was Benedict Arnold, whose courage and military talents glittered in the same firmament with Washington; but for the lack of sincerity to his country's good, he fell from honor into an abyss of neverending infamy and shame.

"The first step toward greatness is to be honest; and if you would have a great name in history, be sincere to the nation's good. Washington by his sincerity became the first president, because the people thought they could trust the government in his hands. If we were all as we should be, we would not have men like Diogenes, who went with candles at noonday throughout the streets, hunting an honest man.

"When sickness has drawn a veil over the gayety of our hearts, or some intervening cloud has darkened the pleasing scenes of life, and the world appears as an empty delusive cheat, then it is that sincerity is of great value to us and gains loveliness from such providences.

The value of a life of integrity is above that of rubies and gold. Then take it up bravely, bear it off triumphantly, and at the last you will sit down within the pearly gates and admire and worship the great example of Him who lives a perfect life throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

"Heaven grant that all may feel that a sincere man in the noblest work of God and may live as they."

Mr. Smith's paper was as follows:

"There is no tendency in universal history, broadly viewed, more manifest than the tendency toward World Unity. First was the clan or family, then the tribe, then the City State and lastly the Nation State of modern times. Among these great nation states, a state has arisen of which our own great nation of forty-six states is the grand model. In its likeness are the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Swiss Confederation and the German Empire, but our own United States of America foreshadows the United States of Europe. As a preparation for a World State or a World Unity we must have all the nations supplied with popular governments by the advance and achievements of humanity. A world union of despotic governments would be the tomb of liberty, both national and individual.

"In all the progressive nations, outside of Europe, the management of public affairs is in the hands of the people. It is most noticeable at the same time that these movements have characterized the progress in political and moral realms. Wonderful discoverics and inventions in the physical domain have brought the once isolated nations close in touch with each other, and have made possible the formation of a World Unity.

"The clan or family was first applied to persons descended from one common stock under a chief, and literally means a body of men confederated together by common ancestry. In Scotland it was used to designate the Scotch Highlanders. There it was the law to have one man rule the clan who was a respectable man of rank and substance. These clans became so large that they were compelled to divide them into tribes. The word tribe is derived from the Latin tres, meaning three, or one of the three original great divisions of the Roman people.

"These tribes were ruled by chiefs who ruled each division. From this dates the enlightment of the tribe and a solid foundation for a City State. The City State arose in the formation of the Babylonian Empire and grew so rapidly that when the light of history first fell upon the ancient land it revealed the land between the Tigris and Euphrates Valley filled with City States. Each of these states were ruled by a king and had its patron god. The political side of our history may be summarized by saying that for a period of almost three thousand years it consists of annals of wars waged for supremacy. Each city was independent and self governed like a modern nation. It made war and peace and held diplomatic relations with its neighbors. For an individual to be exiled from his city was to him a fate scarcely less dreaded than death. The devotion of the Greek to his city was a sentiment which corresponds to patriotism among our American people. This great love and admiration was all that hindered them from forming a single nation. In a word, we may say the wonderful thing which we call civilization was the flower and fruitage of the City State which finally blended into our present Nation State ruled a representative of the people.

"Each year these great nations are performing some act by which they are more closely bound together. The Interparliamentary Union, composed of more than 2,000 members belonging to some National Legislature or Parliament, was established in 1906. Because of the noble character of the men composing this society, and the practical work of legislation in the different states, it has accomplished wonders in working for the organization of the world. More has been already accomplished in the way of establishing a World State than is generally realized.

"In 1899 the International Peace Conference met at the Hague in the Netherlands and established a permanent International Court of Arbitration to which may be had recourse for the settlement of international controversies; for it may be possible that looking back a hundred years from now it will be seen that its establishment was the most important single event of modern times. It is certainly a reasonable hope that this great work may terminate in the establishment of an International Congress, which, like the Congress of our own Confederation, may grow into a true legislative body, competent to deal with all affairs of international concern. If this be the outcome, then will the second great step have been taken in the formation of the World State and there will be realized the words of Tennyson when he said:

" 'For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw a vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
* * * * * *
Till the war-drums throbb'd no longer, and the battle flags are furl'd,
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.' "

BLOOMINGTON.

Miss Pearl Walker, of Kitzmiller, is spending a few days in town, the guest of her cousin, Miss Clara Tibbetts.

Mr. Grant Harshbarger, mine foreman for the Mastellar Coal Co., of Hampshire, left for Elkins on Tuesday afternoon of last week to attend the examinations conducted by the State Board of Mining Engineers to determine the efficiency of mine foremen, held in that city last Wednesday and Thursday.

An increase of wages amounting to a ten per cent raise, was the good news that greeted the telegraph operators along the line of the W. M. R. R., on the first day of April. In addition, an annual pass over the W. Va. Div. was presented to all operators in the employ of the company five years.

Messrs. Hugh Tate and Daniel Raley, two well known ball players of Blaine, after helping to lick (nit) the Baltimore bunch at Island Park on last Tuesday afternoon came up on the evening accommodation and remained with friends over night.

Mr. William Daugherty, who is interested in the operation of a saw mill located on the county road about three miles west of here, met with a very painful accident last week. While hauling logs to supply the mill his left foot was caught between a rock in the road and a heavy log, fracturing his ankle. He was carried to his home where a physician attended his injuries.

A large building 80 feet long, 20 feet wide and two stories high, is in course of construction at Bond Junction. When finished it will accommodate about two hundred Italian laborers who will be employed in the construction of the road bed for the third track on the seventeen mile grade.

According to Mr. Thos. Burke, of this place, an authority on poultry raising, the crop of spring chickens is going to be short in this community the coming season. He claims that the detonations from the heavy blasts, necessitated by the heavy rock work on the road bed improvements now under way on the B. & O. and W. M. R. R. in this vicinity destroys the embryonic chick before it grows strong enough to break its calcareous capsule, and become a peepee. "Tom" advises his neighbors to call off the hens, don't let them set, eat the eggs and buy your spring broilers.

Mr. Wm. Barnard, a miner employed in the split seam of the Mastellar Coal Co., at Hampshire, narrowly escaped being crushed to death by a fall of rock in his place while loading his last car before quitting last Wednesday afternoon. Without any warning whatever a large piece of rock gave way in the corner of the room, fell to the pavement and caught his right foot, breaking the leg at the ankle joint. He was brought to his home at this place where his injuries were dressed.

During the absence of Rev. Creek at conference, Rev. William Barnard, of Chesnut Grove, attended to his duties and filled his appointments.

"Big Dan" Raley, of Kitzmiller, who would have won the game for the Piedmont team on Wednesday had he been allowed to pitch the nine innings, is under contract to manage the Grafton team the coming season.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Wolfe, of this place who has been ill for about one week, died from meningitis at the home of his parents on last Tuesday evening at eight o'clock. The funeral ceremonies occurred on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock, on account of the absence of Rev. Creek, in Baltimore Rev. Sutton of Kitzmiller, preached the funeral sermon. The interment was made in the Bloomington grave yard.

Object-Lesson Farms.

It is a surprising fact that within less than 50 miles of each of the four largest of Atlantic Coast cities there is valuable agricultural land which has been practically lying idle during the past quarter of a century. There are thousands of acres of such lands on the western side of the bay within 50 miles of Baltimore. There is an immence quantity of Southern New Jersey land for sale cheap that is less than 50 miles away from Philadelphia. Almost half of Long Island, notwithstanding its proximity to New York city, is out of use. And it is not necessary to travel 50 miles from Boston to find New England abandone farms. It is difficult to understand why these areas close to the big cities are not generally turned into kitchen gardens.

The management of the Long Island Railroad, which is bordered on each side by a 40-mile stretch of waste land covered with scrub oak, pine and chestnut, has started two object-lesson farms to demonstrate that these lands can be put to valuable use. On one of these farms 380 different kinds of vegetables, fruits and other farms produce have been grown, and the railroad has succeeded in demonstrating that those abandoned lands can be made highly productive. The thought will naturally occur that the railroad spent a good deal of money to make these object-lesson farms productive, and it is probably true that the improvement output may have doubled or even quadrupled the cost of the land.

There is reason to believe, however, that the outlay in redeeming such lands is a profit-yielding investment. The advantage of being within less than 100 miles of a big city market is one that counts for much. The object-lesson farm scheme of the Long Island Railroad is one that other railroads might profitably adopt. The traveling lecture car is well enough in its way, but there is nothing like showing just how a thing can be done when it comes to teaching the average farmer how to do something which he has not been accustomed to doing.

SINES.

Mr. A. Alexander has gone to Henderson, Va., to work.

Mr. G. B. Smith will move to Pennsylvania this week.

Mr. Alph Metheny was visiting his daughter, Mrs. Samuel Sines, Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Newton Ream and wife were visiting at G. B. Smith's last Sunday.

Mr. J. G. Sines is visiting his daughters at this place.

Charles Haskell is farming for Newton Ream this spring.

Everybody is busy sowing oats and plowing for corn.

THE WORTH OF A BOY.

What is the money value of a boy? Perhaps that depends remotely upon the boy's ancestors; or, perhaps, the youth may be warranted in repeating the exclamation of the great Napoleon, "I am my ancestor." For example, what appraiser would place an estimate upon the capitalized worth of that stripling mathematical prodigy of Harvard who wrestles lightly with the fourth dimension? But this is a question not of precocity, but of the worth of the normal lad, in this case the only son of a widow. For her support and his own he was delivering newspapers in a Connecticut town, when he was killed by an automobile. A jury fixed the responsibility upon the owner, who was driving his machine. The evidence was conclusive, leaving no option upon that point. But the thrifty jury estimated the damages at $300. The judge sent the jurors back for further consideration, but they adhered to their decision; whereupon the court set the verdict aside as contrary to equity and fact.

This was evidently an industrious boy. He might be regarded as a type, not only the object of pride and affection, but, in part, the dependence of another. It must have cost something to bring him up and to guide his development to the degree of efficiency that he had reached. He had become an earner, but he could not have had time, at his age, to have reimbursed the expense of his 14 years of life.

The court, it would appear, quite properly ruled that the jury could not have taken fairly into account either the care or the money that had gone into his rearing. That conclusion, moreover, was wholly economic; it made no account of sentiment, nor of the prospective increase in his rating as a producer. The verdict looked neither backward nor forward, and the judge was both humane and just in turning his view in both directions. Perhaps this jury would have understood better the conditions and values if its members had been considering the worth of a horse that had been killed.

Why She Advertised.

The Belleville man who got a wife through an advertisement and has been "against the power of the press" ever since, will be interested in this advertisement from a Missouri paper:

"Attractive woman, not a day over 30, would be pleased to correspond with eligible man. Not absolutely necessary that he should be young. Would prefer one with property, but one with a good paying position would be satisfactory. The young lady is of medium height, has brown hair and gray eyes, not fat, although most decidedly she is not skinny. Her friends say she is a fine looking woman. Object matrimony. Reason for this advertisement, the young woman lives in a little dinky town, where the best catches are the boys behind the counters in the dry goods and clothing stores and everyone of them is spoken for by the time he is out of short 'pants'."—Atlanta Constitution.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, APRIL 21, 1910.

SURELY Governor Crothers doesn't believe his friends are in earnest in suggesting him for president of the United States. He probably sees the joke of it just the same as the rest of the people.

PRESIDENT'S SOUND POLICY.

Gen. Felix Agnus, of Baltimore, always genial and interesting, and noted throughout the land for his dauntless and unwavering championship of straightout Republicanism, was seen in the lobby of the New Willard last evening. Answering the queries of a Washington Herald reporter with characteristic frankness, the proprietor of The Baltimore American had this to say on the political situation:

"No government under the sun could have a more capable, sagacious or safe man at its head than William H. Taft. The soul honor and fidelity, he is carrying out in good faith the pledges made in the national platform of his party. To blame him for executing the will of the people is weak and illogical. The President has kept in mind the three grand divisions of our system of government and has not sought to coerce the legislative branch. With his accustomed kindness and delicacy, he has kept the big stick in the background, appealing only to the sense of party fealty and the duty of our national lawmakers. Perhaps the President has been too lenient, and maybe the time is ripe for the employment of sterner methods.

"This is a time when Americans should stand up and be counted. Why a man who has been a consistent, lifelong Republican should now want to play the role of an insurgent is a profound mystery. There is positively no excuse for such eccentricity, and it is to be regarded as nothing but a passing wave—a fad of politics—that will soon run its course. Under Taft the Republican party is making good. The nation is prosperous, and is becoming more so every day. Any defection from Republican ranks will be slight, and by November the party will present its ancient solid phalanxes to to the foe, as confident of victory and as sure to succeed as it has been during any of the victorious campaigns of the past 14 years."—Washington Herald.

PROGRESSIVE MARYLAND.

Several Maryland towns secured enabling acts during the recent session of the legislature, authorizing bond issues for the purpose of providing funds for one kind or another of municipal betterments. It is pleasant to note the progressive spirit that is being manifested by practically every municipal community within the State. Lighting plants, water works, and in some instances, underground sewers, have been constructed, and in some of the larger towns streets have been paved with asphalt or vitified brick. There are few towns in Maryland where abounding demonstrations of a lively and practically effective civic pride are not to be found. And in most instances this spirit of betterment does not stop at schemes of utility. Beautification ideals are continually being brought to realization.

Many Maryland towns have a history that dates back of the Revolutionary War. Some of the Court House towns have documentary records of great interest antedating the Revolution by a hundred years or more. Quaint buildings that have come down from Colonial days are frequently to be encountered, and in some instances there are entire streets lined with these venerable structures maintaining a traditional dignity that calmly ignores the more pretentious modern structures that have sprung up along the newer avenues. These ancient streets of the Maryland towns, with their spreading century-old trees, have a restful charm; they seem to be apart from the active, rushing modern life.

In many of the towns civic betterment organizations have from time to time been formed and though some of these, after a brief period of active performance have been allowed to lapse, the good which they did while alive and active, has lived after them. By such civic movements, trees have from time to time been planted along the residential streets, public squares have been beautified by the erecting of fountains, and the planting of shrubbery. Every town ought to have a beautification club and such organizations should not be allowed to lapse into torpitude or indifference.

$80,000 ROAD CONTRACT AWARDED YESTERDAY

For Extending Work on Hooppole Road to Hoblitzell & Price.

At the meeting of the Good Roads Commission held in Baltimore yesterday the contract for extending the work on Hooppole Road from the prasent terminal of the improvements on that highway near Rodeheaver's to McHenry, a distance of nearly seven miles, was awarded to Messrs. Hoblitzell & Price, a contracting firm of Meyersdale Pa. Mr. C. F. Hammond, of Oakland, also figured in the contract as a representative of the successfull bidders who will receive approximately $80,000 for the work which will begin as soon as weather conditions permit.

SWANTON.

Such, Mr. Editor, as live in the scope of Swanton reaches are, don't you know, always doing the right thing. Last Sunday, April 10th, 1910, members of the Lutheran persuasion, aided by many friends, met in the "Fort Hill" school building and welded a substantial and working machinery for a Sunday school with an encouraging prospective. The denomination fostering its grip in the community, has laid the foundation and placed some of the lumber for a church not far from the school house.

The hum of a suddenly introduced industry is daily ringing in Swanton. Did you hear, Mr. Editor, that her chief street is to have an additional railway and that civil engineers are daily at work, making crooked ways straight and rough places smooth, for the construction of a third link, not with Oakland, but with Piedmont?

Mr. George Oss, at his plant below Swanton, recently had valuable lumber destroyed by forest fires, beginning, it is thought, from the tracks of the B. & O. R. R.

Mr. Harry Fraley, who for more than a year has filled a position in the Swanton telegraph office, has accepted an appointment by the same company as operator at Rawlings, Md.

Published announcement in THE REPUBLICAN, of the death in Fitzgerald, Georgia, of the Rev. J. B. Shoup, is received with deep regret by no small part of the Garrett population, where he was well known and highly regarded. From Garrett's earliest days this popular Lutheran minister has been closely identified in a broad sense with most every religious and temperance movement of the county. He was a man of liberal learning, with enviable natural gifts, and has long been looked upon as a familiar patriarch of these mountains imbued with the ancient faith, breaking the gospel message and declaring glad tidings to men. Mr. Shoup was largely instumental in establishing a number of places of religious worship in Garrett, among which is the Meadow Mountain church, built chiefly by saw and hammer in his hands; and beyond doubt the zeal of this man brought together the little congregation above mentioned as opening a Sunday school at Fort Hill and now beginning a church in that vicinity. It inflets a strain upon realization to believe that, in his customary walks and ways, we are never to see his face again. RELLIM.

BITTINGER.

This week began with a decided change in the weather conditions from dry to wet and if the rain is followed by warm weather the prospect for a full harvest will be much enhanced.

P. F. Mellinger and family, of Beckman, are guests of Jonas Bittinger this week.

Elijah Winters, who has been undergoing treatment in a hospital at Baltimore, for some months past, returned to his home at this place last Monday afternoon.

Richard Beckman with his wife and little daughter passed through this village last Monday.

Constable N. Murphy, of Grantsville, was in this neighborhood on official business last week.

Mrs. Hester Fazenbaker and Mrs. James Stark, of this place, are visiting relatives in West Virginia this week.

Silas Platter disposed of his personal property at public sale on last Saturday afternoon.

E. F. Durst, of Jennings, spent last Sunday calling on friends at this place.

S. A. Lichliter, of Salisbury, Pa., shipped a large quantity of maple sugar from this neighborhood last week.

Struck By Train.

Last Sunday morning an east bound helping engine on ths Seventeen Mile Grade, while descending the mountain from Altamont, ran down two Italian workmen, who were employed on construction work along the road. One of the men was knocked from the track against the embankment and was not seriously injured. The other, however, was not so fortunate, as he fell beneath the wheels of the locomotive and had his right leg so severely crushed as to necessitate amputation, which was performed at the Hoffman Hospital, Keyser, a few hours atfer the accident occurred.

The annual levy for the county, as well as a number of the local laws passed by the recent legislature, appear in this issue today, which, in addition to the heavy advertising patronage being accorded us, crowds our columns to the limit and curtails news space accordingly, which accounts to some degree for the lack of news matter in this issue.

The Ohio Pyle Lumber Company, one of the Kendall firms, suffered severely by fire last Monday when one of the big trestles on their tramway was destroyed. The fire started in the woods on Sunday and it is believed that it was the work of incendiary origin. The flames spread rapidly and reached the trestle near Ohio Pyle. It was dry and burned like tinder. The trestle cost $1,000 and the rebuilding and loss of time will make a heavy loss.—Meyersdale Republican.

The work of these two delegates in the interest of Garrett Lodge's candidate for Prelate, Dr. Henry W. McComas, made a showing when the vote was counted and the genial doctor declared elected. The efforts of the local delegates in having Cumberland selected as the place for the next meeting of the grand lodge were also successful and that city will be honored by the presence of many of Maryland's best citizens when the next session of the grand lodge convenes.

Where and How to Buy Davis' Patent Steel Range

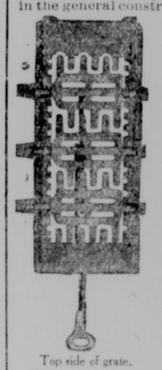
$32 BUYS DAVIS' PATENT STEEL RANGE.

Nothing Like It Ever Offered

After years of experience in the Stove and Range business we take great pride in announcing that we have produced the most wonderful Steel Range that was ever offered to the trade. Its construction is entirely different from the old styles of Ranges. In planning and constructing the Davis Steel Ranges every improvement that would add to its durability and convenience for the housewife has been carefully guarded, and in its construction possibly more points are patented than is found in any half dozen ranges now offered to the trade. The fire box of any range is the part that always gives out first, and with this thought in view was planned in a way that the liners and grates are entirely different from those found in the general construction of ranges and should last for years.



Top side of grate.

The special features of grate rest, oven linings, rocking grates and poker shaker are found only on the Davis. It is the most durable Range ever offered to the trade at a reasonable price, and is in reach of all.

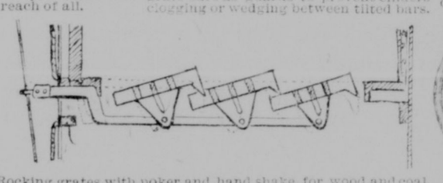
Davis No. 8-64 Special Steel Range complete with reservoir, high closet and heavy lined; oven thermometer $1 extra.

Strong Points that make Davis' Ranges Most Desirable: Encased reservoir heated by patent process; a grate rest with large openings next to oven, avoiding accumulation of ashes; extended lugs on end of grate bars as guards to prevent cinders clogging or wedging between tilted bars.

Poker-Shaker that extends through hand-hole.

Any one contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range cannot help but see themselves the many advantages and superior qualities in its construction. All we ask is a chance to show our ranges in comparison with others both as to price and quality.

Write for our booklet. It will tell you where it differs from all others.



Rocking grates with poker and hand shake, for wood and coal.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

OUT OF THE BELLY OF HELL CRIED I

"I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I" (Jonah ii, 2.)

On the Mediterranean Sea, April 17.—We are not far from the place where poor Jonah long ago had his sad experience in his attempt to run away from the Divine commission to the Ninevites. We are nearing Jaffa, the port from which he sailed, then called Joppa. Some, intent on disproving as much as possible of the Bible, have attempted to make light of Jonah's experiences, claiming that there was no fish in the world of such capacity as could swallow a man entirely. We are to remember, however, that the Scriptures do not say that it was an ordinary whale that swallowed Jonah, but rather they specifically declare that God "specially prepared" a great fish for the occasion. Nor is this all. We have our Lord's own testimony to the truthfulness of the matter, and whoever denies either his truthfulness or his intelligence is thereby denying also his Messiahship and repudiating him as a Savior, because neither a falsifier nor a dupe could possibly be recognized as the great Redeemer and Savior, the Sent of God, the Messiah.

Additionally our Lord informs us that the Jonah incident was in the nature of a type, especially designed of God to foreshadow the fact that Jesus himself would be dead for parts of three days and arise from the dead on the third day, even as Jonah was buried alive for parts of three days and on the third day the great fish vomited him upon dry land. There is nothing difficult about the narrative to one who has proper faith in God. To those who have not faith, nothing connected with Divine revelation is reasonable, commendable or satisfactory. Let us maintain our stand with those who hold fast to, and hold forth for others, the Word of Life.

The Belly of Hell Described.

But what have "the belly of hell" and the poor soul crying from it to do with the story of Jonah? And how does the story associate itself with our journey today over the Mediterranean Deep? Jonah was the man who was in the belly of hell and whose cry unto the Lord from there constitutes our text. When a boy I heard this text, and my imagination conjured up what hell would be like, and especially what the belly of hell, or what I supposed the middle part of it, would be like. I had the opportunity of looking into blast furnaces through what is called the glory-hole or peep-hole. There I noted that the center of the fire was at white heat. I tried to imagine people in such a condition in the very middle or belly of hell. I could not imagine how they could survive such an experience a single moment, let alone for all eternity. I sought theological expositions of the matter and learned that some theologians of the hoary past, admitting the destructive effect of fire, claimed that God would specially vitalize all the poor creatures consigned to this torment, so that they would never die, but would keep on suffering forever and forever and forever, untellable tortures. I found that other theologians explained that those consigned to such a fiery ordeal would gradually become adapted to it and assume an asbestos-like shell which would measurably protect them from the fire. But these theologians went on to explain that, wishing them to suffer horrible tortures, God would scale off the asbestos shell, causing them to suffer still more excruciatingly every time the operation was performed. As a child I tried to imagine that this was the just desert of sinners, and that the Heavenly Father was really kind and loving—that he did not give them worse, though I could not think of anything worse that they could suffer.

"When I was a child, I spake as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things" (I Corinthians xiii, 11). I asked for the proof that anybody could endure such sufferings and yet live. I asked for the proof that our God is as unsympathetic as any devil could be. My mind rejected as irrational the whole proposition. I said: The God whom I shall worship must be a greater being than myself—greater than any human being, not only in power to execute his will, but also in wisdom to make a wise arrangement for his creatures, and also perfect in justice to do to them as he would have them do to him, if he were the creature and they the God. He must also be perfect in love, the noblest feature of any character. I said to myself, Such must be the God who was the Creator of our race, for he has produced in humanity certain degrees of these various qualities and he could not give to man what he does not himself possess, nor can we suppose that he would create man with more justice, wisdom, love and power than he himself possesses. To that great God I bowed my heart and mind and every power that I possess. To him I still bow, and give thanks that by his grace I have come to see his character, his Plan and his Word more clearly than in the past. I thank him that now I can see in what way ultimately Jesus will be the "Light of the world"—not merely the Light of the Church (John viii, 12).

In abandoning the doctrine of eternal torment my disposition was to abandon the Bible also, because I believed that the Bible was the foundation of the irrational theory which had pictured God to my mind as a demon of the worst imaginable type. But, thank God, dear friends, the Lord heard my prayer for light, for knowledge respecting himself. After I had made a search of heathen creeds, as well as those of Christendom, and had found them all illogical, unreasonable, unsatisfactory, I turned to the Bible again, saying, Perhaps I have not done the Bible justice; perhaps I have unconsciously attributed to the Bible the teachings of the creeds. Perhaps I have read it through colored spectacles. Praying to God for guidance I took up Bible study in a very different way from previously. I began to study the Bible as I should have done at first—without reference to any of the creeds. I began to let God teach me. I ceased to say, It reads, "Thus," but it must mean otherwise. It says, "So and so," but cannot mean that, but the reverse. In other words I ceased to try to teach God and endeavored to be taught of God through his Word, guided by his holy Spirit.

International Bible Studies.

That was thirty-eight years ago. Under the Lord's blessing I found the Key to the interpretation of the Scriptures—not because of ability, but, I believe, because it is now due time for the Bible to be understood—in the closing of this Gospel Age and the dawning of the Millennial Day. Having found the Key and used it myself I have spent my best endeavors since to put the Key into the hands of God's consecrated people the world over. I have nothing to boast of, dear friends, but have much to be glad for. First, I am glad on my own account with a joy unspeakable, that now I know my Heavenly Father and can have confidence in him and can have love for him, as never before. I am thankful that, to some extent, I have been enabled to convey similar joys, similar blessings, to others of his dear people of all denominations in all parts of the world. The Lord has gradually enlarged my opportunities year by year. I am not building a sect—not making a new denomination—not founding a Church! We have had too much of that sort of thing already. Not only have we Wesley's Church and Calvin's Church, etc., etc., but it has become the custom for each minister to be spoken of as the proprietor of the Church; as, for instance, The Reverend Dr. A.'s Church. It has become a custom, too, for the preachers to speak of the people as "My people," "My Church." This is all wrong. I wish to have neither part nor lot in it. I have no Church, and wish for none. There is but the one Church—the Church of Christ—"the Church of the Living God"—"the Church of the First-Borns, whose names are written in heaven." That Church includes in its membership every true saint of God who trusts in the merit of Christ and seeks to walk in his footsteps. Whatever earthly systems such may be identified with are without Divine authorization. Their standing in God's sight is merely because of their identification with Christ as "members of his Body."

In God's providence I was led to publish six volumes of "Studies in the Scriptures," or Bible Keys. These were taken up by the Bible and Tract Society, and published at cost price, to enable all of God's people everywhere to procure them. They are now published in ten of the most prominent languages. The first Volume, "The Plan of the Ages," has passed the three million mark. I have received not one cent of royalty. My life is a very simple one. My expenses are small. I accept no salary and take up no collections. Voluntary donations from those who have been blessed by my labors supply my needs and the surplus goes to the Bible and Tract Society for the general forwarding of its work—"The Promulgation of Christian Knowledge."

Each earnest Christian who obtains the assistance of these Bible Keys and enters into the treasures of God's Word and becomes rich himself in spiritual knowledge and in joy and peace of heart is glad to call the attention of others to these Bible Keys. Thus the International classes of Bible Students of all denominations in all parts of the world are springing up and a blessed light, we believe, is going forth from these, assistful to all who love righteousness and hate iniquity. Although I am the regular Pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle congregation, there are several assistants and I am privileged to speak to thinking Christians of various parts of the world, especially in the United States. Only the Lord knows how I thank him for this privilege of service, and for the still larger opportunity afforded me through the columns of some of the principal newspapers of the United States.

My sermons are handled by a Syndicate, and I am advised that now they appear in nearly five hundred newspapers, aggregating a circulation of six million copies, or, according to newspaper count, thirty million readers. All of these dear people of every denomination who do any thinking at all, I am sure have had similar difficulties to those which I experienced—difficulties in appreciating how our Heavenly Father could be a good Father, a good God, a loving Creator and yet provide for his human creatures such terrible destinies as all the creeds of the "dark ages" set forth. There is not a thinking Christian in the world who does not need the correct understanding of the Bible in order to be able to stand in the evil day that is upon us. All need to give heed to St. Paul's words, "Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand" (Ephesians vi, 13). Our day is a blessed one in respect to its wonderful opportunities and privileges, but it is an evil one in the sense of being a time of great trial and testing of faith to Christendom.

Thinking minds are rejecting the doctrine of eternal torment and generally at the same time rejecting the Bible and denying that it is the inspired Word of God. These dear friends are stumbling into infidelity and think that Higher Criticism and Darwin's Evolution theory are new light. What they need is to see that the true light is in the Bible and that, wearing our grandfathers' spectacles, we inherited the Word of God and wrested it to our own injury and to the loss of our peace of mind and fellowship with the Father and with the Son and with the holy Spirit.

The Key to the Scriptures.

Whoever gets the proper understanding of our text has in his possession the Key to the Bible. If he will use it, passage after passage will open for him and the whole Word of God becomes a new and glorious revelation of Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power Divine. Jonah was in the fish's belly—he was buried alive. It is this that is referred to in our text. The words hell-belly signify grave-belly or belly-grave. The context shows all this, telling us additionally that sea-weeds were wrapped about the Prophet's head and that God heard his prayer and delivered him from the hell-belly, or belly-grave, on the third day by causing the fish to vomit him up. If you have a reference Bible note that in the margin there is a reference to the words of our text, saying, "Hebrew, the grave." Ah! says one, The translators merely made a mistake and translated it hell when they should have translated it grave. Yes, I answer, and they made the same mistake in every case in which they used the same word sheol throughout the Old Testament. As it is, sheol is translated grave more times than it is translated hell in our Common Version; but it should be translated grave every time. There we have the Key to the Bible. The hell of the Bible, the penalty for sin, is death, the grave, the tomb. It is not an everlasting hell, for special Scriptures declare that sheol (hell) shall be destroyed. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol); I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave (sheol, hell) I will be thy destruction" (Hosea xiii, 14). St. Paul quotes this prophecy in conjunction with his great discourse on the resurrection, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave (hades) where is thy victory" (I Corinthians xv, 55).

We see, dear friends, what our dear Redeemer suffered on our behalf to release us from the penalty for sin. He did not go to eternal torment for our sins. He did go into sheol, into hades, into the grave. "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures" (I Corinthians xv, 3). Thus God has provided for the resurrection of the dead—all mankind, "both of the just and of the unjust." The just are the Church, the saints. The unjust include all others. The blood of Jesus will avail for the release of every member of the race from the great penalty of death. Now it operates under a special call to the saintly few who are invited to become joint-heirs with the Redeemer in his great Kingdom which shortly is to bless all the families of the earth—not only those then living, but also all who have gone down to the tomb. The general resurrection will not be an instantaneous one, as in the case of the saints. It will be a gradual one in two senses.

(1) All will not come forth at once, but, as the Apostle declares, "Every man in his own order," company or band (I Corinthians xv, 23).

(2) It will be gradual in the sense that the awakening from the tomb will be but the beginning of the resurrection of the world. During the thousand years of Christ's reign all who will give heed to his instructions and assistance may rise gradually—up, up, up—and by the close of the Millennium they will reach the full perfection and image of God lost by Father Adam through disobedience. The unwilling, those rebellious after the light has fully come upon them, will be destroyed in the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery. They will perish as the brute beasts.

So, then, let us learn a lesson from Jonah's words, not forgetting the other lesson mentioned by our Lord when he declares that Jonah's experiences in the grave—the belly of the fish, and his release therefrom—foreshadowed his own experiences in the tomb and his resurrection in power and great glory on the third day.

BISHOP HOOPER'S ANTIQUE SILVER

Heirlooms of English Prelate Who Died at Stake.

An interesting collection of antique silverware with a history has just passed through the Baltimore Custom House. The owner, Capt. Robert Hooper Bertram, master of lightship No. 45, in the Chesapeake Bay, was required to pay $32.89 duty on the heirlooms.

Captain Bertram, who is a native of Grouville, Jersey, one of the Channel Islands, says the silverware was the wedding gift of Bishop John Hooper, who was burned at the stake in Queen Mary's time, to his daughter, Jane Hooper. Her initials are on each of the pieces received by Captain Bertram. The set comprises a teapot, sugar bowl and cream pitcher.

Captain Bertram's mother was one of the six daughters in the direct line of descent from Bishop Hooper and was the only one married. The silver service went to her elder son by law in the family. After the mother death the silver was kept by the sisters, and only recently one, 97 years old, asked Captain Bertram to receive the historic silverware, as it was his and should descend to his children in accordance with the family traditions. Captain Bertram descends from a line of the Hooper family that took up their home in Grouville, and for nearly 500 years the silverware has been in their possession, descending through succeeding generations.

The Bertram family is one of the best known in the Channel Islands, and Captain Bertram knew Lillie Langtry "Jersey Lily."

In addition to the silver just received Captain Bertram has had for many years the top of Bishop Hooper's snuff box which was found in the ashes after he was burned at the stake, and shows the marks of the flames. Within the lid is carved the story of the martyrdom and evidences of the fact that it was in his possession on that fateful day.

"There yet remains a piece of silver connected with the Hooper family at our home in Grouville," said Captain Bertram, "that has been surrounded with a superstition which has not lessened by age. It is a three-handled silver goblet which occupies a niche in the hall wall, from where it is never taken. Every time it was removed from its place in the niche bad luck in some form fell upon the family. It would be an act of sacrilege to disturb that goblet now, so deep has the superstition sunk into the minds of the Hooper descendants. Whenever the house was rented or leased the party taking possession was required to sign a paper pledging that the goblet should remain undisturbed. And from generation to generation of my family this has been respected."

At Captain Bertram,s home in Marshalburg, N. C., he has a wood engraving of Bishop Hooper and many other heirlooms that descended from him, all having become the property of the Captain by being the oldest son in his generation. Louis Bertram, attached to the British Colonial Service in Jamaica, and who was recently knighted by King Edward, is a relative of Captain Bertram and also a descendant of Bishop Hooper.

MILLIONAIRE BACK TO SCHOOL

Daniel Waldo Field Enters Harvard at the Age of Forty-five.

"Get an education, early in life if you can, but get it," is the advice given young men by Daniel Waldo Field, millionaire shoe manufacturer and employer of 5,000 hands, who is now, at the age of 45, a special student at Harvard. Three times a week, with textbooks, notebooks and pencils, Mr. Field goes to the Harvard School of Business to learn of corporations and their conduct from men who have made their mark in the world of business.

"I entered the Business School at Harvard to obtain the education I was unable to get when a boy," said Mr. Field. "I was forced to go to work in hotels, restaurants and cafes and became a foreman. Then I saved money enough to start a small factory of my own.

"I got plenty of experience, but little education, except that gained in business. I always have wanted an education, and now I have money enough to afford one and am going to have it.

"My business prospered and I became the president of seven corporations, amassing a large amount of money. But even my million or two did not compensate me for the loss of an education.

"I am studying under the heads of some of the largest corporations in the country. Experience has taught me many of the principles they expound, but I never realized that it was possible to reduce such things to formulas. I am learning something new about the subject in which I thought I was so proficient, and I am learning to see in a broad and comprehensive way these principles that I have unconsciously put into operation in my own corporations. Many matters that were not plain to me are being cleared up.

"I regret that I did not try harder to get this education when I was a boy. It seems that many of the young men in the course learn much more quickly than I do. If I had had the advantages which they are now obtaining, I feel that I should have made more of a success in business. It is one thing to learn by experience—often costly—and another to enter on business life with a scientific knowledge on the subject. The old day of the successful business man who begins work as an office boy is, in my mind, over, and the new generation of successful business men will be those who have been trained in the scientific principles of commerce in all its branches, just as our lawyers, doctors and engineers are trained.

"The young man should live simply and save his money. He should be thrifty and honest in all his dealings. It is by putting these principles into operation that I have succeeded in making a fortune."

UNAPPRECIATED.

THERE are some forms of pleasure
That nearer touch the spot
Than tending to the furnace
That it may keep things hot.
Some phases of enjoyment
That please me, on the whole,
Much more than sifting ashes
Or putting on the coal.

I'd rather light my meerschaum
And in a cozy nook
Sit down and scan the pages
Of some old fashioned book
Or read the daily papers
And thus keep up to date,
Than go into the basement
And monkey with the grate.

I know that useful labor
A man should not despise,
But still I can't help thinking
My wife needs exercise.
If I should sprain my ankle
In going down the stair
She always would regret it,
And she needs no more care.

Of course I'd rather do it
Than sit around and freeze
Or have a family racket
Because I strive to please,
But, as for light amusement,
It's not the very trick
If I could have the choosing
That I would rise and pick.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

OUT OF THE BELLY OF HELL CRIED I

"I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I" (Jonah ii, 2.)

On the Mediterranean Sea, April 17. —We are not far from the place where poor Jonah long ago had his sad experience in his attempt to run away from the Divine commission to the Ninevites. We are nearing Jaffa, the port from which he sailed, then called Joppa. Some, intent on disproving as much as possible of the Bible, have attempted to make light of Jonah's experiences, claiming that there was no fish in the world of such capacity as could swallow a man entirely. We are to remember, however, that the Scriptures do not say that it was an ordinary whale that swallowed Jonah, but rather they specifically declare that God "specially prepared" a great fish for the occasion. Nor is this all. We have our Lord's own testimony to the truthfulness of the matter, and whoever denies either his truthfulness or his intelligence is thereby denying also his Messiahship and repudiating him as a Savior, because neither a falsifier nor a dupe could possibly be recognized as the great Redeemer and Savior, the Sent of God, the Messiah.

Additionally our Lord informs us that the Jonah incident was in the nature of a type, especially designed of God to foreshadow the fact that Jesus himself would be dead for parts of three days and arise from the dead on the third day, even as Jonah was buried alive for parts of three days and on the third day the great fish vomited him upon dry land. There is nothing difficult about the narrative to one who has proper faith in God. To those who have not faith, nothing connected with Divine revelation is reasonable, commendable or satisfactory. Let us maintain our stand with those who hold fast to, and hold forth for others, the Word of Life.

The Belly of Hell Described.

But what have "the belly of hell" and the poor soul crying from it to do with the story of Jonah? And how does the story associate itself with our journey today over the Mediterranean Deep? Jonah was the man who was in the belly of hell and whose cry unto the Lord from there constitutes our text. When a boy I heard this text, and my imagination conjured up what hell would be like, and especially what the belly of hell, or what I supposed the middle part of it, would be like. I had the opportunity of looking into blast furnaces through what is called the glory-hole or peep-hole. There I noted that the center of the fire was at white heat. I tried to imagine people in such a condition in the very middle or belly of hell. I could not imagine how they could survive such an experience a single moment, let alone for all eternity. I sought theological expositions of the matter and learned that some theologians of the hoary past, admitting the destructive effect of fire, claimed that God would specially vitalize all the poor creatures consigned to this torment, so that they would never die, but would keep on suffering forever and forever and forever, untellable tortures. I found that other theologians explained that those consigned to such a fiery ordeal would gradually become adapted to it and assume an asbestos-like shell which would measurably protect them from the fire. But these theologians went on to explain that, wishing them to suffer horrible tortures, God would scale off the asbestos shell, causing them to suffer still more excruciatingly every time the operation was performed. As a child I tried to imagine that this was the just desert of sinners, and that the Heavenly Father was really kind and loving—that he did not give them worse, though I could not think of anything worse that they could suffer.

"When I was a child, I spake as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things" (I Corinthians xiii, 11). I asked for the proof that anybody could endure such sufferings and yet live. I asked for the proof that our God is as unsympathetic as any devil could be. My mind rejected as irrational the whole proposition. I said: The God whom I shall worship must be a greater being than myself—greater than any human being, not only in power to execute his will, but also in wisdom to make a wise arrangement for his creatures, and also perfect in justice to do to them as he would have them do to him, if he were the creature and they the God. He must also be perfect in love, the noblest feature of any character. I said to myself, Such must be the God who was the Creator of our race, for he has produced in humanity certain degrees of these various qualities and he could not give to man what he does not himself possess, nor can we suppose that he would create man with more justice, wisdom, love and power than he himself possesses. To that great God I bowed my heart and mind and every power that I possess. To him I still bow, and give thanks that by his grace I have come to see his character, his Plan and his Word more clearly than in the past. I thank him that now I can see in what way ultimately Jesus will be the "Light of the world"—not merely the Light of the Church (John viii, 12).

In abandoning the doctrine of eternal torment my disposition was to abandon the Bible also, because I believed that the Bible was the foundation of the irrational theory which had pictured God to my mind as a demon of the worst imaginable type. But, thank God, dear friends, the Lord heard my prayer for light, for knowledge respecting himself. After I had made a search of heathen creeds, as well as those of Christendom, and had found them all illogical, unreasonable, unsatisfactory, I turned to the Bible again, saying, Perhaps I have not done the Bible justice; perhaps I have unconsciously attributed to the Bible the teachings of the creeds. Perhaps I have read it through colored spectacles. Praying to God for guidance I took up Bible study in a very different way from previously. I began to study the Bible as I should have done at first—without reference to any of the creeds. I began to let God teach me. I ceased to say, It reads, "Thus," but it must mean otherwise. It says, "So and so," but cannot mean that, but the reverse. In other words I ceased to try to teach God and endeavored to be taught of God through his Word, guided by his holy Spirit.

International Bible Studies.

That was thirty-eight years ago. Under the Lord's blessing I found the Key to the interpretation of the Scriptures—not because of ability, but, I believe, because it is now due time for the Bible to be understood—in the closing of this Gospel Age and the dawning of the Millennial Day. Having found the Key and used it myself I have spent my best endeavors since to put the Key into the hands of God's consecrated people the world over. I have nothing to boast of, dear friends, but have much to be glad for. First, I am glad on my own account with a joy unspeakable, that now I know my Heavenly Father and can have confidence in him and can have love for him, as never before. I am thankful that, to some extent, I have been enabled to convey similar joys, similar blessings, to others of his dear people of all denominations in all parts of the world. The Lord has gradually enlarged my opportunities year by year. I am not building a sect—not making a new denomination—not founding a Church! We have had too much of that sort of thing already. Not only have we Wesley's Church and Calvin's Church, etc., etc., but it has become the custom for each minister to be spoken of as the proprietor of the Church; as, for instance, The Reverend Dr. A.'s Church. It has become a custom, too, for the preachers to speak of the people as "My people," "My Church." This is all wrong. I wish to have neither part nor lot in it. I have no Church, and wish for none. There is but the one Church—the Church of Christ—"the Church of the Living God"—"the Church of the First-Borns, whose names are written in heaven." That Church includes in its membership every true saint of God who trusts in the merit of Christ and seeks to walk in his footsteps. Whatever earthly systems such may be identified with are without Divine authorization. Their standing in God's sight is merely because of their identification with Christ as "members of his Body."

In God's providence I was led to publish six volumes of "Studies in the Scriptures," or Bible Keys. These were taken up by the Bible and Tract Society, and published at cost price, to enable all of God's people everywhere to procure them. They are now published in ten of the most prominent languages. The first Volume, "The Plan of the Ages," has passed the three million mark. I have received not one cent of royalty. My life is a very simple one. My expenses are small. I accept no salary and take up no collections. Voluntary donations from those who have been blessed by my labors supply my needs and the surplus goes to the Bible and Tract Society for the general forwarding of its work—"The Promulgation of Christian Knowledge."

Each earnest Christian who obtains the assistance of these Bible Keys and enters into the treasures of God's Word and becomes rich himself in spiritual knowledge and in joy and peace of heart is glad to call the attention of others to these Bible Keys. Thus the International classes of Bible Students of all denominations in all parts of the world are springing up and a blessed light, we believe, is going forth from these, assistful to all who love righteousness and hate iniquity. Although I am the regular Pastor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle congregation, there are several assistants and I am privileged to speak to thinking Christians of various parts of the world, especially in the United States. Only the Lord knows how I thank him for this privilege of service, and for the still larger opportunity afforded me through the columns of some of the principal newspapers of the United States.

My sermons are handled by a Syndicate, and I am advised that now they appear in nearly five hundred newspapers, aggregating a circulation of six million copies, or, according to newspaper count, thirty million readers. All of these dear people of every denomination who do any thinking at all, I am sure have had similar difficulties to those which I experienced—difficulties in appreciating how our Heavenly Father could be a good Father, a good God, a loving Creator and yet provide for his human creatures such terrible destinies as all the creeds of the "dark ages" set forth. There is not a thinking Christian in the world who does not need the correct understanding of the Bible in order to be able to stand in the evil day that is upon us. All need to give heed to St. Paul's words, "Take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand" (Ephesians vi, 13). Our day is a blessed one in respect to its wonderful opportunities and privileges, but it is an evil one in the sense of being a time of great trial and testing of faith to Christendom.

Thinking minds are rejecting the doctrine of eternal torment and generally at the same time rejecting the Bible and denying that it is the inspired Word of God. These dear friends are stumbling into infidelity and think that Higher Criticism and Darwin's Evolution theory are new light. What they need is to see that the true light is in the Bible and that, wearing our grandfathers' spectacles, we inherited the Word of God and wrested it to our own injury and to the loss of our peace of mind and fellowship with the Father and with the Son and with the holy Spirit.

The Key to the Scriptures.

Whoever gets the proper understanding of our text has in his possession the Key to the Bible. If he will use it, passage after passage will open for him and the whole Word of God becomes a new and glorious revelation of Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power Divine. Jonah was in the fish's belly —he was buried alive. It is this that is referred to in our text. The words hell-belly signify grave-belly or belly-grave. The context shows all this, telling us additionally that sea-weeds were wrapped about the Prophet's head and that God heard his prayer and delivered him from the hell-belly, or belly-grave, on the third day by causing the fish to vomit him up. If you have a reference Bible note that in the margin there is a reference to the words of our text, saying, "Hebrew, the grave." Ah! says one, The translators merely made a mistake and translated it hell when they should have translated it grave. Yes, I answer, and they made the same mistake in every case in which they used the same word sheol throughout the Old Testament. As it is, sheol is translated grave more times than it is translated hell in our Common Version; but it should be translated grave every time. There we have the Key to the Bible. The hell of the Bible, the penalty for sin, is death, the grave, the tomb. It is not an everlasting hell, for special Scriptures declare that sheol (hell) shall be destroyed. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol); I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave (sheol, hell) I will be thy destruction" (Hosea xiii, 14). St. Paul quotes this prophecy in conjunction with his great discourse on the resurrection, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave (hades) where is thy victory" (I Corinthians xv, 55).

We see, dear friends, what our dear Redeemer suffered on our behalf to release us from the penalty for sin. He did not go to eternal torment for our sins. He did go into sheol, into hades, into the grave. "Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures" (I Corinthians xv, 3). Thus God has provided for the resurrection of the dead —all mankind, "both of the just and of the unjust." The just are the Church, the saints. The unjust include all others. The blood of Jesus will avail for the release of every member of the race from the great penalty of death. Now it operates under a special call to the saintly few who are invited to become joint-heirs with the Redeemer in his great Kingdom which shortly is to bless all the families of the earth—not only those then living, but also all who have gone down to the tomb. The general resurrection will not be an instantaneous one, as in the case of the saints. It will be a gradual one in two senses.

(1) All will not come forth at once, but, as the Apostle declares, "Every man in his own order," company or band (I Corinthians xv, 23).

(2) It will be gradual in the sense that the awakening from the tomb will be but the beginning of the resurrection of the world. During the thousand years of Christ's reign all who will give heed to his instructions and assistance may rise gradually—up, up, up—and by the close of the Millennium they will reach the full perfection and image of God lost by Father Adam through disobedience. The unwilling, those rebellious after the light has fully come upon them, will be destroyed in the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery. They will perish as the brute beasts.

So, then, let us learn a lesson from Jonah's words, not forgetting the other lesson mentioned by our Lord when he declares that Jonah's experiences in the grave—the belly of the fish, and his release therefrom—foreshadowed his own experiences in the tomb and his resurrection in power and great glory on the third day.

Than go into the basement
And monkey with the grate.

I know that useful labor
A man should not despise,
But still I can't help thinking
My wife needs exercise.
If I should sprain my ankle
In going down the stair
She always would regret it,
And she needs no more care.

Of course I'd rather do it
Than sit around and freeze
Or have a family racket
Because I strive to please,
But, as for light amusement,
It's not the very trick
If I could have the choosing
That I would rise and pick.

Supplying a Need.

"I have been thinking," said the monkey, combing his beard thoughtfully with a discarded tomato can that hunters had left behind—"I have been thinking of the possibilities of a great commercial enterprise."

"What is it?" asked the hippo without evincing too much curiosity.

"You know it has been the grief of the leopard's life that he cannot change his spots."

"Yes; I have often heard him making a roar about it."

"Well, we will import a carload of reliable hair dye of all colors and let him be a striped hyena if he wants to."

Brave Man.

"Jones," whispered a confident friend at a social gathering, "here's your hat, and I can show you how to get out the back way. There is yet a chance to escape."

"Escape from what?"

"There is a widow in the other room who has designs on you, and she is working this way."

"Where did you say my hat was?"

"Right here."

"Will you please lose it for me?"

Why Not?

"Why don't you make a kick about it if you find conditions so intolerable?"

"Kick about it?"

"Sure. I'd kick like five government mules if I were in your place."

"But I have kicked to beat the band and am kicking all the while hard as I can kick."

"Well, for goodness sake, man, why don't you stop kicking, then?"

Mean Thing.

"Jack is really fond of me."

"That is so characteristic of Jack."

"What is?"

"Caring for those who don't seem to have any one else to look out for them."

Wanted to Know.

"I am about to be married."

"Are you, indeed?"

"I am."

"Would you rather I would congratulate you or condole with you?"

His Money's Worth.

"That's a fine sample of the photographer's art."

"What, that photograph of Charlie?"

"Yes."

"Good work, but it doesn't look like Charlie."

"No, but it looks the way he thinks he looks."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The busy man appreciates an enemy who is just passive enough about it to let him alone.

Talking back to a phonograph is the refinement of waste energy.

A fresh youth with more money than he can take care of isn't afflicted that way long.

As our eyesight improves we look a favor over before accepting it to see what is the real price.

While we have a line on the pole, it is not a clothesline as yet.

Common sense cannot be a disease. It doesn't appear to be catching.

While it is true that everything is passing away, some of the most objectionable things are not taking the limited train.

When a man loses his job the other fellow is almost sure to find it before he does.

Why don't gossips ever form a union and go on strike?

The man certainly has the courage of his convictions who insists that people accept him at the estimation that he places upon himself.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot or comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young men, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THE AMERICAN HEN.

A Wall Street Valuation of the Great Egg Producer.

It is claimed that the average production of a hen is 200 eggs per annum, but is safe to assume that the actual is much below this figure. Adopting the very conservative figure of 120 eggs per hen per annum, we find on the above basis of production there are 150,000,000 laying hens in the United States responsible for the production of 18,000,000,000 eggs.

At the farm price of 20 cents per dozen the total income derived from each hen annually would amount to $2. Allowing 40 cents for maintenance and 10 cents for depreciation, which latter would wipe out the market value of the hen in four years, irrespective of salvage when the period of production is over, the net profit per hen per annum amounts to $1.50.

This profit, according to Wall street standards, capitalized on a 5 per cent income basis, would place a nominal value of $30 on each hen. For the 150,000,000 hens this would amount to the enormous total of $4,500,000,000.

That the American hen can return a yield of 5 per cent per annum on a capitalization of $4,500,000,000 appears nothing short of remarkable, but such is the case. The entire outstanding capital obligations of the railroads of the United States in 1907 were less than four times this amount, or $16,082,140,683, while the total paid out in interest and dividends represented but 4.05 per cent of this amount.—Wall Street Journal.

Daniel Webster's Carriage.

Captain Albert Hartge of Shadyside, Anne Arundel county, owns a carriage which was once the property of Daniel Webster and which is still a highly serviceable vehicle. Captain Hartge has been using it for several years and says it is far more roomy and comfortable than those built nowadays. The carriage is a phaeton, built on high springs, being as good and strong now as the day it was built. It is constructed of white hickory, and the great lamps, dashboard, rails, handles, etc., are of solid copper, heavily silver plated. The old carriage was the favorite vehicle of Webster at his home near Marshfield, Mass., and was sold to a Marylander several years after his death at a sale in Boston. The purchaser brought it to Baltimore and stored it away in a stable, intending to ship it to his country place in Howard county. Before doing so he died, and the old carriage was again put up under the hammer. Captain A. S. Byus, an oyster packer of this city, happened to attend the sale and bought the old vehicle for a very small sum and later gave it to his friend Captain Hartge, who prizes it highly. —Baltimore Sun.

Airships and Fogs.

The Germans are considering the problem of how aeronauts are to determine their location at night or in a fog. An ingenious engineer has proposed for the convenience of those traveling at night a very complete network of signal lights which will enable any aeronaut at some little distance above the earth's surface to determine his location with considerable precision. To such special signal lights naturally signals by bell or siren can be added to be used in case of fog. Dr. Bidlingmaier of the imperial observatory at Wilhelmshaven has, however, proposed a very simple adjunct for the equipment of the aeronaut which will enable him to locate his position with some measure of accuracy without the use of eye or ear as dependent upon terrestrial signals. The instrument in question is the so called "duplex compass," devised by Dr. Bidlingmaier and used by him lately during the explorations of the German antarctic expedition.

Zoological Puzzle.

Italian zoologists have a puzzle to solve, owing to the discovery on Mont Blanc of the body of a white bear, which has been taken to Aosta. It was thought at first that the bear must have died some 300 years ago and must have been preserved by the ice, since it has always been held that white bears vanished from the Alps three centuries ago. But it has since been demonstrated that death could have taken place only a few days previous to discovery. As this would seem to show that there are still white bears in the Alps, expeditions are now to be sent to test the theory.—Dundee Advertiser.

Keeping Tally With Sticks.

Many correspondents have dug into their memories for the survival of the notched stick as tally, which the exchequer has now renounced. "While staying with some friends not far from Rouen," writes one, "I noticed that the baker brought with him a number of sticks tied together at one end, one for each customer. The customer had one also, and, producing the stick, the baker put it with its corresponding stick and notched it." So the accounts were kept. They are kept in a similar way by the tallymen in the Kentish hop gardens.—London Chronicle.

A Monarch of Many Beds.

One of the Emperor Menelik's weaknesses is the matter of beds. In his sleeping palace there are a number of rooms, and each possesses a different bedstead, either of wood or iron, built high or low. It is the emperor's practice to sleep in one or the other, just as the fancy takes him. Since his last serious illness he has considerably changed his mode of living. He was accustomed to take violent exercise, but he has renounced this for a sedentary life.

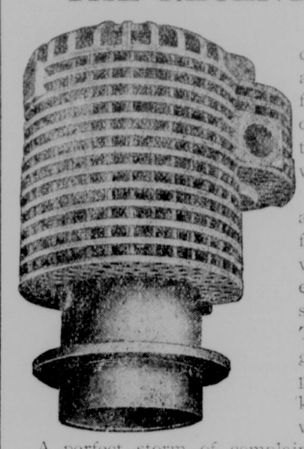
THE RECENT COLD WAVE



That spread over the entire country caught many people unawares. They had not provided for such severe arctic weather, the coal bins became almost empty, the pipes froze, and everything was tight.

From Main to San Francisco, and from Chicago to New Orleans, farmers went out to pump their water or grind their feed with their engines, which they bought to stand any atmospheric conditions. They found their water cooled engines frozen up stiff, their water pipes, water tanks and water jackets cracked and not a wheel would turn.

A perfect storm of complaints was sent in to the factories where these water cooled engines are made. However there was nothing to do, except to thaw out the ice and send in the broken parts for repairs.

The tie up would have been complete and the damage enormous had it not been for the many thousands of "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINES that the most progressive American farmers, mechanics and manufacturers are using. They had recognized the many advantages of owning and using an engine that would run equally as well at the North Pole as at the Equator. The "NEW WAY" engines work just as well when the temperature is 100 in the shade or 60 below zero.

No water is used to cool the "NEW WAY" cylinder, no water jacket, water tank or pipes are necessary. Notice the cut of the "NEW WAY" cylinder. See the immense amount of surface obtained to radiate the heat which is driven away by a strong blast of air. This keeps the cylinder always at the proper temperature, and produces the maximum power at the lowest possible fuel cost.

There isn't a piece of packing in the "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINE. Notice the solid cylinder, no cylinder head to take off to adjust the inlet and exhaust valves. Both of these valves can be removed, examined and replaced in three minutes by removing one nut. There is nothing to adjust afterwards as you don't have to disconnect a single part.

Examine any water cooled engine on the market. They are all alike in this respect that you have to remove a cylinder head to get at the valves and then you have to pack the cylinder head and replace and adjust many springs, etc., before the engine will go. Isn't the "NEW WAY" easier? Isn't it simpler? Isn't it quicker? Isn't it better?

The "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINE will run every minute of the time, day and night, every day of the year. To shut down the "NEW WAY" engine, simply throw off the switch, nothing more. To shut down a water cooled engine, you have to turn off the water, shut off the gasoline, throw the switch off and drain the water jacket for 5 or 10 minutes.

To start the "NEW WAY" engine again, throw on the switch and give the wheel a turn. The "NEW WAY" engine "goes and goes right." To start up a water cooled engine again, you have to haul water, fill the tank, pump up gasoline, open the needle valve, throw on the switch, crank the engine, and after it has started, adjust the needle valve. In the winter time, if the water has not thoroughly drained, you may not get any compression, you'll find your water jacket is cracked, you have to remove your cylinder head, repack and replace it. It takes hours.

When you have used the "NEW WAY" and it has saved you all the worry, time, trouble and expense that other engines make, you will say the "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINE is the best of them all.

We have the agency for the "NEW WAY" engine. We carry a stock of them at all times in our warehouse. We shall be glad to show them to you and to anyone intending to purchase an engine.

There are just one hundred more reasons why you should purchase a "NEW WAY." Watch this space in next week's issue, and we'll give you a few more of them. We shall be glad to demonstrate the "NEW WAY" engine and trust you will call at our ware rooms during the week.

CHAPTER 524.

AN ACT to add five additional Sections to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "Circuit Court," and providing for speedy judgment in non contested cases.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That five additional Sections be and they are hereby added to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett county," sub-title "Circuit Court," said Sections to be known as Section 29A, Section 29B, Section 29C, Section 29D and Section 29E, and to follow Section 29, which said added Sections shall read as follows:

SEC. 29A. In addition to the first day of each term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, now fixed by law the second Monday in January, February, April, May, July, August, October and November, in each year, shall be return days, and the words "return day," whenever used in this Act shall apply as well to the first day of each term as to the other return days herein enumerated.

SEC. 29B. In any suit, where the cause of action is a contract whether in writing or not, or whether expressed or implied, the plaintiff, if affidavit or affirmation be made, as hereinafter stated shall be entitled to judgment, to be entered by the Court or the Clerk thereof, on motion in writing, at any time after fifteen days from the return day to which the defendant shall have been summoned, although the defendant may have pleaded, unless such plea contains a good defense, and unless the defendant, or some one in his behalf, shall, under oath or affirmation, state that the every plea so pleaded by the defendant is true; and shall further state the amount of plaintiff's demand, if anything admitted to be due or owing, and the amount disputed; and further, that the affidavit really believes the defendant will be able, at the trial of the cause, to produce sufficient evidence to support the plea as to the portion disputed, and that he is advised by counsel to file the said plea; and such plea shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel that he is so advised that the party making such oath or affirmation, and if the copartnership or incorporation of any of the parties to the suit shall be alleged in the declaration and the affidavit to be filed therewith, as hereinafter provided; or if there shall be filed with the declaration in said cause any paper purporting to be signed by any defendant therein, the fact of alleged copartnership, incorporation and the genuineness of such signature shall be deemed to be admitted for the purpose of said cause, unless the said affidavit shall further state that the affiant knows or has good reason to believe such allegation of copartnership or incorporation to be untrue, or that the signature was not written by or by the authority of the person whose signature it purported to be. In case part of the debt or damages claimed to be admitted to be due, the plaintiff shall be entitled forthwith to an entry of judgment therefor with costs, in full satisfaction and discharge of action; provided, the amount so admitted to be due shall not be below the jurisdiction of the Court, or the defendant may pay such admitted part into Court, and then upon such proceedings shall be had as are provided by law in other cases of payment of money into Court; provided, that the Court, for good cause shown, may, by its order in writing passed at any time before judgment, extend the time for filing such plea and affidavits, which extension shall suspend until the expiration thereof the plaintiff's rights to enter judgment under this Section.

SEC. 29C. The plaintiff shall not be entitled to judgment under the preceding Sections unless at the time of bringing his action he shall file with his declaration an affidavit or affirmation, if the affiant is conscientiously scrupulous as to taking an oath, stating the time, amount the defendant is indebted to him over and above all discounts, and shall also file the bond, bill of exchange, promissory note or other writing or accounts, or a copy thereof, by which the defendant is so indebted, or if the action be founded upon a verbal or implied contract shall file a statement of the particulars of the defendant's indebtedness thereunder; if there are two or more plaintiffs, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any one of them, or if all the plaintiffs be absent from the State at the time of bringing the suit, or if the plaintiff be a corporation, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any agent of plaintiff or plaintiffs, or any of them, who will make further oath or affirmation that he has personal knowledge of the matter herein stated, and the said affidavit or affirmation may be made before any of the persons who may take an affidavit or affirmation to authorize the issuing of a foreign attachment, and may be certified in the same manner.

SEC. 29D. When any judgment by default shall be entered under any of the preceding Sections the Court may at any time thereafter assess the damages upon proof thereof without empanneling a jury to do so.

SEC. 29E On all judgments entered in said Court there shall be a stay of execution until the return day or the first day of the term whichever shall first occur next succeeding the return day or the first day of the term at which said judgment may have been entered, with the right to the defendant to supersede the same for six months from the expiration of said stay as now allowed by law; provided, however that the Court may, on motion in writing by the plaintiff or his attorney, showing sufficient reasons therefor, allow an execution or attachment or other proper writ to be issued at any time after the entry of judgment as aforesaid and before the expiration of said stay.

SEC 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect upon the first day of May in the year nineteen hundred and ten.

Approved April 8, 1910.

CHAPTER 211.

AN ACT to repeal Chapter 37 of the Acts of 1904 entitled an Act to require all corporations engaged in mining coal or fire clay in Garrett county to pay their employees wages due semimonthly and to re-enact the same with amendments.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that Chapter 37 of the Acts of 1904, entitled an Act to require all corporations engaged in mining coal or fire clay in Garrett county to pay their employees wages due semi-monthly, be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all corporations or individual mine owners now or hereafter engaged in mining coal or fire clay in Garrett county be and the same are hereby required to pay each and all their employees their wages earned in said employment semi-monthly, that is to say all wages earned on or before the fifteenth day of each month shall be paid not later than the twenty-fifth day of each month and all wages earned from sixteenth day to the last day of the month, both inclusive, shall be paid on or before the tenth day of the succeeding month unless said twenty-fifth day or tenth day of any month shall fall on Sunday or a legal holiday, in which case the time of payment shall be extended to the next day; and if payment as above is to be made before the twenty-fifth or tenth day of any month it shall be the duty of the mine owner, agent, superintendent or paymaster of each mine to notify their employees at least three days in advance of such intended payment by posting notices at their respective places of employment.

SEC. 3. That any corporation, association or individual operating a coal or fire clay mine in Garrett county that shall fail or neglect to make payment of wages at the times and in the manner hereinbefore specified in Section 2 of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon indictment and conviction thereof shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than three hundred dollars in the discretion of the Court.

HEAVY MACHINERY WILL BE INSTALLED

At the Thayerville Lime Stone Quarry by Mr. Charles F. Hammond.

The improvement to Hooppole Road under the direction of the Good Roads Commission, which body awarded the contract last week to Messrs. Hoblitzell & Price, of Meyersdale, Pa., specifying that rock from the quarry of John O. Thayer, near Thayerville, be used in construction, will necessitate the installation of a massive crusher of about three hundred tons' capacity each day of ten hours at the quarry. To operate the crusher boilers and an engine having the necessary power will also have to be placed in position, which will be done immediately by Mr. C. F. Hammond, who will quarry, crush and deliver the stone into wagons for the contractors.

Mr. Hammond is an experienced man in the stone business, having until recently successfully owned and operated the sand mill near Corinth where crushers, drills, etc., similar to those necessary at Thayerville, are utilized.

In order to keep everything moving swiftly Mr. Hammond will employ fifty men or more and will have the plant in operation within the next month at which time work on the road proper will begin.

MUNICIPAL TICKET AT LOCH LYNN

Nominations Made Last Night At a Meeting of the Citizens.

The following nominations for municipal officers of Loch Lynn Heights was made last night at a largely attended meeting of the citizens of that town:

For Mayor, H. V. Leighton; for Council, Levi Hewitt and T. B. Doman; for clerk, L. C. Yutzy; for treasurer, Warren Rathbun; tax collector, N. F. White; for bailiff, A. W. Miller.

An opposition ticket to the one above will probably be named on Saturday night as it is understood a move to that end is now on foot.

The election will be held on Monday of next week.

Runaways Intercepted.

A sudden attack of wanderlust brought on by the fact that one of the boys had money—what seemed to him unlimited quantities of it—landed Guy Proudfoot, aged 10, and Everett Bowmaster, aged about 11, of Grafton, in Oakland, where they were located through the Oakland authorities by Grafton police officials about five o'clock Tuesday morning and were returned to that city Tuesday evening by Morgan Proudfoot, the father of the first boy, who came to Oakland.

RIGHT OF WAY PURCHASED

Baltimore and Ohio Improvements Will Make Many Changes.

Property owners along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad right of way between Skipnish and Corinth, four or five miles west of Oakland, are being paid considerable sums by representatives of the railroad company for property to be utilized by the corporation in making changes necessitated by the elimination of curves and grades contemplated by the surveys made recently through that section of the country.

Beginning at the east entrance to Fifty-eight cut, which has been considered for many years dangerous owing to the heavy grade and sharp curve, the roadway will be changed to a practically straight piece of track from that point to Snowy Creek Curve, west of Corinth, eliminating the compound curves around Snowy Creek where many disastrous wrecks have occurred.

To make these contemplated improvements the railway company has been forced to purchase considerable property at a high figure. Last Saturday Mr. Henry Wend sold his farm of a few acres to the company receiving for it the sum of $2000, and on Monday Mrs. Mary Flaherty, who owns the adjoining place on the west, sold eleven acres for $2600. Other property to be acquired by the company will be that belonging to the Connell heirs, the home of Mr. Charles F. White at Hutton, and a number of other pieces of land between Mr. White's home and Corinth.

New Treasurer in Office.

Mr. Robert L. Fries, who was elected County Treasurer by the voters of Garrett county at the election held last November, took charge of his office a few days ago and is now engaged in mailing tax bills to the residents of the county. Mr. Fries' administration of financial affairs, we feel sure, will be a successful one. He is a worthy successor of a faithful officer in the person of Mr. James W. White, who acted as deputy and conducted the affairs of the office for the recent incumbent, Mr. William E. Hollinger. Mr. White retains quarters at the court house where he may be found by those desiring to pay taxes in arrears.

Struck by Overhead Bridge.

T. L. Sweitzer, trackman at Deer Park, was returning to his home on the top of a box car from Oakland yesterday afternoon when he was knocked from the car by being struck in the head by one of the overhead bridges spanning the tracks in Oakland. His injuries consisted of numerous contusions of the head and shoulders and a badly lacerated scalp. Dr. McComas rendered necessary medical attention and the man accompanied friends home on the afternoon accommodation.

NATURAL GAS FOR MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK?

It May Be Introduced into That Town This Summer by the N. N. Gas Co.

The visit to Mountain Lake Park and the inspection of that place by Mr. Howard V. Thomas, of Buffalo, N. Y., president of the Northern Natural Gas Company, accompanied by Mr. J. D. Northrup, general superintendent, Mr. Joseph Cheuvront, local manager of the same company, and Dr. W. W. Davis, superintendent of the Mountain Lake Park Association, has caused considerable stir among residents and property owners at that point who confidently believe that the gas company and authorities of the Park have arrived at an understanding agreeable to all concerned and that gas will be piped into the Park within a few weeks at most.

Mr. Thomas has given out no statement concerning the action of the gas company but it is thought that he is favorably impressed with conditions and that should a sufficient number of contracts be signed by consumers pipes will at once be laid through the streets of the town.

With the introduction of gas into the Park much of the bitter feeling which has existed between residents and the authorities will have disappeared and harmony will again prevail.

Heavy Fine for Druggist.

One of the most drastic sentences ever given in the history of the Barbour county court was that of Judge John Homer Holt, pronounced at Philippi, Friday, in dealing with W. O. Davis, convicted of selling intoxicants, as a druggist. Davis was convicted on two charges. For the first he was fined $100, and for the second he was fined $500, sentenced to thirty days in jail and his license to conduct a drug store was forfeited.

Died of His Injuries.

Dr. Mark W. Blackburn, member of a wealthy and prominent family of Wilson, Pa., died Sunday of wounds self-inflicted, following his recent attempt to kill Mrs. Violet Getty, when she refused to elope with him. Mrs. Getty, who is the wife of Blackburn's former chum at the dental college of the University of Pittsburg, was not seriously injured.

DAMAGE TO WESTERN FRUIT.

There seems to be no room for doubt that an enormous damage has been done to the prospective fruit crops throughout the entire Northern area of the United States, extending from Indiana on the East to the Dakotas on the West. The unusual warm weather of the last week of March and the first week of April started the sap in vines, plants and fruit trees in the Northern zone at a dangerously early period. The storms of last week, which swept Maryland with a watery deluge, were accompanied with freezing temperatures and in some instances with snow falls farther to the westward. The rough estimate made in Chicago, that the aggregate damage will amount to $30,000,000 possibly places the figures too high.

It is not too late to replant vegetables; the loss mainly pertains to such fruits as were in bloom or in the tender stage of fruitage.

The area affected is not that upon which the great East Coast cities are dependent for their fruit supplies. Georgia and California are the states which made a specialty of peaches for market purposes, and the peach yield of these states has not been touched by the blizzard. The apple crops of Colorado, Oregon, Washington and along the Eastern coast from Connecticut to Virginia, are believed to be safe. Great damage is reported to strawberries but there is no hardier fruit grows than the strawberry. The plant will reblossom when the first bloom is killed.

There is rarely a season that frost damage reports of an alarming nature are not sent out. Experience teaches that these report are generally exaggerated. It often happens that fruit trees are overloaded with bloom, and the killing of even 60 per cent. of the blossoms make only for a better quality of fruit.

DISTRICT ASSESSORS APPOINTED YESTERDAY

By the Board of County Commissioners in Special Session.

Yesterday at a special meeting of the Board of County Commissioners, called for the purpose, assessors for the various districts under the recently enacted general assessment law, were appointed as follows:

District No. 1, Herman Steiding; No. 2, David S. Custer; No. 3, Hiram S. Coleman; No. 4, Henry Bernard; No. 5, Edward Margroff; No. 6, Elijah Hoye; No. 7, Benjamin F. Crane; No. 8, Jonas Yutzy; No. 9, Jacob E. McKenzie; No. 10, Columbus L. Paugh; No. 11, Jonas E. Wampler; No. 12, Joel Orendorf; No. 13, Artemus C. Smith; No. 14, Abraham L. Sines.

The appointments above were made by the Commissioners after considering the qualifications of the various applicants for the positions and all are good, reliable and representative men.

Under the provisions of the law the recently appointed assessors are required to meet with the general assessors, Messrs. C. M. Miller and U. M. Stanton, at the court house on next Tuesday, May 3rd, for the purpose of organizing, receiving their instructions and beginning their work, which must be completed within a specified time.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

The Orphans' Court of Garrett county, with all members present, convened Tuesday when the following business was transacted:

The first and final account of Lillie B. Teets, administratrix of the personal estate of John C. Teets, late of Garrett county, was ratified.

The first and final account of Nellie M. Broadwater and Jacob S. Miller, administrators of the personal estate of the late Noah Broadwater, of Grantsville, was ratified and confirmed.

First and final account of Clarissa R. Paugh, administratrix of the late Jehu Paugh, was ratified and confirmed.

A petition presented by Daisy M. King, guardian of Ralph L. King, in Ohio, requiring F. L. Warnick, guardian in Garrett county, to turn over to the petitioner the money and property in his hands as such guardian, was passed and the order issued directing said Warnick to comply with the petition.

THE TOWN OF BOND CHANGES OWNERSHIP

New Proprietor of the Lumbering Plant at Bond Takes Charge Monday.

The lumbering firm of DuBois & Bond Bros., for many years identified as one of the leading employers of labor in Garrett county, has sold to Mr. A. W. Cook, of Cooksburg, Pa., the town of Bond and the mill located at that point, as well as the railroad leading from the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio at Bond Junction to Bond and beyond into the woods, reserving all their real estate which is over ten thonsand acres, and their manufactured lumber which invoices over $50,000.

Mr. Bond, superintendent of the old firm, will remain in Garrett county as a resident. He will market the manufactured lumber and look after and improve the real estate of the company and devote his time to his personal interests and business enterprises elsewhere.

Mr. Cook will take charge of his new property on Monday of next week and will begin immediately to manufacture the timber on what is known as the North Maryland Lumber Company's land, lying immediately north of and adjoining the Bond lands. To manufacture this timber into lumber it will require some six and seven years. Mr. Cook does not contemplate making any changes in the organization or management of the business at Bond except that the will personally superintend the works instead of Mr. Bond. All the old employes will be retained by the new owner in the positions they now occupy, provided they desire to stay.

With the consummation of the sale of the mill at Bond the future of that town is assured for a number of years and will give steady employment to many men.

Dr. Henry McComas rendered surgical aid.

A few years ago Mr. Wilt met with a more severe accident on the same road when his engine left the rails and caught him beneath it, scalding him so horribly that for several weeks his life was despaired of by his family and friends.

A Story of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

slow for the bridge. We can swing off, Loraine. Now's our chance!"

The train was barely creeping up to the bridge. He clasped her in the strong crook of his left arm, slid down to a sitting position and boldly pushed himself clear of the car, landing on his feet. Staggering forward with the impetus he had received, he would have fallen except for a mighty effort. A sharp groan escaped his lips as he lowered Loraine to the ground. She looked anxiously into his face and saw nothing there but relief.

"Come along," said the man briefly. "We must try to reach that station back there. There I can telegraph in. Oh!" His first attempt to walk brought out a groan of pain.

He had turned his ankle in the leap to the ground.

"LEAN ON ME!" SHE CRIED.

"Lean on me!" she cried despairingly.

"Nonsense!" he said, with grim stubbornness. "I don't mind the pain. We'll not stop, my dear—not till we get word to Dangloss."

At a wagon road crossing they paused to rest, having covered two miles. Her little cry of joy caused him to look up from the swollen ankle, which he was regarding with dubious concern. An ox cart was approaching from the west.

"A ride!" she cried joyously.

They stopped the cart and bargained for a ride to Ronn. The man was a farmer, slow and suspicious. He haggled.

"The country's full of evil men and women these days," he demurred. "Besides, I have a heavy enough load as it is for my poor beasts."

Miss Tullis conducted the negotiations.

"We are bound for Edelweiss. Can you get us there in two hours?"

"With these beasts, poor things? Never!"

"It will be worth your while. A hundred gavvos if you carry us to a place where we can secure quicker transportation."

In time she won him over. He agreed to carry them along the way at his best speed until they came up with better beasts or reached the city gates. They climbed up to the seat, and the tortuous journey began. The farmer trotted beside the wheel nearly all of the way, descanting warmly in painful English on the present condition of things in the hills.

"The rascals have made way with the beautiful Miss Tullis. She is the American lady stopping at the castle. You should see her, sir. Excepting our dear Princess Yetive—God rest her soul—she is the most beautiful creature Graustark has ever seen—not quite so grand as the Countess Ingomede, but fairer, believe me. She is beloved by every one. She is to be married to the Count Vos Engo, a fine lad, sir. Now she is gone I don't know what he will do. Suicide mayhap."

"Do you know the great Count Marlanx?" demanded King, possessed of a sudden thought. The man faced him at the mention of the name, a suspicious gleam in his eyes.

"Count Marlanx!" he snorted. There was no mistaking the angry scowl. "Are you friends of that snake? If you are, get out of my cart."

"He's all right!" cried Truxton. "Tell him who we are, Loraine, and why we must get to the city."

Five minutes later the farmer, overcome by the stupendous news, was lashing his oxen with might and main. The astonished beasts tore down the road to Ronn so bravely that there seemed some prospect of getting a telegram through in time. At Ronn they learned that the operator had been unable to call Edelweiss since 7 o'clock.

In time the city gates came in sight, far up the straight, narrow road.

It seemed to the quivering Americans that the gates were mocking them by drawing farther away instead of coming nearer.

Near the gates, which were still open, it occurred to him in a single flash of dismay that he and Loraine would be recognized and intercepted by Marlanx watchers.

It was she who had the solution. They might succeed in passing the gates if they hid themselves in the bed of the cart, underneath the thick canvas covering. The farmer lifted the cloth, and they crawled down among the melons.

"To the tower!" cried the anxious Truxton.

"Impossible!" shouted the farmer. "The streets are roped off, and the crowds are too great."

"Then let us out as near to the tower as possible!" cried the other.

"Here we are!" cried the driver a few minutes later, pulling up his half dead oxen and leaping to the ground.

Off through an alley they hurried. They came to the crowded square a few minutes later. The clock in the cathedral pointed to 12 o'clock and after! The catastrophe had not yet taken place. They were in time. Everywhere they heard glad voices crying out that the prince was coming.

"Great God!" cried Truxton, stopping suddenly and pointing with trembling hand to a spot across the street. "There she is! At the corner! Stop her!"

He had caught sight of Olga Platanova.

The first row of dragoons was already passing in front of her. Less than 200 feet away rolled the royal coach of gold.

"An anarchist!" shouted King hoarsely. He looked like one himself. "The bomb! The bomb! Stop the prince!"

Colonel Quinnox recognized this bearded, uncouth figure and the flying, terrified girl at his heels. King was dragging her along by the hand.

Quinnox alone prevented the dragoons from cutting down the pallid madman who stumbled blindly toward the coaches beyond.

"Stop the coach!" cried King.

Panic seized the crowd. Olga Platanova stood alone, her eyes wide and glassy, staring as if petrified at the face of Truxton King.

He saw the object in her wavering hand. A plain, white faced farmer in a smock of blue was crossing the street with mighty bounds, his eyes glued upon the arm of the frail, terrified anarchist. If he could only arrest that palsied, uncertain arm!

But she hurled the bomb, her hands going to her eyes as she fell upon her knees.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE THROWING OF THE BOMB.

THE scene that followed beggars all description. A score of men and horses lay writhing in the street; others crept away screaming with pain; human flesh and that of animals lay in the path of the frenzied, panic stricken holiday crowd; blood mingled with the soft mud of Regengetz circus, slimy, slippery, ugly!

Olga Platanova—there was nothing left of her! We draw a veil across the picture of Olga Platanova after the bomb left her hand. No one may look upon the quivering, shattered thing that was once a living, beautiful woman.

Down in an alley below the tower a trembling, worn team of oxen stood for a day and night, awaiting the return of a master who was never to come back to them. God rest his simple soul!

Truxton King picked himself up from the street, dazed, bewildered, but unhurt. The revolutionists had begun the assault on the paralyzed minions of the government.

He looked back toward the gory entrance to the circus. There was Marlanx, mounted and swinging a saber on high. Ahead was a mass of carriages, filled with the white faced, palsied prey from the court of Graustark. From somewhere near the spot where Olga Platanova fell came a harsh, penetrating command:

"Cut them off! Cut them off from the castle!"

It was his cue. He dashed into the street and ran toward the carriages, shouting with all his strength:

"Turn back! It is Marlanx! To the castle!"

Then it was that he saw the prince. The boy was standing on a seat on the royal coach of state, holding out his eager little hands to some one in the thick of the crowd that surged about him. He was calling some one's name, but no one could have heard him.

Truxton's straining eyes caught sight of the figure in gray that struggled forward in response to the cries and the extended hand.

"Aunt Loraine! Aunt Loraine!" He now heard the name the boy cried with all his little heart.

Two officers struck at the uncouth, desperate American as he lifted the girl from the ground and deliberately tossed her into the coach.

"Turn back!" he shouted. A horseman rode him down. He looked up as the plunging animal's hoofs clattered about his head. Vos Engo, with drawn sword, was crowding up to the carriage door, shouting words of rejoicing at sight of the girl he loved.

He caught a glimpse of her, holding the prince in her arms, her white, agonized face turned toward the mob. Distinctly he heard her cry:

"Save him! Save Truxton King!"

From the sidewalks swarmed well armed hordes of desperadoes, firing wildly into the ranks of devoted guardsmen. Truxton fled from the danger zone as fast as his strained ankle would permit him. Bullets were striking all about him.

Some one was shouting his name behind in the scurrying crowd. He turned for a single glance backward. Little Mr. Hobbs, pale as a ghost, his cap gone, his clothing torn, was panting at his elbow.

Soldiers came riding up from behind, turning to fire from their saddles into the throng of cutthroats, led by the grim old man with the bloody saber. In the center of the troop there was a flying carriage. The Duke of Perse was lying back in the seat, his face like that of a dead man.

"The prince is safe!" shouted King joyously. "They'll make it! Thank God!"

Colonel Quinnox turned in his saddle and searched out the owner of that stirring voice.

"Come!" he called.

Even as King rushed out into the roadway a horseman galloped up from the direction of the castle. He pulled his horse to his haunches almost as he was riding over the dodging American.

"Here!" shouted the newcomer, scowling down upon the young man. "Swing up here! Quick, you fool!"

It was Vos Engo, his face black with fury. Quinnox had seized the hand of Mr. Hobbs on seeing help for King and was pulling him up before him. There was nothing for Truxton to do but to accept the timely help of his rival. An instant later he was up behind him and they were off after the last of the dragoons.

"If you don't mind, count, I'll try my luck," grated the American. Holding on with one arm, he turned and fired repeatedly in the direction of the howling crowd of rascals.

"Ride to the barracks gates, Vos Engo!" commanded Colonel Quinnox. "Be prepared to admit none but the royal reserves, who are under standing orders to report there in time of need."

Over his shoulder Vos Engo hissed to his companion: "It was not idle heroics, my friend, nor philanthropy on my part. I was commanded to come and fetch you. She would never have spoken to me again if I had refused."

"She! Ah, yes, I see! She did not forget me!" cried Truxton.

"Understand, it is not for you that I risk my life."

"I understand," murmured Truxton, a wry smile on his pale lips. "You mean, she is going to pay you in some way for picking me up, eh? Well, I'll put an end to that. I'll drop off again. Then you can ride on and tell her—I wouldn't be a party to the game. Do you catch my meaning?"

"You would, eh?" said the count angrily. "I'd like to see you drop off while we're going at this"—

"I've got my pistol in the middle of your back," grated Truxton. "Slow up a bit or I'll scatter your vertebrae all over your system. Pull up!"

"As you like," cried Vos Engo. "I've done my part. Colonel Quinnox will bear witness." He began pulling his horse down. "Now you are quite free to drop off."

Less than a hundred yards behind loped a riderless horse. The dragoon who had sat the saddle was lying far back in the avenue, a bullet in his head. Hobbling to the middle of the road, the American threw up his hands and shouted briskly to the bewildered animal. Five seconds later King was in the saddle and tearing along in the wake of the retreating guard.

KING WAS IN THE SADDLE.

"We need such men as King!" cried Colonel Quinnox as he waited inside the gates for the wild rider.

General Braze, with a few of his men, bloody and heartsick, was the last of the little army to reach safety in the castle grounds.

The fortress, with all guns, stores and ammunition, was in the hands of the Iron Count and his cohorts.

Baron Dangloss had been taken prisoner with a whole platoon of fighting constables. This was the last appalling bit of news to reach the horrified, disorganized forces in the castle grounds.

A wise as well as a cruel man was Marlanx. He lost no time in issuing a manifesto to the stunned, demoralized citizens of Edelweiss. Scores of criers went through the streets during the long, wretched afternoon, announcing to the populace that Count Marlanx had established himself as dictator and military governor of the principality pending the abdication of the prince and the beginning of a new and substantial regime. All citizens were commanded to recognize the authority of the dictator.

Toward evening, after many consultations and countless reports, Marlanx removed his headquarters to the tower. He had fondly hoped to be in the castle long before this.

The cells and dungeons in the great old tower were now occupied by bruised, defeated officers of the law. Baron Jasto Dangloss, crushed in spirit and broken of body, paced the blackest and narrowest cell of them all.

At 9 o'clock on Sunday morning a small group of people gathered in the square. A meeting was soon in progress. A goods box stood over against the very spot on which Olga Platanova died. An old man began haranguing the constantly growing crowd. In the group might have been seen most members of the committee of ten.

In the midst of his harangue the hand of William Spantz was arrested in one of its most emphatic gestures.

Peter Brutus was approaching at the head of a group of aliens, all armed.

"One moment!" called out Peter Brutus, lifting his hand imperatively. The speaker ceased his mouthings. "Count Marlanx desires the immediate presence of the following citizens at his office in the tower. I shall call off the names." He began with William Spantz. The name of each of his associates in the committee of ten followed.

Ten minutes later every member of the committee of ten, except Peter Brutus, was behind lock and bar, together with their shivering associates, all of them dumbly muttering to themselves the awful sentence that Marlanx had passed upon them.

"YOU ARE TO DIE AT SUNSET."

"You are to die at sunset. Graustark still knows how to punish assassins. There is no room in Graustark for anarchy. I shall wipe it out today."

"Sir, your promise!" gasped William Spantz. "We are your friends—the true party of"—

"Enough! Do not speak again! Captain Brutus, you will send criers abroad to notify the citizens that I, Count Marlanx, have ordered the execution of the ringleaders in the plot to dynamite the prince, at sunset in the square. Away with the carrion!"

Then it was, and not till then, that the committee of ten found him out! Then it was that they came to know Peter Brutus!

The unrecognizable corpse of Olga Platanova had been buried in quicklime outside the city walls. There was something distinctly grewsome in the fact that half a dozen deep graves were dug alongside hers hours before death came to the wretches who were to occupy them.

At 3 o'clock the Iron Count coolly sent messengers to the homes of the leading merchants and bankers of the city. They, with the priests, the doctors, the municipal officers and the manufacturers, were commanded to appear before him at 5 o'clock for the purpose of discussing the welfare of the city and its people.

Marlanx stated his position clearly. He left no room for doubt in their minds. The strings were in his hands. Without hesitation he informed the leading men of the city that he was to be the Prince of Graustark.

"I will rule Graustark or destroy her. Those of you who do not expect or desire to live under my rule, which, I promise you, shall be a wise one, may leave the city for other lands," he said calmly, "just as soon as my deputies have completed the formal transfer of all your belongings to the crown treasury—all, I say, even to the minutest trifle. Permit me to add in that connection, gentlemen, the transfer will not be a prolonged affair."

They glared back at him and subsided into bitter silence.

"I am well aware that you love little Prince Robin. Now, respecting young master Robin, I have no great desire to kill him."

He waited to see the effect of this brutal announcement. His hearers stiffened, and—yes, they held their breath.

"He has one alternative—he and his lords. I trust that you, as sensible gentlemen, will find the means to convey to him your advice that he seize the opportunity I shall offer him to escape with his life. Let me interrupt myself to call to your attention the fact that I am punishing the anarchists at sunset. To resume, the boy may return to America, where he belongs. I will give him free and safe escort to the United States. If he chooses to accept my kindly terms, all well and good; if not, gentlemen, I shall starve him out or blow the castle down. It may interest you to hear that I expect to establish a new nobility in Graustark. I trust I may now be addressing at least a few of the future noble lords of Graustark. Good day, gentlemen."

At the castle the deepest gloom prevailed. It was like a nightmare to the beleaguered household, a dream from which there seemed to be no awakening. Colonel Quinnox as commander of the royal guard ruled supreme. General Braze tore off his own epaulets and presented himself to Quinnox as a soldier of the file.

Prince Robin, quite recovered from his fright, donned the uniform of a colonel of the royal dragoons, buckled on his jeweled sword and, with boyish zeal, demanded at a council of war Colonel Quinnox's reasons for not going forth to slay the rioters.

"Your highness," said the colonel bitterly, "the real army is outside the walls, not inside. We are a pitiful handful, less than 300 men all told, counting the wounded. Count Marlanx heads an army of several thousand. He"—

"He wants to get in here so's he can kill me. Is that so, Colonel Quinnox?" The prince was very pale, but quite calm.

"Oh, I wouldn't put it just that way, your"—

"Oh, I know! You can't fool me! I've always known that he wants to kill me. But how can he? Nobody can. He ought to know that. He must be awful stupid."

"We must get word to Tullis!" cried several in a breath. A dozen men volunteered to risk their lives in the attempt to find the American in the hills. Two men were chosen—by lot. They were to venture forth that very night.

"HE'S SAFE, YOUR HIGHNESS."

"My lords," said the prince as the council was on the point of dissolving, "is it all right for me to ask a question now?"

"Certainly, Robin," said the prime minister.

"Well, I'd like to know where Mr. King is."

"He's safe, your highness," said Quinnox.

"Well, you run in and tell Aunt Loraine this minute that Mr. King sends his love to her and begs her to rest easy. See if it doesn't cheer her up a bit."

At night two attempts were made by Haddan and another subaltern to leave the castle to reach Tullis, but both sorties proved failures. A day later Marlanx sent two men under a flag of truce to offer his infamous ultimatum. His offer of a safe conduct of the prince to America was refused, for the inmates of the castle knew full well the count would doom the lad to instant death if he should get him in his possession.

A single distant volley at sunset had puzzled the men on guard at the castle. They had no means of knowing that the committee of ten and its wretched friends had been shot down like dogs in the public square. Peter Brutus was in charge of the squad of executioners.

IVY FOR HOME DECORATION.

How to Grow the English and German Varieties With Ease.

For a growing green which is beautifully decorative in the home in winter there is nothing more satisfactory than ivy. There are so many artistic ways of arranging the ivy, and the English variety particularly is so hardy that it cannot fail to grow. Artists have palated it and poets sung of it—the romantic ivy green.

With a pot containing the ivy standing on a table, floor or shelf the creeping branches may be trained in any direction about the room. Have the vine clamber up the window casing, and the green and leafy screen through which you can look out upon a wintry landscape will make it seem less bleak. Stand the jar containing the ivy on a bracket shelf at one end of the mantel and let it wander, with skillful training, up over mantel and wall's, stray tendrils drooping gracefully over pictures and the like.

Ivy may be trained over the archway which divides rooms, and no portieres will be needed. There is also the more delicate German ivy, which requires gentler handling. It will grow effectively without soil. I saw one growing in a large bowl of water—the kind of glass bowl used for small aquaria. The ivy grew over the sides of the bowl, festooning itself in tangled masses of vivid green, which gave a living beauty to the whole room.—Suburban Life.

How to Clarify Rainwater.

To clarify rainwater that has turned dark and greasy looking from standing in either a cistern or barrel mix a half pound of powdered alum and a half pound of powdered borax and add to the water. The pound mixture is sufficient for fifty barrels of water. It can be duly proportioned. In a few hours the water will be clear and all sediment at the bottom.

How to Clean Spoons.

Careful women have in some cases had their silver egg spoons dipped in gold, so that the stains from eggs will not have to be fought against. They do not realize that a single application of fine table salt on a wet cloth will take off any stain and leave the silver entirely bright. After this it should be washed in warm water and pure soap.

They shall have charge of the working and repair of all roads under their supervision and may contract, build or repair any culvert or bridge that shall not exceed in cost the sum of twenty dollars; they may hire and pay for out of funds in their hands such men and teams as shall be necessary for the proper working of their roads. Each of the supervisors shall do or cause to be done all the regular repairs upon the roads and bridges under contract as shall be made between the County Commissioners and such supervisors on or before the first day of July following his appointment, and shall then render an itemized statement under oath to the Board of County Commissioners setting forth the number of men and teams employed with the number of days for each and the amounts paid to each; (his own account being given seperately) the total amount received by him or placed to his credit and the amount expended. Each of the supervisors shall be required to set aside ten per cent of all the moneys coming into their hands for general road repair; this money so set aside shall be used only for the unforeseen and accidental repairs of roads or bridges and for the draining of roads, opening of breakers and culverts after the roads have been worked in the spring season. On or before January 1st following the appointment of supervisors a final report shall be made to the Board of County Commissioners and balance on hand, if there be any, shall be refunded and the bond released.

205. The Board of County Commissioners shall annually levy upon the taxable basis of the county such an amount as they may deem necessary for the construction, maintenance and repairs of roads and bridges.

206F. In case the vote in accordance with preceding Section 206E shall be "for proposition of levy for roads" then the Board of County Commissioners shall make the extra levy for roads or bridges upon the taxable basis of the district so voting and shall place the funds when collected in the hands of the County Treasurer to the credit of the road supervisors of that district to be worked out by them under direction of the County Commissioners. But if the vote be "against proposition of levy for roads" then the County Commissioners shall not levy an extra amount for roads in that district.

CHAPTER 187.

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of Garrett county a sum of money out of the State School Tax.

WHEREAS, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, especially upon Garrett county of the State School Tax, and the inability without larger increase of County Taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett county, the largest county in the State in area, as to render school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in more central parts of the State; and

WHEREAS, It has been unanimously recommended by the State Board of Education that such sum of money should be paid out of the State School Fund to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county; therefore

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and required to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of Garrett County School Board for the sum of Four Thousand Dollars per annum for two years out of the proceeds of the State School Tax before making apportionment thereof; provided, however, that no portion of said Four Thousand Dollars per annum shall be used for any other purpose than for salaries and ordinary running expenses of said schools.

MARK TWAIN, KING OF HUMOR.

Comprehensive Estimate of America's Late Literary Genius.

Mark Twain is dead!

The king is dead—long live the king. But there is no heir, either apparent or presumptive. The throne of humor, whose kingdom was the world, is empty. The scepter that swayed the universal heart—the pen—lies idle at last. The empire of laughter and also of tears this king of the writing craft founded and which he fostered for nearly fifty years is become as whirling dust in the abyss of the things that were. Only there remains the heritage of the dead ruler's kindly philosophy, his droll fun, his quips and jestings and his pathos.

Mark Twain became before he died the most famous man on earth. He was not merely a man; he was an institution. He was a sort of neighborhood settlement of good cheer, with many branches located in the oases as in the waste places, where admission and refreshment were free to all. Millions—how many millions is beyond estimating—came and partook of his wine of optimism and stayed for supper. His fame was and is universal. Though an American born, a native of Missouri, he belonged to all lands. He had traveled in all lands and lived in most of them. He had more near-permanent homes perhaps than any other man of his day. Nearly always he was a wanderer, sometimes from necessity, more frequently from choice. The world was his plaything, and he was not content without remapping for himself the entire surface of the big ball.

He was a man of most striking appearance—the kind that attracts attention anywhere in a crowd and causes others to take a second look. In his later years his shock—no, his crown—of hair, perfectly white and glossy like fine spun silk, became his trademark of recognition by strangers wherever he went. I have seen a woman who never before saw Mark Twain pick him out without opera glasses, though she sat in the top gallery of Carnegie hall and he occupied a lower box near the stage, and the great house was crowded. He had no doubles as to personal appearance—there was only one of him.

And there was only one of Mark Twain as a literary syndicate. It has become the fashion to describe him as the great American humorist. This undoubtedly he was, but he was more. His appreciation of Joan of Arc, first published anonymously, is accepted by critics of acumen as one of the most refined works in the serious literature of the nineteenth century. The book won its way before Mark Twain admitted its paternity. While he was writing the Joan classic he worked, time and time about, on that amazing funny masterpiece, "Pudd'nhead Wilson." He simply couldn't be serious altogether for a stated period.

Nor must we take it for granted that Mark Twain, summing up his career as a writer, ever was altogether funny. He never was. He was one of the closest observers of human nature and institutions, places and things, that ever lived. Even in his most humorous books we find that he has made accurate transcripts of the things which impressed him. Though he exaggerated, a privilege belonging to his profession, one can read between the lines the inhering truth. He was an inveterate foe to shams of every sort, and apparently knew his highest happiness when with droll sarcasm he punctured a popular fraud with his pen.

But Mark Twain often wrote books just because he had the story to tell. The tale of "Tom Sawyer" is one of these, and the "Huckleberry Finn" book is another. Each of these is true to life—to boy life. Rudyard Kipling is said to have remarked that he would rather be the author of "Tom Sawyer" than of all of his own works.

"The Innocents Abroad," of course, always will be associated with Mark Twain's name as one of his most characteristic books, but that may be because it was his first big work and won for him the fame and the fortune which enabled him to write what he pleased.

Mark Twain's name was Samuel Langhorne Clemens, but it was used chiefly as a vessel whereon universities hung LL. D. handles. He was "Dr. Clemens" three times over, but the distinction never spoiled him. With no school learning save such as he gained from a few years attendance at the village school in Hannibal, Mo., his scholastic titles were earned by literary work which the whole world accepted.

Mark Twain was intensely democratic. He was easily approachable, and he never emitted any bear's growl or lion's roar. Even the humblest person was made to feel at home in his presence. Shrinking reporters sent to interview him quit their shrinking and puffed up when they found him as easy to interview as the aspiring author of the poem published in the lowest corner of the town weekly. He could talk on any topic, even the weather, and glorify it with his humor. If the insistent attention bestowed upon him was distasteful to him he did not permit the fact to be known. Mark Twain was one of the politest men I ever know. He was considerate of the feelings of others, and therein lies the soul of politeness. Those obsessed by the notion that it was impossible for Mark Twain to open his mouth without saying something funny should revise their impressions of him. In the course of his last visit to his boyhood home in the summer of 1902 he said solemn things in the most dignified manner possible. Several times he was so deeply touched by the pathos of the occasion, his meeting with boyhood friends then grown old like himself, his visit to the graves of his parents, that his voice quavered and broke, and the inevitable tears trickled down his face. He was overcome with emotion, conquored by tender sentiment, and those of us whose privilege it was to observe him upon these occasions went away with a new notion as to Mark Twain. He was not the mere jester, not buffoon who sees in life only the guffaws and works assiduously to evoke them in boisterous riot of laughter. He was the man of feeling, the tender hearted old fellow, the owner of a heart as gentle as any that ever beat.

Mark Twain's life was not a rose bed. He walked no primrose path. He encountered stumbling places and had steep hills of difficulty to climb. And he had sorrows that bit and griefs that bludgeoned. At the close of his life, so far as relatives were concerned, he was almost alone in the world.

His best loved daughter, Susy, died in America when he was in Europe. His story of her death in his autobiography, is a piece of pathos seldom surpassed. His wife, who was Miss Oliva Langdon of Elmira, N. Y., his companion for many years, died in Italy after vain wanderings for the restoration of her health. He built a big country home near Redding, Conn., and settled down to continuing growing old as gracefully as he could with his two remaining daughters, Clara and Jean. In November of 1909 Clara married a foreigner and went abroad to live. Jean was left with him. On the day before Christmas with a Christmas tree for her father trimmed by her own hands in one of the rooms, Jean Clemens was found dead in her bathtub, having been seized with an epilepitc fit and drowned.

When Mark Twain was fifty years old and worth about $1,000,000 a publishing firm in which he was a partner became bankrupt. He lost his fortune and was involved heavily in debt. He set to work, made a lecturing and writing tour around the world and in ten years had paid off his indebtedness and again was ahead of the wolf. By that time he had become so universally famous that his works commanded its own price. Thereafter he could write or rest as he chose, and he chose to write much.

Mark Twain's writing life began in his pilot days and continued up to his death—half a century of devotion to the art of making people nappy. For several years he was simply a hardworking newspaper reporter and special correspondent, searching for gold in Nevada and California between jobs at journalism which grubstaked him for prospecting. But he found his purest and most paying streak of ore when in 1867 he wrote "The jumping Frog of Calaveras County." That story, picked up in a mining camp, was his first promising literary prospect.

He had struck the mother lode.

Printer, pilot, reporter, humorist, novelist, philosopher—he is safely embalmed to enduring fame.

COMET NEARS US FAST

Will Appear as Magnificent Object in a Few Weeks.

In an exhaustive article on Halley's comet that appeared in the New York Sun last Sunday, Prof. G. A. Mitchell, of Columbia University, tells some interesting things of this monster of the sky.

It is now over seven months since the comet was picked up on a photographic plate and during this interval it has been coming closer and closer to the sun. In a short time it will appear as a magnificent object in our skies.

Throughout the ages of the world's past history men have been prone to look for signs and wonders in the sky and always to them a comet has been a thing to be regarded with fear and dread. To such an extent is this true today that the English Government, to avoid consternation and panic among its primitive dependents in Africa, has announced by proclamation the appearance of Halley's comet.

The younger generation has not been favored with the sight of a comet, for the last brilliant comet was that of 1882, thus the appearance of Halley's comet is of more than usual interest, especially to astronomers for it is the first of these wanderers which has revisited the earth according to calculation; it is to present the unusual phenomenon of crossing the face of the sun, and we are to be swept through its tail.

Halley, the Englishman who first predicted the return of the comet of which we speak, died before his prophecy was fulfilled. Another scientist, with the aid of subsequent calculations, verified the assumption of Halley and named a date when the comet would be closest to the sun He was one month astray in his calculation as the comet was one month ahead of time in its journey of seventy-five years. Prof. Mitchell remarks that this "would be in the same ratio as if the Twentieth Century Limited on a trip from Chicago would pull into New York just one minute and twelve seconds away from schedule."

From the verification of these predictions was laid the foundation of exact astronomy. At the present time with the refinements of modern science it is possible to trace the records of Halley's comet back without a break to the year 11 B. C. These records are absolutely authentic. The first recorded appearance of the wonder was in 240 B. C. Thus for 2,000 years this same comet has been revisiting the earth at periodic intervals. "For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday."

On Tuesday night at 11 o'clock this comet may be said to have finished another lap in its journey for at that time it turned on its course and started back on its long journey out into the depth of space, where no man can follow it even with the most powerful telescope. Away out through space beyond the orbit of the most distant of discovered planets it will journey, again turn in its course and return as a spectacle to those unborn.

As the earth and comet approach each other the comet enormously increases in brightness, at first slowly, then quicker and quicker. On May 1st the comet will be fully twice as bright as it is today; on May 4th it will be three times and on May 7th four times as bright. On May 19th, when at its brightest, it will be thirty-five times more brilliant than it is today.

It will remain a morning object, rising before the sun till May 18. To find the comet before that date look to the east toward the point where the sun is to rise. The best time to see it will be a little over an hour before sunrise. The comet will rise tail first, the tail pointing directly away from the sun.

The best time to see the comet in the morning will be from May 10th to May 16th, when on the later date it will be twenty times as bright as it was last Sunday morning. After May 16th the comet draws in toward the sun quickly, and on the evening of May 18th it passes between us and the sun, and after that date it will be in the evening sky, setting after the sun. On May 19th in will be at its brightest and can be seen in the west just after sundown.

For the next few days thereafter the comet should present magnificent spectacle in the evening sky, with a tail pointing up from the horizon stretching one-third of the distance to the zenith. It will vanish to the unaided eye before July 1st.

From recent measurements head of the comet is 200,000 miles across and on February 14th its tail was 15,000,000 miles long. Today its tail is at least double that lenght.

"If the dimensions of comets are large," says Prof. Mitchell, "their weight is very small. It has been said that if properly compressed a comet could be carried in a man's coat pocket. This statement, however, is poobably much exaggerated."

In speaking of its tail Prof. Mitchell says, "the comet's tail is not like smoke left behind by a locomotive, for after the comet passes the sun the tail goes ahead of the comet. Thus it is readily seen that the tail is not a physical appendage that is firmly fixed to the comet's head. So quickly does the tail frisk around when the comet rounds the sun that we can assume only that the tail is continuously formed anew, a new tail not every day but every second.

"The old material that had formed the tail yesterday is left behind in space. As a result of this continuous ejection of matter comets must of necessity be continuously growing smaller; nevertheless we have records of Halley's comet for more than 2000 years at twenty-nine returns to visit the sun, and still it continues to shine apparently with undimmed lustre. Indeed the wonders of the heavens are marvelous!"

CARE OF THE EYES.

How to Prevent a Strain and Relieve Inflammation by Simple Methods.

Persons who use their eyes constantly should observe some simple rules for preventing strain. For instance, at the end of a long day in an office, if the optics are bathed with a cooling application, the brightness as well as sight may be maintained. For such a bath boracic acid is invaluable. So is a weak solution of salt. Campher water will draw out a smarting pain many times.

Five cents' worth of boracic acid will last for weeks, and the powder may be carried with little trouble. To use as much as might go on the point of the blade of a small penknife is put into two tablespoonfuls of water. The powder floats for some time in tiny lumps, but later is absorbed and disappears.

If one has an eyeglass the liquefied borax is poured into it. This glass, which is an oval cup, so shaped that it goes over the eye, close against the skin, is held up, the head bent until the eye is over the liquid, and then the lid is opened and closed in the bath. There will be no smarting sensation, and the under part of the lids and the ball are flushed with a cooling application that will draw out any slight inflammation.

The bath may last for a minute, washing first one eye and then the other eye before returning to give the first another plunge. The same liquid may be used more than once, but so cheap is it that there can be no hesitation in throwing it away. No two persons should ever use the same solution, for serious eye disease may be transmitted in this way. If the eyes ache during the day this treatment, which takes but a moment to apply, will relieve them.

Camphor water, being a little stronger, is used more sparingly and is likely to cause a slight smarting. Nevertheless it is a gentle tonic that can do no harm. To use a couple of drops are put into the eyes by means of a medicine dropper. This may be done two or three times a day when there is such inflammation. Boracic acid dissolved in it in the same proportion as in plain water increases the beneficial properties.

Salt and water is an old fashioned remedy which should be used frequently. This mixture should be strong enough to cause the merest suggestion of a smart, but it must not be painful. If one has no eye cup any small cup or glass may be substituted and the eye winked in the bath. Done morning and night, this is strengthening in effect.

Cloths wrung out in hot water and laid over the eyes form one of the best methods of treatment for inflamed eyes. To take this application one must lie down, so the fomentations may be placed on as hot as can be borne, changing them frequently.

How to Wash Silk Gloves.

Silk gloves should be washed in warm water and with pure white soap and should then be rinsed in several clear waters of the same temperature. Then, instead of hanging them up to dry by the wrists, hang them up by the tips of the fingers. To do this pin each finger out on a cloth and hang up the cloth with the arms of the gloves hanging down. This lets the water run into the parts of the gloves that receive the least wear and lets the tips, which receive the most wear, dry the quickest.

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1910.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE OF FRANCE.

At the Sorbonne in Paris Saturday Mr. Roosevelt delivered the first of the three lectures he is to deliver in Europe. He took for his subject "Citizenship in a Republic," a theme upon which, in the judgment of the civilized world today, he speaks with as high authority as any living philosopher, statesman or priest. With much that the address contained we in this country are already familiar. Ever since Mr. Roosevelt began his great crusade for a higher code of ethics on the part of the individual he has preached upon the same theme and almost in the same words. He has been charged with dealing in platitudes, and this will be treated by many as a tiresome reiteration of views grown stale. But if Mr. Roosevelt has any mission in this life it has been along the line which was expressed again to the splendid audience that greeted him Saturday in these words:

Today I shall speak to you on the subject of individual citizenship, the one subject of vital importance to you, my hearers, and to me and my countrymen, because you and we are citizens of great democratic republics. A democratic republic such as each of ours—an effort to realize in its full sense government by, of and for the people—represents the most gigantic of all possible social experiments, the one fraught with greatest possibilities alike for good and for evil. The success of republics like yours and like ours means the glory, and our failure the despair, of mankind; and for you and for us the question of the quality of the individual citizen is supreme.

This was the central thought of his lecture, and he handled it in a masterly way, giving to Europe, we believe, a new idea of the man, of his enthusiasm for the great cause which has engaged him almost exclusively in the last eight years and which he has done so much to make the whole world realize is the noblest work which can engage the attention of man.

The ideas he inculcates are old—old as the Ten Commandments. The arguments he presses home are old—old as the Book of Moses. But if a man has a mission, shall he not preach? And if a man has aroused the dormant conscience of his own nation to fuller appreciation of what a higher standard of life means in the way of individual sacrifice, shall he not carry the same message to other and alien races when occasion prompts?

THE APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE

The Republican party, as represented in both branches of Congress, except for a few extremists, is lined up solidly behind the policies of President Taft. And, when the 1910 Congressional campaign warms up, and the appeal to the people is fairly formulated and presented, it will soon appear that the strong and steadfast attitude of the President for the carrying out of platform promises and for the realization of those policies to which his party stands committed, will be a bulwark of strength. This is upon the reasonable assumption that the promises will be carried out and the policies be put in way of realization.

If the expectation that the Republican party will be in control of the next Congress were based on nothing else than a restful confidence that the Democratic managers in every doubtful Congressional district will see to it that the act of hari kari is duly performed, the probabilities of Republican control would be preponderantly large. It is only necessary to point to the fact that Tom Taggart has thus early proposed himself as a candidate for the United States Senate, from Indiana, to indicate how the undesirables of the Democracy will make a tumultuous rush for the spoils just of soon as they see the least glimmer of hope that, through Republican dissentions or disaffections they have the ghost of a show of winning. "These innocents," as The New York Sun terms them, "red-mouthed and unbridled, but innocents nevertheless," have their thoughts so intently fixed upon getting there that they fail entirely to understand that their "wild and disheveled race for the feeding trough" will certainly rivet attention and arouse disgust.

When the Congressional campaign really opens, when appeal shall be made to the people upon the record of accomplished results and upon the traditional policies for which the Republican party stands and against the policies for which the Democratic party has stood and from which it cannot escape this side the grave, there will not be signs of vacillating in the matter of approving the Republican record, even in the so-called doubtful districts. The first regular session of the Sixty-first Congress has not yet adjourned; its record is not yet in form to be discussed. But certain measures have been formulated which accord with Republican platform promises and represent the policies of President Taft's administration. If these measures do not pass, their failure will be mainly chargeable to the filibustering tactics of the Democrats. The minorities in both branches have been obstructing and delaying the progress of the Interstate Commerce Bill, with the very apparent purpose of staving off consideration of other administration measures in the hope of compelling adjournment with these bills still on the schedules. When the Congressional campaign just ahead warms up to the point where popular attention becomes interested in individual records, responsibility for the doings and misdoings of the Sixty-first Congress will be placed where it belongs.

Even those features of the new tariff which are most generally criticised, when the facts are sifted, will in most instances be traced to Democratic or insurgent obstinacy. It is not forgotten that the Democrats during the extra session were rank protectionists almost to a man when commodities in their own districts were concerned. Take for instance the duty on lumber: the President was urgent that lumber should be on the free list and it would have been admitted without a tax, but for the votes of the Democrats in opposition. The insurgents, too, who are attacking the Payne tariff and thus lending encouragement to the "wild and disheveled chase" of the Democracy, will be obliged to shoulder their due responsibilities. The work of the extra session, as well as the record of the regular session, will undoubtedly be thoroughly sifted during the approaching Congressional campaign. And the administration Republicans will have nothing to fear from this sifting. As for the divergencies that may have developed in the Republican party, it is a safe guess that the questions at issue in every Congressional district will be adjusted before nominees are placed in the field. The appeal to the people will be made in every instance by a united party and upon a record which will win the control of the Sixty-second Congress.

James Stephens is preparing to move on the farm known as the Asa Durst property, three miles west of Jennings, where he expects to be employed by Jennings Bros.

The oyster supper given at Kenard Broadwater's Thursday night in honor of their son, Sheridan, was a very enjoyable occasion. It was his twentieth anniversary. He was the recipient of several beautiful presents.

Several people from here attended the funeral of Colonel Ross, who was buried in Lonaconing Sunday.

Lewis Broadwater, better known as the twin brother, spent part of last week at John Mowbray's in Barton.

James Hummel and Carrie Warnick, of Barton, passed through our town Saturday en route to his home at Wolf Swamp, where Miss Warnick will spend several months, being employed as seamstress.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The Leading Summer Resot Preparing for Visitors.

The delightful March weather and the splendid April showers have made the Park a place of great beauty. The trees are putting on their summer dress; the ground is covered with a bright green sod; men and boys are cleaning and burning leaves from cottage lots; carpenters, painters and paper hangers are busy preparing the vacation homes for the refugees from the summer heat; the boarding houses and hotels are preparing for their coming guests; rooms have been reserved by a number of persons, and others are inquiring about board; attractive booklets and leaflets are going here and there, telling about a good place to board; letters are coming in, inquiring about rental property, and houses have been rented; the Association management is getting their printed matter announcing the attractions of the season, ready for circulation; our merchants are stocking up so as to be ready to supply the wants of their patrons; the railroad company is making things attractive about their premises. Already several summer families have moved into their rented cottages and are at home for the next six months in this paradise of the mountains.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. L. T. Carr, of Fairmont, is having his cottage raised about 18 inches, will have a rock foundation put under the building, and will erect an addition in the rear of the house.

Judge Elliott, of Baltimore, has been here for nearly a week looking after improvements which he is making to his home, which when completed will be a cheerful, comfortable and enjoyable place for a summer outing.

The Mulford cottage, now owned by Mrs. M. E. Pierce, of New York City, has been enlarged by an additional room and bath room, and a porch over the kitchen.

Mr. L. T. Yoder, of Pittsburg, Pa., will put a two room addition to his E street property, and probably a four room addition to his I street house.

Mrs. H. W. Armstrong, of Washington, D. C., was here last week, and arranged to have some improvements made to her summer home. C. M. Rathbun Sons Co. will do the work.

PAINTING.

The Messrs. Hipsley have the contracts to paint the properties owned by Mr. R. T. Miller, Mrs. Capt. Pierce, Mrs. Casteele, Mrs. H. W. Armstrong, M. M. Schrock, and the Bates cottage. They have just finished painting Rev. J. S. Stone's cottage.

Just a short time ago Mr. D. A. Ritchie, of Fairmont, had his cottage in Cozy Row painted and a bath room outfit put in. He has now a desirable home in which to spend his vacation.

Mr. U. G. Ford has the contract to paint "Allen-Hurst," on I street, and the S. L. Allen cottage on H street. He will also paint Mr. K. V. Hardy's home. He has the contract to paper the interior of several cottages, having received one shipment of over 400 rolls of wall paper.

PROPERTIES RENTED.

Mrs. E. R. Davis, of Clarksburg, will occupy Mrs. Hardy's cottage, on M street, and Mrs. Hardy will move to "Beulah" cottage. Miss Delphia Hansford will have charge of Maryland Inn. Mrs. Annan and daughters, of St. Louis, will return to the "Mary" cottage. Mrs. J. W. Edwards, of Washington, D. C., has rented the Conner cottage. Mr. L. F. King, of Pittsburg, Pa., will spend the summer in Talson cottage No. 1, and the Misses Hamill in No. 2. Miss Etta Springer, of California, Pa., and Mrs. Jaynes, of Fairmont, W. Va., are now "at home" in the Yoder E street cottage. Mr. Owen, of Clarksburg, has rented the Sperry cottage. Mr. Will Daugherty and family, of Bellaire, O., will live on Cozy Row. John D. Hayden and wife will in a few days move into the cozy Vance cottage, on H street, and Carl Willett and wife will move into the Waugh cottage. Mrs. Bassel, of Parkersburg, will return to the Davis cottage on G street. Mrs. John S. Jenkins, of Norfolk, Va., will again occupy the Sheets cottage on F street. Mr. John Hipsley and wife are "at home" in the Bates cottage.

W. C. Dunnington, who knows how to run a hotel, will have charge of the Mt. Lake Hotel and Hotel Chautauqua, and he and his family are "on the ground" preparing for a great season. The Mount Washington Home, which has been closed for years, will be opened this summer by Mr. James Anderson. Mrs. L. R. Biggs, of Pennsylvania, will keep boarders in the Enlow house on F street. The Virginia Homes on I street will be under the management of Mrs. A. R. Sperry, which means a well filled house and pleased patrons.

About one-third (70) of the cottages in the Park are now occupied, nine-tenths of them by all year residents.

A FEW CHANGES.

Charley Martin has sold his baggage-express business to C. Crane. Mr. Martin is clerking in P. T. Garthright's store.

Messrs. Welch & Callis are the successors of Mr. Harrison Arnold. They are active young men and mean to push their business.

Mr. Henry Felty, who for so many years supplied the Park people with the many things needed, has sold out to Messrs. Wilson & Barnard, two young men deserving great success.

The Park Lunch Stand, in Chautauqua Grove, will this year be under the control of the Terra Alta Candy Co. We will miss the accommodating Oakland baker who furnished so many good things to his patrons last season.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

We will not have a new postoffice building this summer.

We may not have natural gas for cooking or illuminating purposes.

We will not have the much wanted municipality, so vigorously fought for.

A meeting of the elders of the German Baptist church of this county was held at the court house in Oakland last Friday at which the following gentlemen were present: Revs. David Hostetler, Samuel A. Miller and James Beeghly, of Accident; Isaac W. Abernathy, of near Wilson, and W. Taylor Sines, of near Oakland. Many matters pertaining to the welfare of the church were under discussion and some vexatious questions were settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

Last Saturday a crowd of some ten or more Italiains employed on road construction work north of Oakland, attempted to leave their camp without settling with the commissary and as a result when they reached Oakland they were arrested under the landlord's act making it a crime to "skip" a board bill. The men were placed in jail and later in the day a hearing was accorded them by Justice Teats when a settlement of the differences between the commissary agent and the men was arrived at and the men were discharged from custody and returned to their work on the road.

ANOTHER REVOLUTION

Has just taken place and, as usual, we find that one of our South American Republics has come to the front with another leader.

We always learn from a Revolution of this kind that someone is dissatisfied with existing conditions and wants to remove the cause of such dissatisfaction. When peaceful means fail to accomplish this purpose, war inevitably is the result, and it usually means war to the finish.

While this has been going on "ANOTHER REVOLUTION" in the industrial world has taken place; and while there has been no blood shed, the results have been far more reaching and beneficial to every farmer, mechanic and business man in the country.

Mark Twain said that the American public wants to be fooled once, but when it is repeatedly tried there is sure to be trouble.

The people of this country insist on keeping up-to-date and having every labor saving and money making device that capital and genius can produce. The gasoline water-cooled engine came to relieve all the ills of over-worked mankind but it was built in such a cumbersome style, with many intricate parts that the expense of keeping it in repair was greater than the original cost.

The American Farmer and Mechanic refused to have such a dirt relief thrust upon them, and as a result, the greatest revolution of the century took place. The "NEW WAY" MOTOR COMPANY, of Lansing, Michigan, had been for years experimenting on and perfecting an Air-Cooled engine that could be run with gas, gasoline, alcohol or distillate with equally good results.

They discontinued entirely using water to cool the cylinder and built the first successful air-cooled engine. They threw out all the unnecessary parts and intricate springs, etc., always found on water-cooled engines and perfected a 3½ H. P. engine that two men can pick up and carry around, and anyone can start and run without any mechanical experience.

For the farmer's use, these engines are built in sizes of 2½, 3½, 6 and 7 H. P. The general design is so unlike that of any other engine on the market that it proves to be entirely a "NEW WAY" for delivering power.

This "NEW WAY" is so popular with the trade the whole country over that the "NEW WAY" Engines are universally declared to be not only the newest but the best engines ever built.

The construction is the simplest, the material the best, the finish the most durable, the power the greatest, the lasting qualities prove the highest, and quality considered, the price is the lowest ever heard of.

Every perfect article, by reason of its perfection, always has a crowd of imitators, and the "NEW WAY" has been so successful everywhere that others have tried to imitate it either in style or method of construction.

Every purchaser should insist on having nothing but the "NEW WAY" as he is always sure to get the very best value for his hard earned money. The "NEW WAY" engine is so perfectly constructed that it can be used anywhere, at any time, in any weather or climate, and under any conditions with perfect service.

It will run the farmer's cream separator, pump his water, churn his butter, irrigate his land, spray his trees, grind his feed, run his threshing machine, cut his wood, do his washing, furnish his electric light; in fact do anything where stationary or portable power can be used.

This REVOLUTION in the industrial world has been so successfully carried on that the demand for "NEW WAY" engines has always exceeded the supply. We are very glad to advise that E. G. Naylor has secured the agency for the "NEW WAY" Air-Cooled Engines and can supply all his customers with them from his stock. They are now on display at his shop and any one who intends to purchase an engine now or in the future will find that it will pay him to call on Mr. Naylor and see this engine demonstated.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The Upper Room at Jerusalem

"He Will Show You a Large Upper Room; There Make Ready For Us" (Mark xiv, 15)

Jerusalem, April 24.—My friends, we meet today for the worship of God in traditionally one of the most renowned meeting places in the whole earth. Tradition has it that this is the same "upper room" which was owned by one friendly to our Lord and his disciples and who granted it as their meeting place on several occasions most intimately associated with the inauguration of Christianity. Tradition also has it that this is the room mentioned by St. Mark in our text, where the disciples with the Lord partook of the last Jewish Passover Supper, after which Jesus instituted the Eucharist or Lord's Supper as an antitypical memorial, taking the place of the Passover to all who accept Jesus as the Passover Lamb—"The Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i, 29); "Christ our Passover is slain, therefore let us keep the feast" (I Corinthians v, 7, 8).

Tradition assures us that this is the same room mentioned in the Book of Acts (i, 13) as the place where the Apostles resided and assembled for worship during the ten days following the Lord's ascension—the same "upper room," therefore, in which was manifested the acceptance of all the consecrated followers of Jesus into Covenant relationship with God as "members of the Body of Christ, which is the Church." Of course, our permission to use this room for a public service today was obtained only by prearrangement with those having it in charge. True, traditions are not always reliable. Surely, in almost every other part of the world it would be absurd to think of the preservation of the identity of a house like this for more than eighteen centuries. But here we have most peculiar conditions. The inhabitants of this land seem to have been content to leave things just as they found them from generation to generation, merely making such slight repairs as were from time to time found necessary. Here visitors come, look and depart, filled with a sacred awe, and have done so for centuries, and the inhabitants, each intent upon his own business, have ignored this in a manner hardly imaginable by Europeans. It is possible therefore that tradition in this case and in other instances hereabouts, has located correctly, just as in Rome the prison in which Paul was confined is indicated by tradition with apparent accuracy.

Christ Our Passover.

We are favored not only in respect to the use of the room, but additionally in respect to the time of our visit and our use of it. This, according to Jewish reckoning, is the first day of Passover Week—it began last evening at 6 o'clock. The three hours preceding that marked the time of our Lord's death and the begging by Joseph of Arimathea for the privilege of burying his body in his new tomb and the hasty taking of our Lord from the cross and getting him only partially embalmed and the tomb closed and sealed before 6 o'clock—this day beginning at 6 o'clock being amongst the Jews, as the Apostle declared, an "high day," a Sabbath day of special sacredness as the beginning of the Passover Feast-Week.

As we look back to that memorable occasion we can sympathize with the Apostles and early believers in the blighting of all of their hopes by the apparent failure of Jesus to make good his claim of Messiahship. We can imagine better than we can describe their dejection, their disappointment. On the next day, corresponding to to-morrow, the two with whom Jesus met on the way to Emmaus said sadly, "We had trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel" (Luke xxiv, 21).

They had hoped that his miracles, corroborating his teaching, when he "spake as never man spake," were evidences that he was the Messiah. They had built their hopes, as Jews, that now finally God's promises to their nation would be fulfilled—that Israel should be exalted in the earth in name and fame and power and authority to bless and to instruct "all the families of the earth." They had hoped that Messiah would be the great King under whose beneficent reign, as the great Mediator between God and men, the long-promised blessing would come to the earth. They had hoped also for a personal share with him in the glories of his Kingdom, according to his own words—"Ye shall sit with me on twelve thrones, judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matthew xix, 28). His death as a malefactor, as a blasphemer against God, seemed to cast a shadow over every hope and to leave them not only desolate in heart themselves, but despised by their neighbors as deceived fanatics. This is the anniversary, dear friends, of a day that was very sad to our brethren of 1877 years ago.

"Moses and All the Prophets."

How different is our attitude of mind that we are able to see, to praise God and to rejoice that Jesus died; that he suffered, "the Just for the unjust," that his death might constitute the Ransom-Price for Adam and all his race. This light upon the sufferings of Christ began to shine into the hearts of the Apostles on the day of our Lord's resurrection, corresponding to to-morrow. The oil for that light lay hidden in the words of Moses and all the Prophets of Israel. But it was necessary that our Lord, having risen from the dead to be the great antitypical High Priest, should trim the lamp of Divine Truth that the light might shine out to all of his people, all of his "members," all of the "Royal Priesthood," all who are in the consecrated condition of heart, symbolically represented by the "holy" of Israel's Tabernacle.

Mark how gently and how wisely the Lord permitted the light to shine in gradually upon his faithful few. The eyes of their understanding must not be blinded by an instantaneous flash. Gradually, as they were able to bear it, the good tidings of his resurrection from the dead to glory, honor and immortality on the divine plane must be made known to them. The first intimations were from the women of the company who had gone with spices, after the "high day," on the morning of the third day to complete the work of embalming the Lord. They reported first, that he was gone from the sepulchre, and secondly, that they had seen some angels who told them that he was risen from the dead. And later Mary had reported that she had seen the Lord and clasped him by the feet and that he had said to her, "I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" (John xx, 17). Jesus said to tell the disciples that he would meet them in Galilee, as he had said to them before. These bewildering experiences were merely leading gradually on, preparing the disciples for the fuller knowledge of the facts.

It was the same day (corresponding to to-morrow afternoon) that the Lord overtook two of the sorrowing disciples as they walked into the country to spend the night. Here again he would not shock them and overpower them by a vision of his glorious presence such as smote down Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus, "shining above the brightness of the sun at noon-day;" on the contrary he assumed a body of flesh and traveler's clothing and talked sympathetically with the two sorrowing ones. After hearing their woes and sorrows he must have astonished them with his knowledge of the Scriptures, as well as by his sympathy, saying to them, "O foolish and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!" (Luke xxiv, 25.) They had been willing to believe something of what the Prophets had spoken—the glorious things, the happifying things pertaining to Messiah's Millennial glory. But they had been slow to believe the prophets' other testimonies to the effect that the Redeemer must be "led as a Lamb to the slaughter," must be the sin-offering, must be despised and rejected of men, must be lifted up on the cross as the antitype of the "brazen serpent," and must be raised from the dead by the power of the Father to the glory, honor and immortality of his great station as Prophet, Priest, Mediator, King, the antitype of Melchizedek, for the fulfilment to Israel and the world of all of God's great promises.

Then said Jesus, in view of these expositions, "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory?" What else should be expected? Did he not foretell his own death? And did he not foretell his own resurrection? And were you not too confused to understand his teachings to the full? Did not your minds run more to the coming glory than to what he said to you respecting the necessity that you should "watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation" and lose all your part and hope under these trying conditions? A little later, in the same day, he appeared in the "upper room," traditionally this very room—the doors being shut for fear of the Jews—barred, we may be sure, because the poor disciples felt that the envy and hatred which had led to the crucifixion of the Master might easily be transferred now to them because of their sympathy with him and their relationship to his work. Here Jesus materialized in their presence and spoke a few words. He told them that he was really present with them and that it was not merely a phantom which they saw. And then he ate with them, honeycomb and fish, as evidencing the fact that they were not being addressed by an illusion, but by a corporeal being. While they still wondered with astonishment, he proved to them that their risen Lord was no longer merely a man, but that he had experienced a change in his resurrection, so that now he was a spirit being and could go and come like the wind—appearing in a body of flesh when his purposes so demanded. He gave proof of this by vanishing out of their sight, dissolving the body of flesh and bones and the clothing as easily as he had created them and by the same Divine power.

The Pentecostal Blessing.

The glorified, resurrected Jesus remained with the infant Church for forty days, watching over their interests. On four or five occasions he appeared to them again in different forms and for the further inculcation of the great lesson that he was risen and changed, henceforth a spirit being. Then he ascended up on high to appear in the presence of God on behalf of his faithful ones first, as later on he will appear in the interest of the world. The Father's recognition of the merit of his sacrifice, applied "on our behalf," was manifested by the impartation of the holy Spirit on Pentecost day. Traditionally this same wonderful "upper room" witnessed that outpouring of Divine blessing and favor, which came only upon consecrated believers and has come upon the same class, and upon none other, from that day unto this—begetting them individually by the holy Spirit to the divine nature with its promises of glory, honor and immortality to the faithful, in association with the Lord Jesus in his Millennial Kingdom.

That blessing was a partial fulfilment of the Lord's word through the Prophet Joel, namely of that portion which says, "In those days will I pour out of my Spirit upon my servants and upon my handmaids" (Joel ii, 28). We are glad, dear friends, that what occurred at that first Pentecost and what has continued all through this Gospel Age, of Pentecostal blessing upon each individual member of the Body of Christ, is merely a foretaste of God's great favor towards Adam's race. As St. James declares (i, 18) the Church is merely "a kind of first-fruits unto God of his creatures." True, the first-fruits in this case is the very choicest—our Lord, the glorious Head and High Priest, and his saintly followers the antitypical under-priests of the Royal Priesthood. But a great blessing is yet to come, for there shall come a still greater outpouring of God's Spirit as mentioned in the same prophecy in the words, "After those days, saith the Lord, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall seek for me, and your young men shall see actually what your ancients dreamed of."

This will have its fulfillment during the Millennial Age, not that the world in general will be begotten of the holy Spirit to a spirit nature like unto the angels and like unto Christ, as in our case, but the Lord has promised to take away the stony heart and to give a heart of flesh to all the willing and obedient of mankind during that Millennial Day. In such, a right spirit shall be renewed as they become obedient to the gracious arrangements of Messiah's universal Empire and that right spirit in man, that right disposition, will be the holy Spirit—God's Spirit or disposition. It was given to man originally when he was created perfect, upright, in the image and likeness of God. It was lost by sin and displaced by a spirit of selfishness and sometimes by a spirit of devilishness. It will be the great work of that thousand years of Messiah's Kingdom to lift mankind out of sin and selfishness and death and to restore the willing and obedient to all that was lost in Adam and redeemed by the merit of the sacrifice at Calvary. With the close of the Millennial Kingdom, God shows us that all who will not have attained to the possession of his holy Spirit will be destroyed in the Second Death. Then there shall be no more sighing, nor crying, nor dying, no more sin, no more sorrow, for all the former things of sin and death shall have passed away. It will be Christ on the throne who will make all things new.

Supper In the Upper Room.

In closing we ask that in connection with what we have just said respecting this "Upper Room" and the blessings here conferred, you do not forget the special privilege which some twenty or thirty of us enjoyed in this same room on Friday evening last. We remind you afresh that that evening, after six o'clock, corresponded to the night in which our Lord with his disciples first celebrated the memorial of his own death with the loaf and with the cup, traditionally in this same "Upper Room." Incidentally we remark that the early Christian Church used this same Jewish reckoning in the annual celebration of our Lord's death and resurrection, but that, later on, the method of calculating the date was slightly modified so that this year Good Friday and Easter, according to the revised Episcopalian Calendar, occurred nearly a month ago—March 25-27. I feel sure that as long as I live I shall not forget the blessed experiences of Friday evening and its memorial celebration, in this "Upper Room," of the great event which means so much to the Church and to the world—which symbolizes the precious sacrifice of Christ and also, as the Apostle explains, symbolizes the participation of all the faithful members of Christ in his sacrifice—in the broken loaf and in the cup of which we partake antitypically. May we, dear friends, prove so faithful to our consecration Vows that we will be included by our glorious Lord amongst those who shall be counted worthy to share also his cup of joy and glory—participation in his Millennial Kingdom and his glorious work of blessing all the families of the earth!

MILLIONS LOST BY BLIZZARD IN NORTH WEST

Fruit, Vegetable and Grain Crops Destroyed By Disastrious Storm.

The most disastrious April blizzard in a decade in the Central Northwestern and Mississippi Valley States has caused a monetary loss to fruit, vegetable and grain crops estimated at $50,000,000, has wrought havoc to shipping on the Great Lakes, has caused death and untold suffering among the unprepared and has impeded railroad traffic.

The snow and wind storm, which started Thursday night, continues, and snow, varying from two to eight inches, covers the states of Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri, while temperatures are below freezing. The storm was eastward bound.

Coming, as it did, with millions of acres of fruit trees in blossoms and with spring wheat and vegetables sprouting, the storm is nothing less than a calamity. In Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin much grain will have to be reseeded. The entire fruit crop of the Central Lake region, extending westward to the foothills of the Rocky mountains and southward into Kentucky and Tennessee, is almost certainly wiped out for the season.

And, what is more, Prof. Henry J. Cox, weather forecaster for the United States in Chicago, sees no relief from the freezing weather. If any fruit has been left with germs of life in it by the frost that already have occurred, coming frosts show prospect of wiping out the last chances of a crop.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and beleve that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson V.—Second Quarter, For May 1, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xii, 1-14. Memory Verses, 11, 12—Golden Text, Matt. xii, 7—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

"At that time," when these blind hypocritical Pharisees were specially diligent in rejecting Jesus as their Messiah, notwithstanding all His mighty works and gracious words, binding upon people heavy burdens, grievous to be borne, Jesus taught the weary burdened ones that in Him they would find rest. "At that time" (xi. 25; xii, 1), when these grace-doubters (as a missionary recently writing from China called these seventh day people) were making an idol of their Sabbath, while rejecting the Lord of the Sabbath who was in their midst, Jesus wrought these good works of our lesson today to teach them that in their midst was one greater than the temple, greater than Solomon, greater than Jonah (verses 6, 41, 42). When the kingdom comes the Lord alone shall be exalted, and all the loftiness and haughtiness of men shall be bowed down (Isa. ii, 11, 17). Earth's mighty ones shall then have learned that "those who walk in pride He is able to abase" (Dan. iv, 37).

As Jesus and His disciples walked through the cornfields on a Sabbath day His disciples plucked ears of corn and did eat, rubbing them in their hands (Luke vi, 1). Then the Pharisees accuse Him and His disciples as lawbreakers, evil doers, transgressors. It seems horrible that men should accuse their Maker, but they did not know Him, because they were blinded by the god of this world, as are all today who talk against God and His word, and there are many. They pretended to be very zealous for the law, so He said: "Have ye not read what David did?" "Have ye not read in the law?" (Verses 3, 5.) Dr. Scofield says "Jesus' action is highly significant." "What David did" refers to the time of His rejection and persecution by Saul (I Sam. xxi, 6). Jesus here is not so much the rejected Saviour as the rejected King—hence the reference to David Jesus continually referred them to their own Scriptures: "Have ye never read?" "Did ye never read in the Scriptures?" (Matt. xi, 16, 42.)

Note that the Lord Jesus had full confidence in the authority of Scripture, the law, the prophets and the Psalms (Luke xxiv, 27, 44). These Pharisees professed to believe the Scriptures also, yet they fulfilled them in condemning Him. On one occasion Jesus asked not only "What is written in the law?" but "How readest thou?" (Luke x, 26.) We do well to consider whether we receive the Scriptures as they are in truth the word of God which effectually worketh in them that believe (I Thess. ii, 3). If we are wholly subject to God and to His word Jesus will not only be our Saviour, but our Lord, whom we will delight to obey, not in order that He may have mercy upon us, but because He has had mercy on us and we have learned something of the meaning of verse 7.

Even in the synagogue where the law, the prophets and the Psalms were read every Sabbath they sought to accuse Him who had given them these Scriptures and who had given to each of them life and breath and all things, yet He patiently bore with them and reasoned with them. He reminded them that they would not hesitate to save the life of a sheep, even on a Sabbath day, and asking, "How much then is a man better than a sheep?" He asserted, "It is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days." Commanding the man with the withered hand to "rise up and stand forth in the midst." He also commanded him to stretch forth his hand, which he did, and it was restored whole as the other (Luke vi, 8-1, 1). Then were they filled with madness and went out and held a council against Him, how they might destroy Him. Thus they prepare to seal His doom, as they think, but they are in reality sealing their own and fulfilling the Scriptures, which said, "They rewarded Me evil for good." "They hated Me without a cause." "They that sit in the gate speak against Me." "Many bulls have compassed Me—strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round" (Ps. xxxv, 12; lxix, 4, 12; xxii, 12).

The time had not come for them to carry out their murderous thoughts, so Jesus simply withdrew from them and continued to heal the multitudes who followed Him—many who had plagues pressing upon Him to touch Him and unclean spirits falling down before Him and crying, "Thou art the Son of God" (Mark iii, 7-12.) Our lesson chapter says that He healed them all, but charged them that they should not make Him known (15, 16), this also that the Scripture might be fulfilled as it is written in Isa. xlii, 1, 4. That we who are His witnesses may apply many Scriptures concerning Him, at least in some measure to ourselves, see in Acts xiii, 47, Paul's use of Isa. xlii, 6. That we are His chosen ones see John xv, 16; Eph. i, 4; I Pet. ii, 9. That we are in the world as lights for Him see Matt. v, 14; Phil. ii, 15. That we may manifest His life let us ever behold Him as the perfect servant in whom the Father is well pleased and trust Him to fill us with His Spirit that we too may be well pleasing to Him, possessing the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

CHAPTER 524.

AN ACT to add five additional Sections to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "Circuit Court," and providing for speedy judgment in non contested cases.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That five additional Sections be and they are hereby added to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett county," sub-title "Circuit Court," said Sections to be known as Section 29A, Section 29B, Section 29C, Section 29D and Section 29E, and to follow Section 29, which said added Sections shall read as follows:

SEC. 29A. In addition to the first day of each term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, now fixed by law the second Monday in January, February, April, May, July, August, October and November, in each year, shall be return days, and the words "return day," whenever used in this Act shall apply as well to the first day of each term as to the other return days herein enumerated.

SEC. 29B. In any suit, where the cause of action is a contract whether in writing or not, or whether expressed or implied, the plaintiff, if affidavit or affirmation be made, as hereinafter stated shall be entitled to judgment, to be entered by the Court or the Clerk thereof, on motion in writing, at any time after fifteen days from the return day to which the defendant shall have been summoned, although the defendant may have pleaded, unless such plea contains a good defense, and unless the defendant, or some one in his behalf, shall, under oath or affirmation, state that the every plea so pleaded by the defendant is true; and shall further state the amount of plaintiff's demand, if anything admitted to be due or owing, and the amount disputed; and further, that the affidavit really believes the defendant will be able, at the trial of the cause, to produce sufficient evidence to support the plea as to the portion disputed, and that he is advised by counsel to file the said plea; and such plea shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel that he is so advised that the party making such oath or affirmation, and if the copartnership or incorporation of any of the parties to the suit shall be alleged in the declaration and the affidavit to be filed therewith, as hereinafter provided; or if there shall be filed with the declaration in said cause any paper purporting to be signed by any defendant therein, the fact of alleged copartnership, incorporation and the genuineness of such signature shall be deemed to be admitted for the purpose of said cause, unless the said affidavit shall further state that the affiant knows or has good reason to believe such allegation of copartnership or incorporation to be untrue, or that the signature was not written by or by the authority of the person whose signature it purported to be. In case part of the debt or damages claimed to be admitted to be due, the plaintiff shall be entitled forthwith to an entry of judgment therefor with costs, in full satisfaction and discharge of action; provided, the amount so admitted to be due shall not be below the jurisdiction of the Court, or the defendant may pay such admitted part into Court, and then upon such proceedings shall be had as are provided by law in other cases of payment of money into Court; provided, that the Court, for good cause shown, may, by its order in writing passed at any time before judgment, extend the time for filing such plea and affidavits, which extension shall suspend until the expiration thereof the plaintiff's rights to enter judgment under this Section.

SEC. 29C. The plaintiff shall not be entitled to judgment under the preceding Sections unless at the time of bringing his action he shall file with his declaration an affidavit or affirmation, if the affiant is conscientiously scrupulous as to taking an oath, stating the time, amount the defendant is indebted to him over and above all discounts, and shall also file the bond, bill of exchange, promissory note or other writing or accounts, or a copy thereof, by which the defendant is so indebted, or if the action be founded upon a verbal or implied contract shall file a statement of the particulars of the defendant's indebtedness thereunder; if there are two or more plaintiffs, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any one of them, or if all the plaintiffs be absent from the State at the time of bringing the suit, or if the plaintiff be a corporation, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any agent of plaintiff or plaintiffs, or any of them, who will make further oath or affirmation that he has personal knowledge of the matter herein stated, and the said affidavit or affirmation may be made before any of the persons who may take an affidavit or affirmation to authorize the issuing of a foreign attachment, and may be certified in the same manner.

SEC. 29D. When any judgment by default shall be entered under any of the preceding Sections the Court may at any time thereafter assess the damages upon proof thereof without empanneling a jury to do so.

SEC. 29E. On all judgments entered in said Court there shall be a stay of execution until the return day or the first day of the term whichever shall first occur next succeeding the return day or the first day of the term at which said judgment may have been entered, with the right to the defendant to supersede the same for six months from the expiration of said stay as now allowed by law; provided, however that the Court may, on motion in writing by the plaintiff or his attorney, showing sufficient reasons therefor, allow an execution or attachment or other proper writ to be issued at any time after the entry of judgment as aforesaid and before the expiration of said stay.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect upon the first day of May in the year nineteen hundred and ten.

Approved April 8, 1910.

District No. 13.—A. Clyde Smith.

District No. 14.—William A. Sturgiss, Scott T. Jones, David E. Delawder, Charles O. Jordan, Harry O. Durst, Charles W. Reams, Charles I. Liller.

In the afternoon following the drawing of the jury Judge Henderson heard arguments for a new trial in the case of William Davis vs. Owen Mackin, which was tried and a verdict rendered at the March Term by the Court in favor of Davis.

A petition, signed by the majority members of the bar for the appointment of another examiner to take testimony in equity cases, has been presented to Judge Henderson and it is expected that the appointment will be made shortly. Mr. George W. Legge, Jr., a member of the local bar, has made application to be appointed to the position and he has the endorsement of a number of his professional associates.

The June Term docket is a long one and it is probable that the term will not be terminated under at least three weeks.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

Routine and Other Business Matters Transacted By the City Fathers.

To eliminate some items of expense and economize along all lines of municipal government is the watchword of the city authorities at present in office, was evidenced at the regular monthly meeting of that body held Monday night when the pumpman employed at night at the water works was asked to resign and a renewal of the electric lighting contract now in force, or rather which terminated with the outgoing council on April 1st, was refused because some terms of the contract were deemed unfair to the town, namely that clause making the town responsible for the expense of renewals of bulbs, the cost of extending and equipping the lines beyond the present terminals of the pole lines, etc.

A special meeting of Council was held last night when the electric lighting contract was again considered and the owner of the plant, Mr. D. E. Offutt, who agreed to the terms eliminating the clauses above referred to, submitted a second proposal when the Council made a counter proposition which will have the effect of reducing street lighting about $300 per year and be in effect for the term of five years. This counter proposition was taken under advisement by Mr. Offutt and a second meeting will occur shortly to definitely settle the matter.

A proposal for lighting the streets by natural gas was presented by representatives of the Northern Natural Gas Company. It was deemed that while the cost of gas lighting would be cheaper yet the service would not be as adequate as electric lighting.

The resignation of Arthur Lawton, day engineer at the municipal water works, was received and accepted to take effect May 15th. Mr. Lee R. Mason was elected by Council, at a salary of $50 per month to succeed Mr. Lawton. A number of applicants were after the position.

Fire Destroyed Property.

What might have resulted in a very serious woods fire occurred Monday afternoon on the Spiker farm, a mile and a half south of Oakland when fire broke out near a saw mill owned by John Foreman, which is located on the place and has been engaged for some months past in manufacturing lumber for Messrs. Hamill & Matthews, of Oakland, from timber owned by this firm. The fire had gained considerable headway and was rapidly approaching the mill when a number of men from town went to the scene and by earnest work succeeded in saving the property, not, however, until the fire had burned a car load or more of ties and had caught among some lumber stacked nearby. The ties burned belonged to Wallace Bowser.

FREDERICK, TIRED, WANTS NEW MAN

Republicans of Rock Ribbed County Wants Change in Congressional Situation.

The following dispatch from Frederick appeared in the Baltimore Sun Sunday:

Conditions are assuming shape in the Sixth district for a hot fight over the nomination of a candidate to succeed Col. George A. Pearre. Antagonism to the present Congressman has been brewing for some time, and it let out a bit at the state central committee meeting in Baltimore Wednesday, when the anti-Pearre forces practically named the date for the primaries and convention and forced the selection of Frederick instead of Cumberland as a place for holding the nominating convention.

Frederick county is against Colonel Pearre. It is said the same feeling prevails in Washington county, and a contest in which the anti-Pearre forces claim they will handily win is on in Montgomery county. Allegany and Garrett counties are for him.

The attitude of Colonel Pearre toward the Frederick members of the state central committee at the meeting in Baltimore has been widely commented upon. While it is likely that he knew beforehand that this county was not friendly to him in his fight for renomination, his entire absence of cordialty which has heretofore characterized his manner toward the leaders in this county was striking. For 12 years Frederick county has supported him staunchly in primaries, at the convention and in the campaigns, and when his own county gave a majority against him two years ago sufficient to elect the Democratic nominee Frederick county, with its 550 majority, saved his seat in Congress.

Leaders who congratulated him upon his victory, although won by a narrow margin, remember keenly his reply upbraiding the party and party workers for not giving him a larger majority. Some of his remarks were taken as personal rebukes, while others were not seriously taken, it being believed that they were made in haste and without consideration.

A well known party man who said he had been in every primary, convention and campaign for Colonel Pearre except the first, when he favored the nomination of Mr. Urner, stated that Colonel Pearre had written to him after the election two years ago hinting party treachery. At the Baltimore meeting Wednesday, he said, Colonel Pearre's attitude toward him was most frigid.

That Colonel Pearre has made enemies in this county is too plain to be mistaken. Party men say without reserve that he will lose the county at the polls, if nominated. This is a bold assertion for Republicans to make a rock-ribbed Republican county like Frederick, yet just such talk is heard and not only in the city.

It has been 34 years since this county has been represented in Congress, and there is a strong disposition on the part of the party to nominate a home man. Party leaders believe that the other counties of the district will see the justice of their claim and agree on a Frederick nominee. There is plenty of available timber, and a strong man could, it is said, be agreed upon in short notice.

The name of State Senator John P. T. Mathias, who has recently made such a good record as State Senator, has been mentioned. Mr. William Schnauffer, president of the Brunswick Saving Bank, is also spoken of. Mr. Schnauffer is one of the leading citizens of Brunswick and is well known all over the county. Mr. Reno S. Harp, of the Frederick bar, is being pushed for the nomination by his friends. He is a hard party worker and was formerly county chairman.

Frederick county bases its claim upon the nomination by reason of its Republican majority which ranges from 600 to 1,000, and it is likely that this claim will be pushed with considerable vigor as the time for the primaries and convention approaches. Frederick county has been so woefully neglected in the way of Federal appointments that, in the language of a party man, "we don't even get any promises these days."

There is no disguising the fact that the Congressional fight in this district is now on, and it may be said that Frederick county is in the van against the renomination of Colonel Pearre. He is decidedly out with the party leaders. It is generally thought here that a new man will be nominated and elected.

NEW OWNER OF BOND MILL TOOK CHARGE

Mr. Bond, the Retiring Superintendent and Part owner, Banqueted His Men Saturday.

Preliminary to turning over to the new owner the immense lumbering plant at Bond, this county, by the former proprietors, Messrs. DuBois & Bond Bros., an elaborate supper was served at the hall in Bond by the retiring superintendent and part owner, Mr. N. U. Bond, last Saturday night, when two hundred and fifteen employees were served with all that the markets of the cities and country could afford. The occasion will be one long to be remembered by both the host and his guests, for many of the latter had been in the employ of the retiring owners of the plant since it was erected and the parting in some instances was touching in the extreme. The men held Mr. Bond in high regard and his feeling for them was entirely reciprocated.

During Mr. Bond's superintendency of the works no labor troubles occurred and it has been the boast of both employer and employe that at the Bond mill the question of labor and capital was solved without strikes, demands or friction of any kind. Mr. Bond took his men into his confidence and the result was that all worked together in harmony.

The largest cut for any single week since the Bond mill has been in operation was made last week when more than half a million feet of merchantable lumber was manufactured and stacked.

The new owner of the plant, Mr. A. W. Cook, took charge on Monday, retaining all the men who were employed by the former proprietors.

SHOT IN THE LEG

Youthful Rifleman Puts Bullet in Companion's Anatomy Thursday.

Last Thursday afternoon a number of boys whose ages ranged from 6 to 12 years, were at play with a rifle near the old "dead pond," adjacent to Oakland, when one shot another through the leg, the bullet entering the limb from behind and below the knee and came out in front, making a ragged wound, and the at same time a painful one.

The youth who was shot was David Burke and his companion was Francis Goss, both of whom are quite young and no doubt were unaware of the dangerous nature of the sport they were engaged in until after the accident, which may have been a really serious one, had occurred. After being shot "Teddy" walked to his home, a distance of probably half a mile from the spot where he met with his mishap, and Dr. Legge was called who rendered surgical treatment. The wounded boy has recovered from his injury and seems to have suffered no ill effects as a result.

ABANDONS HATLESS FAD

Mr. G. W. Haulenbeek Resumes Headgear Against His Will.

Mr. George W. Haulenbeek, notary public and employe of the law department of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, has renounced his allegiance to the hatless brigade, of which he was an ardent member. He now wears a hat the same as the majority of men.

Mr. Haulenbeek admitted yesterday that his defection from the ranks of the hatless was due to the attention and comments he attracted by going without a hat. He is still an advocate of going bareheaded, but would rather wear a hat than continue to brave the looks and hear the comments which the hatless men have to brave.

Notwithstanding that he has resumed the wearing of a hat Mr. Haulenbeek is sure that the advocates of no hats are increasing in number. He said yesterday that he has noticed that school boys are beginning to go on the streets without hats, and he thinks that by the time they are adults the prevailing prejudice against going bareheaded will have died out.

The family of Mr. Haulenbeek spend nearly the entire year at their cottage at Deer Park, where Mr. Haulenbeek joins them for the week ends. "I got into the habit of going without a hat," Mr. Haulenbeek said, "from my trips to Deer Park. When I got on the train I would take off my hat and would not put it on again until I reached Deer Park. Going bareheaded was so pleasant that gradually I got to going bareheaded all the time. It certainly was pleasant, and you can see that the absence of a hat has made my hair grow finely."

Mr. Haulenbeek finally succumbed to public attention and criticism. He said he had been taken for a floorwalker in department stores when he was hatless, a lady on one occasion asking him to direct her to the department which sold women's garments. Mr. Haulenbeek's friends, to whom he has enthusiastically related the pleasures of going bareheaded, realize that he is making a sacrifice in again wearing a hat.—Baltimore Sun.

MONTH OF MAY

Will Have Light Showers in First Part and Plenty of Moisture Later.

Peter R. Smith predicts the following weather for May:

The showers of rain within the month of May are likely to be scattering and light, at least so for more than the first half of the month. As the latter part of the month is reached the showers will be much more intense. June will be favored with refreshing showers.

The temperature will change to much warmer on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th with an increase in cloud formation and growing more dense, with local scattering rains on transit. Reaction to much cooler will follow the wave of disturbance. Frost will show up at a number of localities, both in northern and central parts.

A storm wave will develop in the southwest which will move north, showing much intensity at many places on its passage between the 8th and 10th. The moon changes to new on the 9th and is at a total eclipse node of the sun visible in the South Pacific and Indian oceans. A change to cool nights with probable frost where conditions favor is quite likely to come to pass.

May is usually a month which develops a large number of cyclonic storms. The causes are in the uneven temperature of the atmosphere originating from the direct and oblique focus of the sun. Conditions favor these kind of windstorms on the 14th, 15th and 16th, and at most periods of May. A change to cooler temperature after the 16th.

On the 18th, 19th and 20th a warm wave will spread over all parts of the country, which will be followed by a storm wave which will be devolop much vigor in the southwest as it moves northeast on its transit. Threatening clouds will show up in central parts. After the passage of the wave the weather will be cool.

A total eclipse of the moon will take place on the evening of the 23rd and the morning of the 24th. The moon will come in contact with the earth's shadow at 10:46 p. m., eastern time; total at 12:09 a. m.; total ends at 12:59 a. m. The shadow will be off the moon at 2:22 a. m.

On the 25th and 26th rains will be on passage and again on the 30th.

THE GENERAL ASSESSORS FAILED TO QUALIFY TUESDAY

Mr. Stanton Has Flatly Refused to Serve, and Mr. Miller May Follow Suit.

The assessors for Garrett county, under the provisions of the general assessment law, were expected to meet and qualify at the court house in Oakland Tuesday preliminary to beginning their labors as public officials, but owing to the refusal of the General Assessors, Messrs. Charles M. Miller, of Swanton, and Uriah M. Stanton, of Grantsville, both appointees of Governor Crothers, to qualify, no organization of the assessors was effected, and the probabilities are that two new assessors general will have to be appointed by the Governor, certainly one, as Mr. Stanton flatly refused to assume the duties and Mr. Miller, unless he experiences a change of mind, will likely follow Mr. Stanton's lead.

The district assessors, who were appointed by the County Commissioners at the special meeting of the Board held last Wednesday, were all present and qualified by taking the oath of office, but the failure of the general assessors to obligate themselves as officials prevented the transaction of any business, except that the printed instructions, prepared under the provisions of the new law, were distributed to the local assessors.

Mr. Stanton, who is peculiarly well qualified to become a general assessor, gave as his reason for refusing to swear in as such that private business interests occupied his entire time and even though the compensation were double what the law provides, $3 per day, he could not in justice to himself, afford to devote the entire summer and much of next fall to the work of making the assessment, and that he would without delay forward his resignation to Governor Crothers.

Mr. Miller, the other general assessor, had not definitely decided when he left Oakland Tuesday afternoon whether to accept or reject the appointment, but left his friends under the impression that he, too, could not afford to neglect his private interests to serve.

PAROLED BOY IN TOILS.

William DeWitt Arrested On Charge of Stealing Hams.

William Dewitt, a youth of some fifteen years of age, was arrested last Saturday and placed in jail for the action of the grand jury at the June term of the circuit court charged with stealing hams from the Smouse farmhouse a few miles south of Oakland, where he was left in charge some time ago while members of the family were on a visit to neighbors, who found upon their return that the hams as well as the boy had disappeared.

Mr. Smouse suspected that the boy had made way with the property and secured a search warrant but before it could be executed word reached him that the hams had been brought to Oakland and sold to Mr. H. Creutzburg. The latter turned the property over to owner as soon as a demand was made upon him, and a warrant for DeWitt's arrest was issued. He was located at Crellin and his arrest followed.

This is young DeWitt's second experience in the criminal court. His first was two or three years ago when he was arrested and convicted for stealing a bicycle at Mountain Lake Park. The Court, taking into consideration the youthfulness of the boy and his former good behavior, paroled him.

TRUXTON KING

A Story of Graustark
By
GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

CHAPTER XVII.

TRUXTON EXACTS A PROMISE.

TRUXTON KING had been in a resentful frame of mind for nearly forty-eight hours. In the first place, he had not had so much as a single glimpse of the girl he now worshiped with all his heart. In the second place, he had learned, with unpleasant promptness, that Count Vos Engo was the officer in command of the house guard, a position as gravely responsible as it was honorable.

He had, of course, proffered his services to Colonel Quinnox. The colonel, who admired the Americans, gravely informed him that there was no regular duty to which he could be assigned, but that he would expect him to hold himself ready for any emergency. In case of an assault he was to report to Count Vos Engo.

But he was not satisfied. Loraine had not come forward with a word of greeting or relief—in fact, she had not appeared outside the castle doors.

Toward dusk on Monday, long after the arrival of the refugees, he sat in gloomy contemplation of his own unhappiness, darkly glowering upon the unfriendly portals from a distant stone bench.

A brisk guardsman separated himself from the knot of men at the castle doors and crossed the plaza toward him.

Judge the dismay and anger when the soldier, a bit shamefaced himself, briefly announced that Count Vos Engo had issued an order against loitering in close proximity to the castle.

Truxton's cheek burned. He saw in an instant that the order was meant for him and for no one else, he being the only outsider likely to come under the head of "loiterer."

Truxton turned to him with a frank smile. "Please tell Count Vos Engo that I am the last person in the world to disregard discipline at a time like this."

His glance swept the balcony, suddenly becoming fixed on a couple near the third column. Count Vos Engo and Loraine Tullis were standing there together, unmistakably watching his humiliating departure.

The next morning he encountered Vos Engo near the grotto.

Catching sight of Vos Engo, he hastened across the avenue and caught up to him.

"Good morning," said Truxton. Vos Engo did not smile as he eyed the tall American. "I haven't had a chance to thank you for coming back for me last Saturday. Allow me to say that it was a very brave thing to do."

"I do not like your words, Mr. King, nor the way in which you glare at me."

"I'm making it easier to tell you the agreeable news, Count Vos Engo; that's all. Take your hand off your sword, please—some other time perhaps, but not in these days, when we need men, not cripples. I'll tell you what I have discovered, and then we'll drop the matter until some other time. Frankly, count, I have made the gratifying discovery that you are a miserable cur."

Count Vos Engo went very white.

"As you say, there is another and a better time. We need dogs as well as men in these days."

Truxton strolled off to the stables, picking up Mr. Hobbs on the way.

"Hobbs," he said, "we've got to find John Tullis; that's all there is to it."

"I dare say, sir," said Mr. Hobbs with sprightly decisiveness. "He's very much needed."

"I'm going to need him before long as my second."

Later on much of Truxton's good humor was restored and his vanity pleased by a polite request from Count Halfont to attend an important council in the "room of wrangles" that evening at 9.

Very boldly he advanced upon the castle a few minutes before the appointed hour.

He came upon Loraine Tullis at the edge of the terrace. She was walking slowly in the soft shadows beyond the row of lights on the lower gallery. He knew her at a glance, this slim girl in spotless white.

"Loraine!" he whispered, reaching her side in two bounds. She put out her hands, and he clasped them. Plainly she was confused. "I've been dying for a glimpse of you. Do you think you've treated me"—

"Don't, Truxton!" she pleaded, suddenly serious. "You must not come here. I saw—well, you know. I was so ashamed; I was so sorry."

He still held her hands.

"Yes; they ordered me to move on, as if I were a common loafer," he said, with a soft chuckle. "But where have you kept yourself?"

"I have been ill, Truxton—truly, I have," she said quickly, uneasily.

"You told Vos Engo to ride back and pick me up," he persisted. "He told me in so many words. Now, I want a plain answer, Loraine. Did you promise to reward him if he—well, if he saved me from the mob?"

"No," she said in a low voice.

"What was it, then? I must know, Loraine."

"I am very, oh, so very unhappy, Truxton," she murmured.

"I came near spoiling everything just now," he whispered hoarsely.

"What?"

"I almost kissed you, Loraine. I swear it was hard to keep from it. That would have spoiled everything."

"Yes, it would," she agreed quickly.

"I'm not going to kiss you until you have told me you love Vos Engo."

"I—I don't understand!" she cried, drawing back and looking up into his face with bewildered eyes.

"Because then I'll be sure that you love me."

"Be sensible, Truxton."

"I'll know that you promised to love him if he'd save me. It's as clear as day to me. You did tell him you'd marry him if he got me to a place of safety."

"No. I refused to marry him if he did not save you. Oh, Truxton, I am so miserable! What is to become of all of us? What is to become of John and Bobby and you?"

"I—I think I'll kiss you now, Loraine," he whispered almost tremulously. "God, how I love you, little darling! You must make me a promise."

"Oh, Truxton, don't ask me to say that I'll be your"— She stopped, painfully embarrassed.

"That will come later," he said consolingly. "I want you to promise, on your sacred word of honor, that you'll kiss no man until you've kissed me."

"Oh," she murmured, "I—I cannot promise that! I am not sure that I'll ever—ever kiss anybody. What is it you really want me to say?" she asked, looking up with sudden shyness in her starry eyes.

"That you love me—and me only, Loraine," he whispered.

"I will not say it!" she cried, breaking away from him. "But," as she ran to the steps, a delicious tremor in her voice, "I will consider the other thing you ask."

"THAT YOU LOVE ME AND ME ONLY, LORAINE."

King was ushered into a large, sedately furnished room. A score of men were there before him—sitting or standing in attitudes of attention, listening to the words of General Braze. King's entrance was the signal for an immediate transfer of interest. The general bowed most politely and at once turned to Count Halfont with the remark that he had quite finished his suggestions. The prime minister came forward to greet the momentarily shy American.

"The council has been extolling you, Mr. King," said the prime minister, leading him to a seat near his own.

Truxton blushed. Involuntarily he glanced at Vos Engo. That gentleman started, a curious light leaping into his eyes.

"Here's the situation in a nutshell," went on the prime minister. "We are doomed unless succor reaches us from the outside. We seem unable to warn John Tullis, who, if given time, might succeed in collecting a sufficient force of loyal countrymen to harass and eventually overthrow the dictator. I am loath to speak of another alternative that has been discussed at length by the ministers and their friends. The Duke of Perse, from a bed of pain and anguish, has counseled us to take steps in the direction I am about to speak of.

"We can appeal to Russia in this hour of stress, but we will have to make an unpleasant sacrifice. Russia is eager to take over our new issue of railway bonds. Hitherto we have voted against disposing of the bonds in that country, the reason being obvious. St. Petersburg wants a new connecting line with her possessions in Afghanistan. Our line will provide a most direct route—a cutoff, I believe they call it. Last year the Grand Duke Paulus volunteered to provide the money for the construction of the line from Edelweiss north to Balak on condition that Russia be given the right to use the line in connection with her own roads to the orient. You may see the advantage in this to Russia. Mr. King, if I send word to the Grand Duke Paulus, agreeing to his terms, which still remain open to us, signing away a most valuable right in what we had hoped would be our own individual property, we have every reason to believe that he will send armed forces to our relief on the pretext that Russia is defending properties of her own. That is one way in which we may oust Count Marlanx. The other lies in the ability of John Tullis to give battle to him with our own people carrying the guns. Lieutenant Haddan has told us quite lately of a remark you made which he happened to overhear. If I quote him correctly, you said to the Englishman Hobbs that you could get away with it, meaning, as I take it, that you could succeed in reaching John Tullis. May I not implore you to tell us how you would go about it?"

Truxton had turned a brick red. Shame and mortification surged within him. He was cruelly conscious of an undercurrent of irony in the premier's courteous request. For an instant he was sorely crushed. A low laugh from the opposite side of the room sent a shaft to his soul. He looked up. Vos Engo was still smiling. In an instant the American's blood boiled.

"I did say I could get to John Tullis. I'll start tonight."

His words created a profound impression, they came so abruptly.

"Send for Mr. Hobbs, please," said Truxton. "There should be three of us," addressing the men about him. "One of us is sure to get away."

"There is not a man here—or in the service—who will not gladly accompany you, Mr. King," cried General Braze quickly.

"Count Vos Engo is the man I would choose, if I may be permitted the honor of naming my companion," said Truxton, grinning inwardly with a malicious joy. Vos Engo turned a yellowish green. His eyes bulged.

VOS ENGO TURNED A YELLOWISH GREEN.

"I—I am in command of the person of his royal highness," he stammered, suddenly going very red.

"I had forgotten your present occupation," said Truxton quietly. "Pray pardon the embarrassment I may have caused you. After all, I think Hobbs will do. He knows the country like a book."

Mr. Hobbs came. That is to say, he was produced. It is doubtful if Mr. Hobbs ever fully recovered from the malady commonly known as stage fright. He had never been called Mr. Hobbs by a prime minister before, nor had he ever been asked in person by a minister of war if he had a family at home. Afterward Truxton King was obliged to tell him that he had unwaveringly volunteered to accompany him on the perilous trip to the hills. Be sure of it, Mr. Hobbs was not in a mental condition for many hours to even remotely comprehend what had taken place.

But Mr. Hobbs was not the kind to falter once he had given his word.

"We'll be off at midnight, Hobbs," said Truxton.

"As you say, Mr. King, just as you say," said Hobbs, with fine indifference.

As Truxton was leaving the castle ten minutes later a brisk, eager faced young attendant hurried up to him.

"I bear a message from his royal highness," said the attendant, detaining him. "Prince Robin has asked for you, sir."

"I'll see him," said King promptly, as if he were granting the audience.

CHAPTER XVIII.

BY THE WATER GATE.

IT was a vast, lofty apartment, regal in its subdued lights. An enormous golden bed with gorgeous hangings stood far down the room. So huge was this royal couch that Truxton at first overlooked the figure sitting bolt upright in the middle of it.

An old woman advanced from the head of the couch and motioned Truxton to approach.

"I am deeply honored, your highness," said the visitor, bowing very low.

The prince's legs were now hanging over the edge of the bed. His eyes were dancing with excitement.

"I want you to find Uncle Jack, Mr. King," said Bobby eagerly. "And tell him I didn't mean it when I banished him the other day. I really and truly didn't." He was having difficulty in keeping back the tears.

"I shall deliver the message, your highness," said Truxton, his heart going out to the unhappy youngster.

"Americans always do what they will," said the boy, his eyes snapping. "Here's something for you to take with you, Mr. King. It's my lucky stone. It always gives good luck."

He unclasped his small fingers. In the damp palm lay one of those peculiarly milky, half transparent pebbles common the world over and of value only to small, impressionable boys. Truxton accepted it with profound gravity.

"And when you come back, Mr. King, I'm going to knight you. I'd do it now, only Aunt Loraine says you'd be worrying about your title all the time and might be 'stracted from your mission. I'm going to make a baron of you. That's higher than a count in Graustark. Vos Engo is only a count."

Truxton started.

"I shall be overwhelmed," he said. Then his hand went to his mouth in the vain effort to cover the smile that played there.

"My mother used to say that American girls liked titles," said the prince, with ingenuous candor.

"Prince Robin, may I"—he glanced uneasily at the distant nurse—"may I ask how your Aunt Loraine is feeling?"

"She acted very funny when I sent for you. I'm worried about her."

"What did she do, your highness?"

"She rushed off to her room. I think, Mr. King, she was getting ready to cry or something. You see, she's in trouble."

"She's worried about her brother, of course, and you."

"I just wish I could tell you— No, I won't. It wouldn't be fair," Bobby said, checking himself resolutely. "She's awful proud of you. I'm sure she likes you, Mr. King."

"I'm very, very glad to hear that."

Truxton bent his knee. "Your highness, as it seems I am not to see her and as you seem to be the very best friend I have, I should very much like to ask a great favor of you. Will you take this old ring of mine and wish it on her finger just as soon as I have left your presence?"

"How did you know she was coming in again?" in wide eyed wonder. "Excuse me. I shouldn't ask questions. What shall I wish?" It was the old ring that had come from Spantz's shop. The prince promptly hid it beneath the pillow.

"I'll leave that to you, my best of friends."

"I bet it'll be a good wish, all right. I know what to wish."

"Then, goodby and God bless you," said Truxton. "I must be off. Your Uncle Jack is waiting for me up there in the hills."

Truxton found Mr. Hobbs in a state bordering on collapse with Colonel Quinnox and Haddan.

"I say, Mr. King, there's no more chance of getting out of the"— "Listen, Hobbs, we're going to swim out," said Truxton.

"Swim! Oh, I say! By hokey, he's gone clean daffy!" Hobbs was eying him with alarm.

"Not yet, Hobbs. Later on, perhaps. I had occasion to make a short tour of investigation this afternoon. Doubtless, gentlemen, you know where the water gate is, back of the castle. Hobbs, you and I will sneak under that slippery old gate like a couple of eels. I forgot to ask if you can swim."

"To be sure I can. Under the gate! My word!"

"I see!" cried Quinnox. "It can be done! No one will be watching at that point."

The sky was overcast, the night as black as ebony. The four men left the officers' quarters at 1 o'clock, making their way to the historic old gate in the glen below the castle.

"God be with you," said Quinnox fervently. The four men shook hands, and King slipped into the water without a moment's hesitation.

"Right after me, Hobbs," he said and then his head went under.

A minute later he and Hobbs were on the outside of the gate, gasping for breath. Standing in water to their necks, Quinnox and Haddan passed the equipment through the barred openings. There were whispered good

"THEN GOODBY, AND GOD BLESS YOU," SAID TRUXTON.

bys and then two invisible heads bobbed off in the night, wading in the swift flowing canal up to their chins. Swimming would have been dangerous on account of the noise.

Holding their belongings high above their heads, with their hearts in their mouths, King and the Englishman felt their way carefully along the bed of the stream.

How to Fit a Skirt Top.

If the top of your dress skirt you are making is too large for the belt, so that you will have to "full" it in too much, wet it for about an inch around the top and press with a hot iron. This will shrink it enough to allow it to go into the belt nicely. Of course this applies only to goods not already shrunk.

SOME FACTS ABOUT HALLEY'S COMET

Its Discoverer, Reappearances and Portents of Superstitious Belief.

Astronomical history will be made within a few weeks when the much talked of Halley's comet passes between the earth and the sun and at the same time swishes this planet with its Nebulous tail. This important event is scheduled to take place on May 18 and astronomers throughout the world are making extensive preparations to secure good photographs and gather all the information possible on this heavenly wanderer, as it is not scheduled to reappear until 75 years hence. On the date of its last appearance, in 1835, the art of photographing heavenly bodies was unknown, and future generations had to be content with sketches made by astronomers who observed the phenomena.

The opportunity to photograph this month, however, will be unusual as it will be only 12,000,000 miles from the earth on May 18. It will cross the sun's disk during the forenoon, and will be visible in the west shortly after sunset for several days later, finally passing out of sight on its long journey away from the sun.

What will happen when we pass through the tail of the comet? According to the information furnished by the leading astronomers there is nothing to be feared. At this time the tail will be about 15,000,000 miles long, and the head of the comet will be 12,000,000 miles away from the earth. The tail is said to be made of thin, harmless gases, much lighter than the air we breathe, and it is very probable that it will not be noticeable. As the contact will take place in the forenoon, it will certainly not be noticeable on this side of the earth, where it will be broad daylight, and as the other side of the earth will be screened from a direct encounter, it will probably not be seen there. As the comet's tail extends millions of miles beyond the earth, however, it is extremely likely that the inhabitants of the Antipodes may see some evidence of it in the night sky.

Were the earth and the head of the comet to come in contact, however, it would be more serious, but there is no likelihood of this, as the earth will have safely passed that point in its orbit, by the time the comet reaches it.

Of all the comets which have appeared from time to time, Halley's is the most interesting, and is the oldest one of which we have any record, its appearance being recorded as early as 12 B. C. Unlike other comets this heavenly traveler has a closed orbit, of which it makes a complete circuit every 75 years. The discovery of this fact was responsible for its name. It was in 1682 that Edmund Halley, a Englishman, made the announcement that comets move in closed orbits. After a great deal of research in similar orbits, he concluded that these were one and the same. When he had satisfied himself as to his discovery, he announced that the comet would appear in the latter part of 1758 or the beginning of 1759. Although he had been dead a number of years, the astronomical world awaited with considerable curiosity the result of his prediction, and when the brilliant body lit up the heavens on Christmas of 1758, it was immediately christened with Halley's name. It appeared next in 1835.

During the Biblical times, and even down beyond the middle ages, the inhabitants of the earth stood in great fear of a comet, and Halley's has been linked with a number of historical incidents. It was in 1837, during the reign of Louis I (the Pious) of France that the comet appeared. The people were greatly alarmed, and one learned philosopher predicted that it meant the death of the ruler. The king immediately held a consultation with his bishops and was told that he must pray, build churches and founded monasteries. This he did, but he died three years later.

One of its most celebrated appearances occurred in 1456, three years after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks. According to historians the comet was unusually large and a brilliant golden color. All Europe became greatly alarmed and Pope Calixtus urged the faithful to repeat the Angelus three times a day in order to protect themselves from the Turk and the comet.

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of Garrett county a sum of money out of the State School Tax.

WHEREAS, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, especially upon Garrett county of the State School Tax, and the inability without larger increase of County Taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett county, the largest county in the State in area, as to render school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in more central parts of the State; and

ROOSEVELT THE KEYNOTE.

Situation In New York Since Hughes' Appointment Revolves Around His Probable Attitude.

Republicans of the New York Congressional delegation, including Senator Root are counting on Colonel Roosevelt taking an active part in the New York State campaign next fall. In fact it would be difficult to find a single Republican in the New York representation here who does not believe, now that Governor Hughes has eliminated himself, that Mr. Roosevelt will dominate the Republican affairs of the State in the coming contest,

Several members of the delgation declared to day that Colonel Roosevelt would be consulted not only in regard to the selection of a candidate for Governor, but that he would participate actively in the campaign, probably delivering at least one speech.

Several members of the New York delegation said today that the Colonel had made plain to them before he left the White House that he did not intend to surrender his right to engage actively in the political affairs of his own State and that they might expect him on his return to this country to take a live interest it all of the party's doings.

New York Republicans here believe that if Governor Hughes had remained at the helm and had taken an active part in next fall's campaign there would surely have been friction between him and the Colonel. Members of the State delegation look now to the pushing and completion through Roosevelt's influence of the party reorganization begun under Hughes.

In this gossip the name of Willian Loeb, Jr., Collector of the Port of New York, is being mentioned more frequently than anybody else's as a possibility for State chairman to succeed Timothy L. Woodruff. If Mr. Loeb were pushed for this place, however, he would have to resign as Collector.

President Taft's appointment of Governor Hughes has grown in popularity in official Washington in the last twenty-four hours. It is safe to say now that no single act of the President since he entered the White House has brought him such universal commendation. Some Republicans believe that the appointment will do much toward setting the President in a stronger position before the country in that it affords convincing proof that the President has placed the Supreme Court above all partisan or political consideration.

Democrats in Washington declined to follow the lead of William J. Bryan in opposing Hughes for nomination. In private conversation they did not hesitate to condemn Mr. Bryan's criticisms as in extremely bad taste.

Several prominent members of the New York represeutation in Congress professed to believe that the appointment of Governor Hughes to the Supreme Court Bench does not mean his definite elimination as a Presidential possibility seven years hence. Those Republicans recall that Salmon B. Chase when he was a member of the Supreme Court was seriously talked of as a possibility for the Presidential nomination, while in more recent years the name of Justices Brewer and Harlan often have been urged.

Some of Governor Hughes' friends here have been pointing out the similarity of the opportunities that came to him and to Mr. Taft. They pointed out that it was Mr. Taft's ambition, probably more so than in the case of Governor Hughes, to sit in the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Taft had an opportunity to choose between a realization of that ambition and a possible nomination for the Presidency. He considered the matter seriously for many weeks and chose to run his chance of being nominated for the Presidency, although he has frequently admitted since that his predilection even now is strongly toward the Bench.

With Governor Hughes retiring either on October 1 or October 10 next from the arena of Republican State politics new problems confront the Republican organization men. It was an open secret for some time that it was their intention to renominate him by acclamation in the next State convention.

With Governor Hughes entirely eliminated the names of two possible candidates for Governor were discussed recently, those of President Schurman, of Cornell University, and David Jayne Hill, Ambassador to Germany.

Roosevelt is the conundrum of the situation, all Republicans say. While several of them have been in communication with the ex-President they haven't the faintest notion of what he will do on his return and they say that nothing whatever can be done until Mr. Roosevelt's suggestions are received. Many in the present Republican State organization have criticised Mr. Roosevelt for commanding them in 1906 and 1908 to nominate Governor Hughes and are still bitter about it.

THE HEIGHTS OF TREES

How Their Growth Is Influenced by the Location.

A tree 100 feet high, accurately measured, is not as tall as it looks. There are not many trees in the gardens and parks of this country that exceed 100 feet, notwithstanding the records of reputedly much higher trees than this. We have been told that the highest tree in Kew Gardens carefully measured with a tape was 103 feet and the tallest pine, a Corsican near the entrance, is 86 feet.

There are some fine specimens of Atlas and Lebanon cedars in these gardens, but not one of them is 70 feet high. A larch that had been drawn up by the surrounding beeches and was looked upon as a giant was blown down in 1902 and it proved to be 110 feet long. Beech, among the tallest of our trees, rarely reaches 100 feet, though Dr. Henry measured one in Kilkenny in 1904 which was 117 feet. The famous deciduous cypress, Tarodium distichum, in Syon Park, Brentford, is, according to Mr. Elwes, 110 feet high, the tallest of its kind in Europe.

The same authority gives 105 feet as the height of the tallest horse chestnut tree he had seen, though there are others estimated to be even higher than this. The tallest walnut is from 80 to 85 feet and the tallest black walnut, at Marble Hall, Twickenham, was 98 feet high when measured by Dr. Henry in 1905. Oaks have been measured up to 130 feet, but they are quite exceptional, 100 feet being above the average for our tallest oaks.

The height of trees is influenced by the company they grow in. For example a larch growing in the open would most likely fail to reach 100 feet in heights, whereas larches growing close together or pressed upward by other trees have been known to exceed 130 feet in this country. The California giant trees of the wellingtonia owe their great height to the same influence. Not even in that country would this tree have grown to 300 feet or more if it had not been forced to grow upward because it could not grow outward.

According to Mr. Elwes, one of the tallest wellingtonias in this country is at Fonthill Abbey, which in 1906 measured "certainly over 100 feet and probably 105 feet high." This is at least 10 feet higher than the tallest at Strathfieldsaye. It is next to impossible to ascertain the correct height of a tree by any other means than that of careful measurement; there are, we know, ingenious contrivances for doing it otherwise, but they are not reliable. Of course, the approximate height may be near enough and yet be a long way out.—From the Field.

IN CUBA'S GARDEN OF EDEN.

Third Richest Spot In The World Is In Pinar Del Rio.

Four hours east of Havana in Pinar del Rio is one of the most valuable tracts of land on the face of the earth. There are but two places in the whole world where ground is worth so much as in the Vuelta Abajo.

Those two places are that portion of the valley of the Rhine where the Johannisberger grape is grown from which Liebfraumlich and other fine wines are made, and the Kimberly diamond district in South Africa. In the Vuelta Abajo the soil grows tobacco, which when properly cured, rolled and stamped can be sold in the shape of cigars at the rate of $7.50 each.

What, then, is the marvel of this priceless tobacco ground? To the eye—nothing. Dusty red loam rather thin on rocky hillsides and sparingly spread with tender concern as a half bald man disperses his hair impartially over his head. Next to each tobacco vega (a farm of an average extent of 40 acres) is a hayfield. The hay is not raised for animals. It is cut and spread on the tobacco land and there decomposed and washed into the soil by the rains. It is the fertilizer.

But it is not hay fertilizer alone that mades Vuelta Abajo tobacco what it is, nor yet the cheesecloth protection that keeps out the hottest rays of the sun, nor yet the choice seed, nor even yet the mild, equable nature of the climate, nor the chemical composition of the soil. For each and every of these conditions is reproduced in other places without that surprising and delicious climax of tobacco culture that comes alone from the heart of Pinar del Rio.

"Neither science nor experience can tell exactly what it is that makes Vuelta Abajo tobacco just what it is," writes Richard Barry, "but the native Cuban knows the secret. In strict confidence he sometimes confides this secret, and I intend now for the first time to make it public. The great superiority of Vuelta Abajo tobacco over all others lies in the fact that each year on Easter Sunday the soil of every vega in the province is anointed with the blood of a fighting cock killed in honorable combat.

"That I might have no doubt of this astonishing agricultural theory I was shown the training quarters of the fighting cocks of the district. While I was there the old trainer gave them their morning meal of bananas and milk and massage them under the wing pits with Malaga wine.

"The cockfighting has entered curiously into Cuban politics. The most brilliant man in affairs there is Afredo Zayas, now Vice-Iresident. He is the Elihu Root of the island, an attorney, shrewd, hard-working, far-sighted. Unfortunately for his Presidential aspirations, he listened long and eagerly to American ideas of Cuban affairs as they should be. That is where he fell down. Jose Miguel Gomez listened to Cuban affairs as they are.

"Zayas thought it would be a good thing to suppress the cockfight. The Americans told him it would be. It is a cruel sport, it is barbaric, it is not pleasant to the Anglo-Saxon taste; so the Americans told Zayas, and Zayas listened too eagerly. Gomez knew he was dealing with a Castilian people; he was a Castilian himself. He loved a cockfight himself, just as every one of his true compatriots did. So while Zayas in Havana was trying to convince his countrymen that they should abolish cockfighting, Gomez, in Pinar del Rio, was personally attending the Easter Sunday anointing of Vuelta Abajo tobacco lands;and Gomez was elected President of the Cuban republic.

"But Cuba is only one-half tobacco. The other half is sugar with a dash of cacardi. This half stretches from Guantanamo to the Bay of Nepi and disgorges its sweet substances through the harbors of Cienfuegos and Santiago. A trip to Cuba would not be complete without a visit to a sugar refinery, and that is comparative easy for an American, for four-fifth of them are either owned or managed by Americans, and their countrymen are always welcome visitors.

"There you can see the sugarcane hoisted from the flat cars at one end of the refinery and, following it down the course of its journey to the other end, you discover strange emanations into the various vats. Into the first pours a syrup as thick and almost as black as crude asphalt, and into the end one pours the very finest syrup of all, a yellow stream as thin as the sap from a maple tree in spring. From the black stream is crystalized the lowest grade of brown sugar, from the light yellow stream the highest grade of cube sugar.

"As you leave the sugar refinery you will pass through miles of sugar cane and if you are there late in the season you will at convenient intervals come upon a treacherous fellow carrying a rifle in the hollow of his arm. He scans you closely and will be quite sure of your pacific identity before you will be allowed to pass on. He is guarding the sugar plantation. All over the island those guards are as numerous as almost as the workers.

"Right here in this sugar guard you can study quickly and finally all the complicated, melodramatic politics of the island. Why should he guard sugarcane? Because in the heart of the sugarcane lies all the inflammable spirit of revolution. Around this sugarcane revolves world politics, foor it is the twin backbone of Cuban industry and there, on a par with tobacco, is guiding the finances of the realm and, as everyone knows, high finance is today the soul of politics, indeed of statecraft.

"If any Cuban workman becomes disaffected for any cause whatever or for no cause, he may light a cigarette, stroll into the sugarcane, flip his partially consumed weed into the field and pass on. In less than an hour that entire plantation will be in ashes and thousands upon thousands of dollars will have gone up in smoke. And who will decipher the origin? No one, unless the ever-vigilant guard prevents the tossing of the cigarette and then there will be no fire.

"But a great number of tourists never see the sugar fields, never see the tobacco lands. Those who are wealthy spend their time motoring along the beautiful roads which surround Havana und stretch even as far as Santa Clara, a third of the way across the island. The others stick to the hotels, see occasional cockfight, visit the jai alic courts or dance the pleasant evenings away under the semi-tropic moon.

THAT sort of politics that heeds the wishes of a few politicians rather than those of the people is the subject for caustic comment on the part of several papers in the counties of the First Judicial Circuit anent the appointment as associate judge of E. Stanley Toadvin by Governor Crothers for the unexpired term of Judge Holland, who was retired at the last session of the General Assembly.

In editorials these papers refer to the appointment as "petty politics" on the part of the Governor, and predict a fight in the primaries preceding the election in November, 1911. Harry L. D. Stanford was the choice of the people of the circuit. Friends of Mr. Stanford have no hesitancy in saying that he will go after the nomination for the full term. Mr. Toadvin also desires the nomination.

WHY NOT CLEAN UP?

In the springtime a young man lightly turns to thoughts of love, a woman to thoughts of housecleaning; and while we would like to escape the unpleasant features that accompany the spring housecleaning, we know that it is a necessity and appreciate its many advantages, both from a sanitary and an artistic standpoint.

In the springtime a town needs a housecleaning, and while we believe that our town is a model in this respect, we feel that some improvement could be made. Many vacant plots of ground are in an unsightly condition and there are some back yards and alleys that can be put into a more presentable condition.

Would it not be a good idea to have a day appointed, at an early date, for the general cleaning up of the town? We feel sure that each property owner would take pride in having his grounds look as well as his neighbor's.

We would like to see the ladies organize a Civic Club to create a new interest in beautifying and keeping beautiful all of Oakland. This has been tried in other towns, and has always met with success. These clubs have raised money in many cases to defray expenses, and have personally superintended the work.

If we have a day appointed by the Mayor to make a start along this line, we believe that a good start will be made in the right direction.

FOR A SAFE AND SANE FOURTH.

Five thousand three hundred and seven person were killed, blinded, mained, or injured on July 4th, 1909, celebrating our day of Independence, and 34,000 have been killed, blinded or otherwise injured on this day in the last seven years, and most of them children.

Is there any reason why this slaughter should be continue, or is there any reason why Independence Day cannot be celebrated in a safe and sane manner.

In the cities the hospitals prepare for July 4th each year as they would for battle, and the preparation is not in vain, as they have always been filled with victims.

So far as we know there has never been a fatal accident in Oakland during a Fourth of July celebration, and yet we have no assurance that we will not add our share to the great total this year.

There is just one remedy: Let the Town Council pass an ordinance prohibiting the firing of any cannon, gun, pistol, toy pistol, or fire arm of any kind, and the explosion of any kind of firecracker or combustible fire works; and also to prohibit the sale of any of these, making the penalty for breaking the ordinance such that it will be observed; providing, however, that an exhibition of fire works might be given with consent, and under the direction of the Mayor and Town Council.

We would like to see a big celebration of Independence Day this year, with a trades display, parade, athletic games, picnics, etc., the good old fashioned Fourth, but minus the danger of the toy pistol, the fire crackers, and the fire works.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Sunday, May 8, set as a "Mothers' Day," is regarded as a people's holiday which will be observed all over the country this year. It originated with a Philadelphia daughter, and this year, by almost unanimous consent, May 8 has been selected as the day sacred to American mothers. Already the mayors of many cities have issued proclamations that their people join in honoring mothers. The churches have also taken up the idea and the ministers are doing everything in their power to make the movement a popular one.

Maybe you are one of those mistaken individuals who think there is no national holiday. Of course, its really takes an act of Congress to make a Simonpure national holiday, but that the people themselves have decreed "Mothers' Day" is the nearest approach to the Congressional article.

It was Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, to whom the idea came while she was planning to commemorate the anniversary of her mother's death. Several years ago, while she was wondering what flowers she should lay on her mother's grave, it occurred to her that it would be a beautiful tribute to all mothers, the living as well as the dead, if their children on a given day would unite in the simple wearing of white flowers.

Miss Jarvis thought the white carnation would be the most appropriate blossom for "Mothers' Day," and these are her reasons: "Its whiteness stands for purity, its form for beauty, its wide field of growth for charity, its lasting qualities for faithfulness, its fragrance for love—all attributes of the true Mother."

But that's only the beginning of the story. Miss Jarvis asked everybody to wear a white carnation in his coat lapel on a certain day in honor of his mother. The idea spread rapidly and on the appointed day scarcely a man appeared on the streets of Philadelphia whose coat was not adorned with the floral emblem. Boston adopted the custom a few weeks later, and a white carnation, unless it had been ordered in advance, could not be had for love or money on "Mother' Day."

The day is also made a special occasion for sending flowers to invalids, to the sick in hospitals and to the orphans in public and denominational institutions.

REPUBLICANS IN FINE TRIM.

The Republicans of Maryland are in fine fighting trim. This fact was apparent at the meeting of the State Committee held in Baltimore on Wednesday. The gathering was the largest held in years and there never was a time when the various elements were more united. Plans were made for nominating congressional candidates and strong and hearty resolutions endorsing the administration of President Taft were unanimously adopted. The Baltimore Evening Sun is not pleased over this feature of the proceedings and is sad at heart over the implied endorsement of the new tariff bill. If the Republican party stands for anything it is for the policy of protection. It promised no revision which ignored this cardinal doctrine. Democratic tariff-for-revenue-only newspapers such as the Sun, have indulged in a good deal of misrepresentation concerning the new tariff law and have persistently charged that the Republicans failed to revise the tariff as promised. Is this true? Undoubtedly there were many schedules not revised to our liking and to many others but this was bound to be the case where thousands of items are to be considered. But it cannot be successfully denied that the new bill as in substantial compliance with the promise made in the Republican platform. That the new law is in high favor with agriculturalists is well-known. Farmers have realized good prices for what they raise and are prosperous beyond anything known in years. As a revenue producer the new law is a great success. Much is said about the high cost of living but the critics of the new tariff are silenced and driven to seek some other explanation of the increased cost, when it can be shown that on necessities the reductions were large and on items cut down 20 per cent. there has been a raise in price.

For example meats of all kinds are high, including bacon, which under the Dingley law carried a duty of 5 cents per lb, while under the new law it is 4 cents per lb. In the new law there were 654 decreases, 220 increases and 1,150 items of the dutiable list unchanged. Duties were decreased on articles having a consumption value of nearly $50,000,000,000 while they were increased on articles having a consumption value of $1,000,000,000. Of the increases $600,000,000, or more than half, were upon luxuries such as silks, wines, perfumeries, etc. These facts, and the figures prove that there was a marked change downward in the rates. This much regarding the tariff. But there are other mighty reasons why the Republicans of Maryland should receive the support of the people. They stand for law observance. The Federal Constitution is the supreme law of the land. Democratic officers, State and municipal, leaders of that party high and low have little regard for its mandates and have recently shocked the people of this State and the country by their efforts to nullify it for partisan purposes. Men with such preverted ideas can do the State incalculable harm and should not be clothed with power. Let all doubters understand Republican doctrines. There will be no scuttling. President Taft is a great President. He is leading his party in a splendid service for for the people. All that Roosevelt fought for he is fighting for. The great problems handed down to him are being met bravely, patiently and wisely. Maryland Republicans are with him heart and soul and they will show their faith by a determine effort to send men to Congress who will hold up his hands. This country had a dose of Democratic tariff tinkering. There was no complaint about high prices then. But there was no money to pay the low prices.

BRYAN'S FRIENDS IN THE SIXTH DISTRICT

Have Call for the Nomination for Congress.

The Sixth Congressional District is the Maryland stronghold of Mr. William Jennings Bryan, the three times Democratic candidate for president of the United States. Incidentally, it is the Republican stronghold of Maryland. Not since the Democratic tidal wave of 1892 have the Democrats elected their candidates in the district.

This year the two avowed candidates in the district for the Democratic nomination are former Senator David J. Lewis, of Allegany county, and H. Dorsey Etchison, of Frederick. Both are loyal and devoted followers of Mr. Bryan. Both of them have stood as sponsors for his ideas, and neither has ever wavered in his loyalty to the "Peerless One." His defeats have only served to make them more steadfast in their devotion to him.

Big Cy Cummings, of Montgomery, who has twice been a member of the General Assembly, has been flirting with the forthcoming nomination, but he has not yet definitely and seriously entered the field. If he decides to get into the game he will be a slugger as in the days when he chased the elusive "pigskin" over the field and pounded it over the far fence, for Cy is a mighty man and a hustler after the votes. From Sandy Spring to Deer Park he would chase votes, and before the primary campaign is over he would be the best known, also the biggest figure that ever strided over the district.

But Cy is waiting and watching. Just now he is busy recovering from his arduous labors of three months at Annapolis and telling Montgomery county farmers his trials, troubles and tribulations during the last legislative session because he was not chosen chairman of the Montgomery delegation and because he was not made chairman of one or more important committees.

Mr. Lewis essayed forth two years ago as a candidate for Congress in the district, and succeeded in reducing Mr. Pearre's majority of over 4,000 in 1906 to 546. He has felt so chipper since he accomplished this feat that he has made up his mind to be a candidate again. Mr. Pearre and Mr. Lewis were formerly law partners at Cumberland. Mr. Lewis was a state senator in 1902 and 1904. He voted for Senator Rayner instead of for Governor Smith in the mighty struggle between the two men for the United States senatorship. Democrats of far Western Maryland seem satisfied to accept Mr. Lewis' candidacy.

Mr. Etchison, of Frederick, who was in Baltimore a day or two ago, says he will give Mr. Lewis a lively tussle for the nomination.

Western Maryland Democrats who have recently visited Baltimore, declare that they are becoming weary of their long sufferings, and that they are nearing a stage at which they will no longer tolerate the distribution of the bulk of the party patronage to the Eastern Shore, central counties and southern Maryland. They declare further that they are preparing to come to the next State Convention with a candidate for governor. Not since 1879, they say, when W. A. Hamilton was nominated, have they had a candidate on the ticket for any position, except Col. Spencer C. Jones for clerk of the Court of Appeals, and the late Colonel Baughman for State Comptroller. During that time, say these weary Democrats of the Sixth District, the Eastern Shore has had two comptrollers and four governors and innumerable other officers.

Three years ago the candidate for governor, Mr. Joseph D. Baker, was sidetracked. Next year, they say, they will go to the State Convention and demand as gubernatorial candidates Mr. Baker, Colonel Schley or Senator Blair Lee.

The sidewalk on the county road between Oakland and Mountain Lake Park has been put in good condition by Mr. Jacob Echard.

Those who have not cleaned the leaves from their lots and grounds should do so at once. The accumulation of leaves about buildings is dangerous in the extreme at this season of the year. The residents have attended to this important matter, but many of our summer residents have not done so, thereby not only endangering their own property but all in the neighborhood.

A party from Grantsville composed of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bonig, Justice Peter Nathan and Lewis Deffinbaugh, drove up to Oakland from that town in Mr. Deffinbaugh's automobile Monday morning, making the trip to Oakland in less than three hours. They returned to Grantsville Monday afternoon after Justice Nathan and Mr. Bonig had qualified at State's officers, the former as a justice of the peace and the latter as notary public.

The management of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has demonstrated a disposition to make its large army of employes participants in the prosperity resulting from the high-pressure business which the system has been doing during the past few months. During the panic period the raliroads had a large percentage of the rolling stock lying idle in the round houses and on the side tracks and it was necessary to pare close in order to meet fixed charges and running expenses. The six per cent. raise will mean an increase to each employe ranging variously from $20 to $120 per annum. It is sufficiently large to be of consequence to the men and in the aggregate it means in the neighborhood $3,000,000 which the management will pay out in increased wages.

Deer Park Proud of Its Young Men.

Two young men, both born and raised in the town of Deer Park, and for several years in the service of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, have recently been promoted. Mr. Hice Laughlin from trainmaster to superintendent and Mr. Ed. Griffin from division operator to trainmaster. Both of these gentlemen are possessed of high character. Mr. Laughlin is a son of Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Laughlin, and Mr. Griffin a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, of Deer Park.

Another instance of the advancement of a native born son is that of Howard Thrasher, who, while not in railroad service, is doing well in one of the large Southern cities.

These instances make one feel proud of Deer Park and of Garrett county.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

PASTOR RUSSELL AT ROME

Addresses Large Audience, Under Auspices of the International Bible Students' Association, Using the Association's Interpreter—Reverent and Close Attention Given.

Text: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ" (Romans i, 16).

Rome, May 1.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, preached here today to a large and attentive audience. Speaking through an interpreter, he was heard by all. His address was delivered under the auspices of the INTERNATIONAL BIBLE STUDENTS ASSOCIATION. A profound impression was evidently made, and Bible study surely received a considerable impetus. Many inclined to scoff at religion and the Bible, as interpreted in the past, said reverently, "If this be the 'Gospel of Christ,' it is worthy of all acceptation." The speaker said:

We, dear friends, are living in a day in which the leading minds of the world are rejecting the Bible and its message in all the great colleges of the world; yea, in the theological seminaries also, the Bible is classed as antique. Professed faith in the Bible, as the inspired Word of God, today calls forth sneers of ridicule and the comment that such believers are "unlearned." But, my hearers, I am before you today to contend that it is not the "Gospel of Christ" that is being rejected by the intelligence of the world, but another Gospel that came, not from Christ, neither from the Apostles, neither is it taught in the Bible. I am here to claim, and to endeavor to prove that the Bible is eminently logical, thoroughly reasonable, and that the message it bears to those who have "ears to hear," is the most wonderful message that could possibly be presented to human heads and hearts.

We are not here to claim a new revelation, making void the Word of God through Jesus and the Apostles; we are not here to twist and turn their words to make them appear to mean what they do not say. We are here to show that the Bible taken in its simplicity, and allowed to interpret itself, is the most wonderful book in the world, and that the Divine Plan of Salvation therein set forth is soul-satisfying and, as the Scriptures declare, sufficient, "that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work."

Theories of the "Dark Ages."

We are not here, my friends, to set forth any sectarian views of the Scriptures, nor to advocate a new theology. By no means; we have already too many theologies; we have already too many sects or divisions of Christ! We want no more! Christendom is awakening to the fact that the various conflicting creeds cast discredit on the Bible. The creeds of Christendom universally discredit each other by their interpretations, and universally they discredit the Bible, which would be surely a most ridiculous book, if it taught all the various conflicting dogmas.

However, I should not be misunderstood as making an attack upon any creed, or upon the adherents of any creed. Rather, I suggest that we may well look with sympathy upon all the various creeds and sects, realizing that God's people have been in Babylonish confusion for now many centuries. Did not the Apostle tell that a great falling away would come? (II Thessalonians ii, 3.) Should we then be surprised if we find his words have come true, that for fifteen hundred years the Church of Christ has been deeply entangled with errors and superstitions, which make void the Gospel of Christ? Let us not then stop to find fault with our forefathers, and to upbraid them; let us rather, so far as possible, assume their honesty, their sincerity. Let us take the Bible standpoint, and realize that the difficulty has been the power of our Adversary, the Devil, and that he has deluded and ensnared, not only the heathen world, but to a considerable extent Christendom.

Mark St. Paul's words, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the glorious light of Divine goodness should shine into their hearts" (II Corinthians iv, 4). The intimation is that our great Adversary, Satan, is interested in deceiving mankind, respecting the glorious character of our God, and his wonderful Plan of Salvation through Christ. Satan uses as his tools the very best of humanity that he can bring under his control, and nothing is more evident than that he has completely deluded the heathen world with what the Apostle terms, "doctrines of devils." Not only so, but to the extent that he was able to do so, he has evidently worked mischief with the various reformations and creeds of Christendom. Thank God that he did not gain entire control of any of these! Thank God that there is a center or nucleus of truth in each of these creeds, and around that kernel of truth, germinating power may be felt in every denomination, but the Adversary has wrapped these creeds with layer after layer of mistranslation and misinterpretation.

In the light of our day, many are able to discern more clearly than did our forefathers, the monstrous and God-dishonoring fallacies of the creeds, and, aroused to disgust, they have rejected the irrational dogmas; but they have frequently rejected also the central truth, which that dogma, to a certain degree, misrepresented. Thus we are in the day of the rejection of the creeds by the people of all denominations, Catholic and Protestant, and equally we are in the day of Bible rejection, because it is assumed that the Bible, having been studied by the formulators of these creeds, must be in accord with these, and hence, must be responsible for the unreasonable teachings, and must be rejected when these are rejected.

Some of us ran away with the doctrine of "election," thinking it the whole Gospel of Christ; whereas, our fragment was incomplete, unsatisfactory, and misrepresented the Gospel, when taken alone. Others grasped the doctrine of "free grace," and ran away with that, claiming that it was the entire Gospel—ignoring the Scriptures which referred to "election," etc. These made a similar mistake, and similarly misrepresented the Gospel of Christ in its wholeness, its solidarity. Others grasped those Scriptures which assure us of a universal opportunity for salvation, and interpreted them to mean that all mankind will attain eternal salvation, regardless of their wills and co-operation. Others found difficulty in harmonizing the relationship between the heavenly Father, the heavenly Son, and the holy Spirit, and this contention led to Unitarianism on the one hand, and to Trinitarianism on the other. Others of us caught the doctrine of "baptism," and made of it the entire Gospel, and thus did violence to the lengths, and breadths, and heights, and depths of the true message, the true Gospel, of which St. Paul in our text declares that he was not ashamed.

Noting the logical mind of St. Paul, who can doubt that he would be ashamed, as we ourselves are, of the fragmentary presentations of the various creeds which more or less oppose and contradict each other? We may be sure that what the Apostle would endorse, as the "Gospel of Christ," we need not be ashamed of. Hence our determination should be to search the Scriptures, and to find that one reasonable message of the Divine Plan which centers in Jesus our Redeemer.

Things at Which We Gagged.

Men and women do not find it difficult to believe in a wise, just, loving and powerful Creator; just such a God our hearts and heads tell us we should expect; just such a God rational people find no difficulty in worshiping. Indeed, while some of us in the past may have believed in the "total depravity" of the race, may we not realize that notwithstanding the fall, there is still in the human mind and heart something which has "longings infinite," something which cries out for the living God, and which commands our reverence and worship, in proportion as he is recognized?

Spiritually we gagged at the suggestion that a God of all wisdom, love, justice and power ever created our race with the foreknowledge and foreordination that practically all of these thousands of millions must suffer either purgatorial torture for several centuries, as our Catholic friends present the matter, or at the still more irrational theory of us Protestants that eternal torture is to be the fate of all except the elect few, the saints, who now follow in the footsteps of Jesus—a course contrary to the world and all the tendencies of life around us. Well may we gag, and the sooner we reject and eject this entire mass of un-Scriptural dogmas, the better. As a whole it comes to us from our honest, but unenlightened forefathers, who verily thought they did God service in torturing one another, even to the extent of burning one another at the stake, because of little differences along the lines of these "doctrines of devils" (I Timothy iv, 1).

The rich spiritual food and the strong faith, which we, dear friends, as Bible students, should desire and seek for, are to be found only in the Bible itself. We should not spurn suggestions from one another, but we should receive such suggestions tentatively, and the Word of God should be searched, so that our faith should not stand in the teachings of men, but in the power of God, as set forth in the Word of God. From this quarter only can we expect information respecting of which St. Paul was not ashamed. That Gospel has two distinct features. Primarily it relates to the world of mankind, and instead of telling us that either centuries of purgatorial suffering, or an eternity of torture, await the world, its message is that, in God's due time, a great blessing awaits the world through the glorified Christ, and as a result of the sacrifice which is finished at Calvary.

This great blessing will not be universal salvation, but it will be a universal opportunity for salvation. It will not be a salvation in ignorance and heathen superstition, but a salvation from such conditions, with full opportunity to return to the image and likeness of God, lost in Adam, and redeemed by our Savior. This is the same Gospel that was heralded by the angels on the night of our Lord's birth in the words, "Behold we bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people, for unto you is born this day in the City of David a Savior [Life-Giver], which is Christ the Lord" (Luke ii, 10). This version of the Gospel, a good message, and for all mankind, corresponds exactly with the first statement of the Gospel made by God to Father Abraham, saying: "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xii, 2, 3).

Nor should this surprise us—that a loving and gracious Creator, who knew the end from the beginning, created the human race with the full foreknowledge that Father Adam would be disobedient, and that his life would be forfeited, and that all his children would share in his mental, moral, and physical decline, even unto death! Why should it seem strange that this God, this All-Wise Creator should plan an opportunity for the complete recovery from the effects of sin and death for all mankind? Why have we allowed our minds to refuse the message sent to us through the angels respecting the "good tidings of great joy to all people"? Why have we allowed the Adversary to make us think for one moment that our God, instead of being gracious, loving, and kind, and helpful to his creatures, has, on the contrary, made provision for their eternal misery? Why have we allowed ourselves to believe from this standpoint that our Creator was the greatest demon of all demons—not only that he has power, but that he chooses to use that power for the eternal torture of his creatures, who were not even given a choice as respects their creation?

Ah, my dear friends, with tears and in sack-cloth, we should confess to our blindness in the past respecting the true character of God. Humbly should we beg forgiveness for having misrepresented the Holy One of Israel. But he knows that we did this in ignorance, and he is both gracious and generous to forgive us our trespasses, and to cleanse us from all iniquity according to his gracious arrangement for us, which centers in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Why the Long Delay?

Some, perhaps, would answer, Surely, if the "Cross of Christ" means the blessing of all the families of the earth, the fact would have been demonstrated somehow during the nineteen centuries since. The fact that only a comparatively small number have accepted Christ and been blessed is therefore the ground for the belief that God is merely seeking out of the world an "elect" "little flock." Surely, if he had been seeking to convert the world, he could and would have made much more progress in that direction than has been made, in all this time.

We reply that this is no argument whatever. The same God delayed to send his Son, delayed the sacrifice on Calvary for more than four thousand years after sin had entered the world. And yet, according to the Scriptures, the merit of the sacrifice of Christ is not merely intended to bring blessing to those who have lived since Calvary, but also to all nations, kindreds, peoples and tongues from the day of Adam to the end of the Age.

According to the Scriptures, the death sentence was pronounced against Father Adam, and all of his children have shared in the blighting effect of that sentence through heredity. Not only has our race been growing weaker, mentally, morally, and physically, but by the thousands of millions, they have dropped into the tomb, the great prison-house of death, from which there is no escape, except by and through the Son of God. His sacrifice for the sins of the whole world secures to him the right to the control of Adam and his race. This control, the Scriptures assure us, Christ will assume and exercise during his Millennial reign. During that thousand years all the families of the earth will be blessed, as promised.

Meantime, in the grave (sheol, hades, the hell of the Bible), where the "dead know not anything," they merely wait, or as the Scriptures declare, they "sleep in the dust of the earth." The Redeemer's authority over them is beautifully symbolized in his own words, "I am he that was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and of the grave" (Revelation i, 18). He will exercise his keys of authority and deliver all of the prisoners from the power of the tomb, and additionally from all the weaknesses and imperfections incidental to the sentence. He will bring the willing and obedient back to full human perfection, and to all that was lost in Adam and redeemed by Jesus. This, we declare, according to the Scriptures, is the Gospel in its primary sense—a message of "good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people," that in the "Seed of Abraham, all the families of the earth shall be blessed"—not only the living at the time of the establishment of the Kingdom, but all that are in their graves who shall come forth, "every man in his own order."

As I beheld in your city the great amphitheater which once witnessed the terrible sufferings of some of God's faithful ones in the past; and again, as I viewed the room once used as a torture-chamber, in the days of the Inquisition, I said, Thank God for the blessings of light and liberty, which belong to our day, and yet I reflected that even though they be different in form, there must needs be "fiery trials" for every true child of God, for it is the will of God that all should be thoroughly tested, as respects reverence, loyalty, and devotion to principle, that they may be counted worthy of a share with Immanuel in the glories of his Empire.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and beheve that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

Lesson VI.—Second Quarter, For May 8, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. xxiii, 29-35. Memory Verse, 31—Golden Text, Prov. xxiii, 32—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

It is refreshing to come to this book of God's wisdom for man's ignorance even once a year. More frequent visits would be better, but we are thankful that a temperance lesson brings us here occasionally, even though it brings us to the same portion every time. Those who study the lessons with us regularly will remember that we see here by contrast the Man of Sorrows, who suffered in our stead, wounded for our transgressions, without any cause on His part, as the only one who can save a drunkard or any other kind of sinner. Looking upon Him as the bitten Israelite in the wilderness looked upon the brazen serpent, the helpless, dying one receives life, and, continuing to behold Him at the right hand of God for us, we become changed into His image until, when we see Him face to face, we shall be like Him.

Continually beholding Him and considering His love, which is better than wine, we are constrained by His love to live no longer unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us and rose again (II Cor. v, 14, 15). As the eye affecteth the heart and the heart walketh after the eyes (Lam. iii, 51; Job xxxi, 7), so as we consider Him we will be found walking in His steps to His glory.

Contrast Noah and his wine and drunkenness and shame, David and his idleness and his looking upon what was not his with his consequent sin, Achan and his confession, "I saw, I coveted, I took," and away back to Eve and her confession, or, rather, to that which is written of her, "The woman saw that the tree was good for food and that it was pleasant to the eyes and a tree to be desired to make one wise, and she took of the fruit thereof and did eat." Had she been occupied with Him who gave her all things richly to enjoy she would not have been ensnared by the enemy. So it has been ever since. As one has said, "He has made us for Himself, and our souls are restless till they rest in Him." Where He is not known it must be a greater or less manifestation of the world, the flesh and the devil in one form or another—the card table, the theater, the horse race, gambling, drunkenness and all the lesser forms of idolatry, for whatever takes the place of God in the heart is an idol. However much of suffering these things may bring, the cry of the unsatisfied heart is: "When shall I awake? I will see it yet again." It is not to be wondered at that the people of this world who have no knowledge of God should so heartily enter into the service of their master, the devil, and enjoy to the utmost the pleasures of sin for a season, but what can be said of those who bear the name of Christ and even stand in the pulpit as His messengers and yet think it not wrong to gratify their carnal minds with cards and the theater and the novel and such like? The least that can be said is that they neither talk nor act like him who said: "What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard Him and observed Him. I am like a green fir tree" (Hos. xiv, 8). They cannot sing: "Thou O Christ, art all I want. More than all in Thee I find." Then there are those who do not indulge in openly sinful things, but are simply wise in their own conceit, cultured, refined, intellectual, religious, but unbelieving. Of such it is written, "They are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink" (Isa. xxix, 9). The strange thing is that it is possible to be an earnest worker along certain lines in the cause of temperance and yet be drunken after this fashion.

The atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, His precious blood, His great sacrifice for sin, is the only hope for the drunkard, and those who know not this remedy know nothing effectual, but are trying to patch up an old garment that cannot be mended. There are those who are seeking to put down the drink traffic, to close the saloons, to stop all evil, to purify the earth by their efforts, but there is only One who can do this, and it shall become a reality in His time and way. "What is His name and what is His Son's name, if thou canst tell?" (Prov. xxx, 4). He says, "Whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely and shall be quiet from fear of evil." "When thou liest down thou shalt not be agraid—yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet." "For the Lord shall be thy confidence and shall keep thy foot from being taken." "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Ponder the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established." "The lips of a strange woman drop as an honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil, but her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two edged sword. Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell." "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death." "The way of a fool is right in his own eyes, but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise" (Prov. i, 33; iii, 24, 26; iv, 25, 26; v, 3-5; vii, 27; xii, 15). Such are a few of the words of wisdom in this wonderful book.

We must see and hear Him only who is "the power of God and the wisdom of God" (I Cor. i, 24) and apart from whom all is folly.

KEYSTONE GRANGE.

State Master Talks on Good Roads. Law Changes Demanded.

The Pennsylvania state grange held its thirty-seventh annual session in the state college. There were over 2,000 delegates and visiting members present. The sessions were held in the auditorium of the college. The public session program included an address by State Master Creasy, J. L. Holmes, representing the college; Secretary J. T. Allman, Dr. Edward Sparks of the college and J. H. McSparran of the legislative committee of the grange. The tour through the institution, made the next day, was full of interest and benefit to the visitors. The sixth degree was conferred on a class of 400 candidates. The executive committee in its report vigorously denounced the highway department as being incompetent and demanded a reorganization of it. The grange also asked for an equitable revision of the tax laws of the state and an amendment to the banking law to permit the encouragement of national banks to loan capital on real estate and mortgages. The grange denounced the Aldrich tariff bill, the central banking scheme and ship subsidy. The grange demanded proportional representation in the national grange. It favors a representative vote for ordinary questions, the state vote to be used only when demanded. The keynote of the session was that through legislation the farmers of Pennsylvania will come into their own. State Master Creasy in his annual address urged Patrons to make an effort to have men nominated for governor and for other public offices that would give them a "square deal." He urged all to attend the primaries. Commenting on good roads and road legislation, Mr. Creasy said:

"I believe that the workings of this township road law, with the full amount of $20 or $25 per mile appropriation, will make more good roads in ten years than the department can build in thirty years. We are anxious to have the state build as many roads as possible, but we believe some additional knowledge is necessary before good roads can be built with any lasting qualities. The cost of these state roads makes it impossible for many sections to receive any benefit from them. Then, again, the annual cost of repairing these state roads is anywhere from $400 to $1,500 per mile. Some townships cannot afford this because their roads must be kept in a passable condition. Dirt roads cost on an average at least $40 per mile per year. It is impossible to use all taxes collected for building a piece of good road and neglect the balance.

"The grange position on the road question is that since all use the roads all interests should contribute toward their maintenance and repair. A tax of 1 mill on corporate and personal property would make a good road fund that is fair, and we should stand by this grange plan."

VERMONT STATE GRANGE.

Interest in the Patrons Growing and Membership Increasing.

Vermont state grange held its thirty-eighth annual meeting in Burlington. The delegates numbered over 300, the largest number present in the history of the grange. There were also several hundred members in attendance. The financial report showed the permanent fund, including interest to July 1, 1909, to be $823.51. The treasurer received during the year, including funds on hand at the close of last year's account, $13,335.16. He had paid out but $4,635.81. The report of secretary A. A. Priest showed that since the last meeting twenty-six granges had been instituted. The granges in good standing number 199, with a total membership of 18,494. The total number of Pomona granges is twenty-four, with a membership of 6,468. State Master C. F. Smith of Morrisville in his annual address advised co-operation in the matter of buying certain commodities in car lots, asked for annual training in public schools, remedial taxation measures, state support of paupers, reduced court expenses, another liquor law referendum, good roads, cow testing association, reforestation and an effort to prevent the repeal of the Grout bill in congress.

The committee on education reported in favor of a liberal policy of education and a general improvement and extension in the methods of agricultural training by increasing the facilities for the same. The committee on agriculture advocated scientific methods of farming and the abolishment of old, primitive methods. The committee also recommended that the program of the lecturer contain more agricultural topics.

Resolutions were passed favoring a referendum on the liquor question, a good roads movement, equal taxation, a parcels post, at least one agricultural high school, industrial education in schools and opposing congressional ship subsidy.

Bought $10,000 Worth of Flour.

Since the organization of Pioneer grange of Michigan a little over two years ago the members have bought $10,000 worth of flour and feed through a contract of their own making, besides patronizing state grange contracts liberally, says the Michigan Farmer.

HANS WAGNER.

The Way the Great Star Got His First Baseball Job.

"The career of Wagner in baseball has been interesting," says Hugh S. Fullerton in the American Magazine. "He was reared in Carnegie, Pa., before it was Carnegie, and he and his brothers played the game there. John—I wonder how many admirers of Honus, or Hans, know his name is John P.—was not a good player as a boy. The brothers thought he was a bit too awkward and barred him except when he wanted to pitch. His arms were tremendously long, and they assert around his home that when he was a 'kid' and his legs were even more bowed than they are now he could walk along and pick up apples without stooping. That immense length of arm has been one of the physical advantages that have gone to make him the greatest of all players. Besides, he has shoulders almost as wide as his arms are long, and he could throw a ball with terrific speed. Because he could throw so hard all the other boys boasted no catcher could hold John and thereupon made him pitcher.

"Presently Al, who was John's older brother, became a professional player and got a job playing third base for a team at Steubenville, O. George Moreland, who now is the chief baseball statistician of the country, was seized with a mania for owning and managing teams, and he had bought the Steubenville club and hired Al Wagner. Moreland needed a pitcher in the summer of 1895 and could not find one to complete his pitching staff until Al Wagner came to him and said, 'Why don't you give my brother John a chance?' 'Can he pitch?' asked Moreland. 'I don't know,' replied Al. 'But it won't cost much for you to find out.'

"Honus was playing on the lots around Carnegie, and Moreland wrote, asking him if he would sign a contract to pitch for Steubenville, and the second day thereafter there came a postal card on which was written: 'Yes. When do you want me?'

"Wagner ignored the salary question entirely, and Moreland called Al into consultation. 'What will your brother want?' he asked. 'Oh, anything will suit him,' replied Al.

"The salary limit of the Steubenville team was $800 a month, and Moreland was within $35 of the limit set by the league, so he wrote offering John Wagner $35 a month to pitch for him. The following day came another laconic card: 'All right. Will accept.'

"Moreland telegraphed Wagner to report immediately and wired a railroad order for transportation. The telegram was sent at 8 o'clock in the morning, and the first train leaving Pittsburg for Steubenville started at noon, reaching Steubenville at about 1:30. Shortly before 1 o'clock Claude Ritchey, who was playing his first professional engagement, said, 'Here comes the big Dutchman,' and Hans Wagner, covered with cinders, sauntered up to begin his baseball career."

Goethe and the Canals.

"Among all the anecdotes and stories which the fortieth anniversary of the completion of the Suez canal has called forth no mention seems to have been made of Goethe's prophetic words on the subject," says a writer in a Vienna paper. "On July 21, 1827, Goethe said to Eckermann: 'So much is certain: If a channel could be cut through the isthmus of Panama broad enough and deep enough to allow the passage of ships from the Mexican waters to the Pacific the whole world would be greatly benefited. I should like to see this, but fear I shall not live long enough. I should like also to see the English build a canal at Suez, but would probably have to live another fifty years.'" The canal became a fact forty-two years after Goethe prophesied it.—Exchange.

Animal Immigrant Disliked.

If the English sparrow could read what is now said against him the retort that the American gray squirrel is the object of quite as much protest in England would be in order. A few years ago a titled Englishman imported several pairs of gray squirrels from this country to give more animation to his woodlands. The American squirrel became fashionable, and the first colony was succeeded by many others. Now the complaint is heard that the gray coats are driving out the good old fashioned British brown squirrel and altogether deporting themselves with a strenuousness shocking to the best traditions. They are declared to be more belligerent than their British kin, fiercer and more impudent, though admittedly intelligent.—Boston Transcript.

Alexander's Airship.

At the museum at Innsbruck, in Austria, there has been for a number of years a piece of pottery in the form of a basin which experts were unable to locate as to age. It has now been determined that it was made in the twelfth century, and the great bowl is remarkable more for the design which it bears on the inner side than for its age. It shows Alexander the Great riding in an airship which is propelled by griffins. Alexander stands holding with a great rod food over the heads of the griffins.

American News Via England.

We must go to Europe to get accurate news about sport in America. For example, read the following from the London Sphere:

"Football in Great Britain is a fairly popular game among spectators, but it is nothing to the American variety. At the match between Yale and Harvard there were 400,000 people, and $250 per seat was cheerfully given by the rich."

COL. ROOSEVELT ON A PICNIC IN COPENHAGEN

Takes Automobile Trip, Visits Museum and Attends Dinner and Banquet.

COPENHAGEN, May 3.—At a banquet given tonight in the town hall in honor of Mr. Rooosevelt were a number of suffragettes who were recently elected to office. At the conclusion of the dinner they cheerfully smoked cigarettes. Mr. Roosevelt made a stirring speech, declaring that "party must never be placed above people."

Colonel Roosevelt and his party began a charming day in Denmark's capital and the adjacent country with an automobile drive to the castle of Frederiksburg.

A visit to the National Museum was made the occasion of a friendly demonstration by the students from the government school. The students met the party in the great court of the castle and, waving their college banners, shouted a welcome. Mr. Roosevelt acknowledged the greeting in a brief speech. The motor drive was then continued to Helsinnor.

The Roosevelts were accompanied by a party which occupied six more automobiles, and included Foreign Minister Schavenius and others of the cabinet, the burgomaster of Copenhagen and several other dignified personages.

The Stars and Stripes floated above the royal palace yesterday for the first time in the history of Denmark, and former President Roosevelt, in the absence of King Frederick in southern France, is the guest of Crown Prince Christian, one of the palaces being placed at the disposition of Mr. Roosevelt and his family.

The prince, presiding at a dinner last evening as the king's representative, thanked Mr. Roosevelt for coming to this court, and proposed his health, which was heartily responded to by those around the table, who included the leading personages in the kingdom, in court, parliamentary and scholarly life.

The colonel, in reply, said he had received a cordial message from the king, and thanked the prince for his hospitality. He then proposed a toast to the king and the royal family of Denmark.

THE GOVERNOR UNDER FIRE

Anti-Saloon League Organ Says He Missed Opportunity.

Under the caption: "Governor Crothers—A Shrewd Move and a Lost Opportunity," the American Issue; the official organ of the Maryland Anti-Saloon League, says:

"Governor Crothers, by his statement that the Legislature made a mistake in not passing the local option bill, puts himself in excellent shape in case he wishes to stay in politics. It is true his declaration was so late that it will be 'up' to him next time to say whether he will work for local option or talk for it soon enough to help; but it at least gives him the inside track as against anybody connected with the last Legislature. It also puts his party in a hole unless it gets right on local option.

"We believe, however, that the Governor lost a splendid opportunity. He might have managed the affair so that he would have gotten just as much out of it personally and saved his party from a serious blunder at the same time. The Governor wanted certain legislation and sacrificed every thing to that end, and, as he is well known, had to make free use of the opportunity given him by the folly of the Legislature in delaying everything until the last few days.

"But if the Governor had in the beginning come out in his message to the Legislature advocating the passage of the local option bill, instead of being obliged to rely upon a faction of his own party, the whole moral element of the State would have swung in behind anything he wanted. The League had nothing to do with public utilities, primary elections or anything of that kind, but if these measures, designed for the good of the public, had been fought by the same "gang" that was opposing the local option bill, solely because their advocate also advocated the local option bill, the League would have suggested to local option members that they could not afford from motives of self-interest and self-defense to permit the liquor men to succeed in that sort of reprisal, and the moral citizenship of the State would have rallied to the rescue. Then, instead of a slump in the Legislature, which seemed to go to pieces after the local option bill was defeated and did nothing decent except what it was clubbed into doing, the moral element in the body, which was really quite strong save for the lack of experience and aggressive leadership, would have been firmly in the saddle and the session would have closed not only with the Governor as the strongest and most popular man in his party, but he would have a rehabilitated party, instead him. The Democratic party missed a chance to intrench itself for twenty-five years when it failed to take advantage of this moral issue.

"Of course, if it is true that the Governor is in sympathy with the movement to "unload" State Chairman Vandiver and City Boss Mahon, both of whom are bitter opponents of local option, and allowed them to smash themselves on the local option issues in order that they might be more easily eliminated, why that is a horse of another color. Time alone will tell, for the Governor never will."

CHAPTER 524.

AN ACT to add five additional Sections to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "Circuit Court," and providing for speedy judgment in non contested cases.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That five additional Sections be and they are hereby added to Section 29 of Article number 12 of the code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett county," sub-title "Circuit Court," said Sections to be known as Section 29A, Section 29B, Section 29C, Section 29D and Section 29E, and to follow Section 29, which said added Sections shall read as follows:

SEC. 29A. In addition to the first day of each term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, now fixed by law the second Monday in January, February, April, May, July, August, October and November, in each year, shall be return days, and the words "return day," whenever used in this Act shall apply as well to the first day of each term as to the other return days herein enumerated.

SEC. 29B. In any suit, where the cause of action is a contract whether in writing or not, or whether expressed or implied, the plaintiff, if affidavit or affirmation be made, as hereinafter stated shall be entitled to judgment, to be entered by the Court or the Clerk thereof, on motion in writing, at any time after fifteen days from the return day to which the defendant shall have been summoned, although the defendant may have pleaded, unless such plea contains a good defense, and unless the defendant, or some one in his behalf, shall, under oath or affirmation, state that the every plea so pleaded by the defendant is true; and shall further state the amount of plaintiff's demand, if anything admitted to be due or owing, and the amount disputed; and further, that the affidavit really believes the defendant will be able, at the trial of the cause, to produce sufficient evidence to support the plea as to the portion disputed, and that he is advised by counsel to file the said plea; and such plea shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel that he is so advised that the party making such oath or affirmation, and if the copartnership or incorporation of any of the parties to the suit shall be alleged in the declaration and the affidavit to be filed therewith, as hereinafter provided; or if there shall be filed with the declaration in said cause any paper purporting to be signed by any defendant therein, the fact of alleged copartnership, incorporation and the genuineness of such signature shall be deemed to be admitted for the purpose of said cause, unless the said affidavit shall further state that the affiant knows or has good reason to believe such allegation of copartnership or incorporation to be untrue, or that the signature was not written by or by the authority of the person whose signature it purported to be. In case part of the debt or damages claimed to be admitted to be due, the plaintiff shall be entitled forthwith to an entry of judgment therefor with costs, in full satisfaction and discharge of action; provided, the amount so admitted to be due shall not be below the jurisdiction of the Court, or the defendant may pay such admitted part into Court, and then upon such proceedings shall be had as are provided by law in other cases of payment of money into Court; provided, that the Court, for good cause shown, may, by its order in writing passed at any time before judgment, extend the time for filing such plea and affidavits, which extension shall suspend until the expiration thereof the plaintiff's rights to enter judgment under this Section.

SEC. 29C. The plaintiff shall not be entitled to judgment under the preceding Sections unless at the time of bringing his action he shall file with his declaration an affidavit or affirmation, if the affiant is conscientiously scrupulous as to taking an oath, stating the time, amount the defendant is indebted to him over and above all discounts, and shall also file the bond, bill of exchange, promissory note or other writing or accounts, or a copy thereof, by which the defendant is so indebted, or if the action be founded upon a verbal or implied contract shall file a statement of the particulars of the defendant's indebtedness thereunder; if there are two or more plaintiffs, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any one of them, or if all the plaintiffs be absent from the State at the time of bringing the suit, or if the plaintiff be a corporation, the said affidavit or affirmation may be made by any agent of plaintiff or plaintiffs, or any of them, who will make further oath or affirmation that he has personal knowledge of the matter herein stated, and the said affidavit or affirmation may be made before any of the persons who may take an affidavit or affirmation to authorize the issuing of a foreign attachment, and may be certified in the same manner.

SEC. 29D. When any judgment by default shall be entered under any of the preceding Sections the Court may at any time thereafter assess the damages upon proof thereof without empanneling a jury to do so.

SEC. 29E. On all judgments entered in said Court there shall be a stay of execution until the return day or the first day of the term whichever shall first occur next succeeding the return day or the first day of the term at which said judgment may have been entered, with the right to the defendant to supersede the same for six months from the expiration of said stay as now allowed by law; provided, however that the Court may, on motion in writing by the plaintiff or his attorney, showing sufficient reasons therefor, allow an execution or attachment or other proper writ to be issued at any time after the entry of judgment as aforesaid and before the expiration of said stay.

SEC 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect upon the first day of May in the year nineteen hundred and ten.

Approved April 8, 1910.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1910. NUMBER 11

A CHILD AND HOME PREY OF THE FLAMES

Infant Boy Cremated When Fire Destroyed the Dwelling of W. H. Jacobs.

Fire, when it destroys property of monetary value and robs one of home and home comforts, is a dreadful calamity, but when a life is claimed as a prey to the flames, the calamity cannot be rightly estimated nor can the loss be repaired.

Such has befallen the family of Mr. William H. Jacobs, of District No. 11, Garrett county, when, on last Saturday, fire swept away his home and its contents and claimed as a victim the little three-year-old son of Mr. Stanley Jacobs and grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs.

The Jacobs home was located on the farm three miles west of Lonaconing. The house was occupied by Mr. Jacobs and his family and four children of Mr. Stanley Jacobs, who since the death of his wife two or three years ago has been making his home with his parents. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs and two of their grandchildren were in Lonaconing, while their son Stanley and the latter's oldest son were at a saw mill a mile or more distant from the house. The only occupants left at the home were the little boy who was burned to death and a young girl who was employed there. The latter stated after the fire that the child had been put to sleep in an upper room of the house and that later she also had fallen asleep by its side and was awakened by the dense volume of smoke pouring into the room from below. Being greatly excited she ran though the smoke and flame to the lower floor of the dwelling, forgetting until too late the child left behind.

From all the information obtainable the fire evidently started in the kitchen located just below the bedroom. The destruction of the house and all of its contents, including $700 in currency, was complete.

The charred remains of the little boy were recovered Sunday afternoon and were buried the following day.

LOCH LYNN HEIGHTS

Great Improvements Being Made and Others Contemplated.

The Mountain Spring Water Co. has the material on the ground to erect a concrete building 30x76x13 feet, at a cost of $3000. The machinery for bottling water will cost $6000. The company has a contract with a Pittsburg, Pa., firm for one car of bottled water daily. As soon as they are ready for business they will seek orders in adjacent territory. The B. & O. side track is to be extended past the bottling works to the grist mill.

The City Grist Mill is a two story building with basement 28x40, and cost $8000. It is prepared to grind wheat, corn, etc., has a capacity of fifteen tons of chop feed daily and can unload a car of grain every five hours. Mr. T. B. Doman, the proprietor, contemplates putting in a roller process for wheat this fall. He will have a roller process for this season's buckwheat. With these improvements the Heights will have one of the best grist mills in the state.

Mr. A. W. Miller, formerly of Oakland, successor to Mr. Lincoln Callis, is the village blacksmith and wagon maker. He has just completed a delivery wagon for Mr. Garthright and a buckboard for Mr. Cal Cuppett. Mr. Miller handles carriages, wagons, farm implements and fertilizers and is building up a satisfactory trade. He will make his permanent home in Loch Lynn.

Mr. Jack Griffin recently put a one room addition to his cottage.

Mr. W. H. Rathbun is erecting a two-story frame house, one block from the depot. The house will have eight rooms, including bath, hot and cold water and natural gas.

Mr. T. B. Doman is getting the material on the ground for the erection of a two story, seven room house with all modern conveniences. The location is on the five acre tract he bought for the mill site.

P. T. Garthright is putting a two story porch in front of his store building. He is also putting in two large show windows and a new entrance way. Mr. U. G. Ford has painted the building and ware house.

Messrs. Cuppett, Leighton & Co. have had their store building painted.

Mr. Lee Hayden has put two coats of paint on the postoffice building.

The barn formerly occupied by Mr. B. F. Crane has been fitted up as a ware house for the growing business of Cuppett, Leighton & Co. This firm also has a timber yard on the lots east of Squire Crane's residence.

Mr. John Halderman has charge of the improvements being made at Loch Loch Hotel. The hotel has its own electric and gas plants and will also connect with the natural gas lines, for heating and illuminating purposes. Natural gas will be used in the kitchen. The kitchen and serving room have been enlarged and a number of conveniences put in. The refrigerating space has also been increased. Mr. Parks, the care taker, is putting in flower seed and looking after the outside work. Mrs. List is booking a number of guests from the Mississippi valley.

The C. M. Rathbun Sons Co., incorporated, have the largest plant of the kind in the county. The buildings are located on a two acre tract of land. The planing mill is 32x90 feet and two stories high. One lumber shed is 40x50 feet; two are 50x180 feet. The store and office building are well equipped for the purposes intended. The firm handles about fifty cars of coal a year. Last week they received a car of red cedar shingles from the state of Washington. The freight charges on this car was $350. The firm handles everything necessary to build a house from the foundation to the completed building, a full line of hardware, paints, gas stoves and fixtures, all kinds of roofing, etc. Mr. C. J. Rathbun is president and W. C. Rathbun is secretary and treasurer of the company. This plant has been under the management of the Rathbun family for the past quarter century.

The city council has decided to put in four additional street lights. They have also taken into consideration the question of sewerage.

The Baptist church is to be painted.

Councilman Hewitt is having his house painted.

Mr. P. T. Lipscomb has put in a cement walk from his porch to the side walk equal to anything to be found in the largest cities of our land.

Mr. Ed Rathbun has purchased the Loch Lynn livery stable from Mr. Wm. Seebold and is preparing to furnish the public with the best service possible.

The greatest need of this village is houses for rent. A dozen houses could be rented to all year people and to summer visitors. Several houses have two families living in them, because there is not a house for rent in the town.

Our painters, paper hangers, gas fitters, plumbers and carpenters are all busy putting the town in fine shape for for the summer. There is no boom, just a steady growth such as might be expected from a town possessing the advantage of Loch Lynn Heights.

DR. JOHN E. LEGGE MET WITH PAINFUL ACCIDENT

"Back Fire" Of Automobile Engine Resulted in Breaking His Right Arm

Tuesday evening about six o'clock Dr. John E. Legge, of Oakland, was painfully as well as seriously injured near Deer Park, where he had been called on professional business, when he attempted to crank his automobile. The engine "back fired" which drove the crank against his right arm near the wrist joint and resulted in a fracture of the large bone and dislocation of the smaller bone.

Mr. E. E. Friend, register of wills, had accompanied Dr. Legge to Deer Park and they were preparing to return to Oakland when the accident occurred. Mr. Friend being unable to drive the automobile home, telephoned into Oakland and Mr. Scott T. Jones drove his machine to the point where Dr. Legge had been injured and brought him home in record time. The fracture was reduced by Dr. Hinebaugh and later Dr. Legge went to Cumberland where he became a patient in the Western Maryland Hospital, returning to Oakland yesterday.

While Dr. Legge will be unable to do any surgical work for some weeks to come his office practice will not suffer as a result of his injury.

Dr. Legge was accompanied to Cumberland by Mr. Harland L. Jones, who returned to Oakland yesterday morning, reporting that he left the injured man resting comfortably.

STEYER MINE HAS RESUMED OPERATIONS

Under New Ownership and the Output Will be increased.

The mines at Steyer, this county, which have passed through the courts and are now owned by a number of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Maryland capitalists, resumed operations Monday of this week with Mr. A. Spates Brady, of Fairmont, in charge.

The mines will be operated by a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia to be known as the Branard Coal Company, with Mr. Brady as president and manager and Mr. Fred. C. Leonard, of Cowdersport, Pa., W. R. Offutt and J. C. Renninger and a number of Pennsylvania capitalists interested. The new company has a capital of $60,000 paid up and will have unlimited financial backing to successfully operate and market the product of the mines.

Mr. Brady is known as a successful coal operator having been engaged in such work in and about Fairmont for a number of years past.

The coal taken from the Steyer mines is of a superior quality and has found a ready market in years gone by. Bad management on the part of the former owners and operators brought about financial difficulties and it was sold a year or more ago to the bondholders.

COMET SEEN WITH NAKED EYE

Beautiful Spectacle Presented, With the Moon and Venus as Supernumeraries.

Providence favored those who got up early enough Friday morning to catch a glimpse of Halley's comet.

The sky above the Eastern horizon was beautifully clear, and the heavenly visitant could be seen with the naked eye without difficulty. From 3:30 to 4 o'clock it was in all its glory, yet it formed only one feature of the marvelous picture presented in the Eastern heavens.

On the low horizon a dark streamer of cloud, with its upper edges faintly purpling in the glow of the ascending sun, marked with keen definiteness the clear blue of the upper sky. Just above the horizon line shone the waning moon, its perfect cycle of a rich golden dullness. Just above and to the north of it burned with unwonted splendor the glorious planet Venus, and a little distance above and to the north of her could be seen the comet, its tail easily defined, its color being of that pale, milky hue as of the full disc of the moon when seen shining in the daytime in a blue sky.

All three of the heavenly objects could be observed by the eye in a single glance. The picture was inspiringly beautiful. It was seen from many points. The same delightful picture of heavenly splendor will be visible in the Eastern sky before sunrise every morning up to and including May 18th, the comet increasing in brilliancy a little more each day.

The tail was traced fully 12 degrees, which means that its visible length is 16,000,000 miles. The comet was then 60,000,000 miles from the earth.

In Memoriam.

Harry Hetriech, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Melchor Hetriech, departed this life at Bittinger on Thursday, May 5, 1910, at the tender age of 2 years, 11 months and 9 days, after a brief season of suffering from an attack of pneumonia. As the fragrance of the rose is spent in its brief season of blooming, so the sweetness and innocence of this child-life was spent in a brief bright life on earth, and as we hope to behold the beauty and inhale the fragrance of the rose in another bright, glad spring time, so also we shall meet and greet the departed darling in the unfading sunshine of a better and brighter world on the golden shores of eternity.

One childish voice we hear no more
Filling the day with its song,
Since baby has passed to that fair, bright shore
To join it that angel throng.

One brief span of three short years.
Such unto him was given—
Be still, sad heart, forego thy tears,
Thy child is safe in heaven.

One vacant place, one empty spot,
In a home and a mother's breast—
Sad heart submit and murmur not,
For God knew what was best.

COURTHOUSE YARD IMPROVEMENTS

Nearly Five Thousand Dollars Will Be Expended on Grounds.

At the meeting of the Board of County Commissioners held Monday and Tuesday of this week the contract for erecting concrete walks, retaining walls and pavements around the court house yard as well as the approach to the court house from Third street, was awarded to W. A. Liller, of Keyser, West Va., at $4,894.

Four other firms submitted bids for the work, among them being two local contractors, Messrs. J. W. Cogley & Son, who bid $4,450.50, and H. W. Kahl, whose figures read $4,981. Messrs. Holbert & Spedden, of Fairmont, bid $6,989 and H. F. Smith, of Piedmont, W. Va., submitted figures covering the contract at $5,955.

Under the terms of the contract the work is to be completed within sixty days. The specifications contemplate the widening of the walk fronting the court house to about twelve feet and a walk leading to the building from Third street of ten feet in width. Along the north side of the lot and leading around the building both front and rear walks are also to be built and are to be finished off with white cement resembling in some respects white marble.

The improvement to the new temple of justice promises to be a marked one and will afford the public more convenience.

The Board, prior to adjournment Tuesday, appointed Dr. J. E. Legge health officer and physician to the jail.

Yesterday morning the members of the Board, accompanied by Clerk A. G. Ross went to District No. 8 to meet the County Commissioners of the adjoining West Virginia county for the purpose of arranging for the erection of a bridge which is to span the Potomac River and to be erected at the joint expense of the two counties.

FROST WAS FATAL TO GARRETT COUNTY FRUIT

Thousands of Dollars Loss Sustained By Local Farmers and Orchardists.

The freeze of last Thursday morning when the thermometer reached 22 degrees F., followed on Friday and Saturday mornings by recurrences of this state of weather, blasted the hopes of all Garrett countians for a fruit crop which promised to be the heaviest in the history of the county, as the apple, pear and cherry trees were in full bloom, presenting a picture of rare beauty and bringing to mind the good things to be enjoyed when the crops were gathered.

In addition to killing the fruit buds and blossoms, early vegetables were also nipped and in many instances these will have to be replanted. Some farmers have expressed their doubts as to the safety of the wheat crop. From all appearance it seems to have been pretty generally frozen, which will add very materially to the damage sustained by the succession of frosts of the last three days of the past week.

A Story of Graustark

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

A hundred yards from the gate they crawled ashore and made their way up over the steep bank into the thick, wild underbrush.

They stealthily stripped themselves of the wet garments and after no end of trouble succeeded in getting into the dry substitutes. Then they lowered the wet bundles into the water and quietly stole off through the brush to the king's highway, a mile or two above town.

"We take this path here for the upper road," finally said Hobbs. "It's a good two hours' walk up the mountain to Rabot's, where we get the horses."

At 4 o'clock, as the sun reached up with his long red fingers from behind the Monastery mountain, Truxton King and Hobbs rode away from Rabot's cottage high in the hills, refreshed and sound of heart. Rabot's son rode with them, a sturdy, loyal lad, who had leaped joyously at the chance to serve his prince.

Now let us turn to John Tullis and his quest in the hills. It goes without saying that he found no trace of his sister or her abductors. On the fifth day a large force of Dawsbergen soldiers, led by Prince Dantan himself, found the fagged, dispirited American and his half starved men encamped in a rocky defile in the heart of the wilderness.

That same night a Graustark mountaineer passed the sentinels and brought news of the disturbance in Edelweiss.

In a flash it occurred to John Tullis that Marlanx was at the bottom of this deviltry. The abduction of Loraine was a part of his plan! Prince Dantan advised a speedy return to the city. His men were at the command of the American. Moreover, the prince himself decided to accompany the troops.

Before sunrise the command, now five or six hundred strong, was picking its way down the dangerous mountain roads toward the main highway. Fifteen miles below Edelweiss they came upon the company of soldiers sent out to preserve order in the railroad camps, which was, of course, a further re-enforcement.

The sound of shooting in the distance struck their ears. Instantly the entire force was alert. A dozen shots were fired in rapid succession, then single reports far apart. The steady beat of horses' feet were now plain to the attentive company. There was a quick, incisive call to arms. A squad stood ready for action.

A small group of horsemen came thundering down the defile. Three minutes after the firing was first heard sentries threw their rifles to their shoulders and blocked the approach of the riders.

"THANK GOD, WE'VE FOUND YOU!"

A wild, glad shout went up from the foremost horseman. He had pulled his beast to its haunches almost at the muzzles of the guns.

"Tullis!" he shouted, waving his hat.

John Tullis ran toward the excited group in the road. He saw three men, one of whom was shouting his name with all the power in his lungs.

"Thank God, we've found you!" cried the horseman.

"King!" exclaimed Tullis, suddenly recognizing him. A moment later they were clasping hands.

"What has happened, King? Where have you been? We looked for you after your disap"—

"That's ancient history," interrupted the other. "How soon can you get these troops on the march? There's not a moment to be lost."

"Good glory, man, tell me what it is! What has happened? The prince—what of him?" cried Tullis, grasping King's arm in the clutch of a vise.

"He sends his love and rescinds the order of exile," said King, smiling, then seriously: "Marlanx has taken the city. It was all a game, this getting rid of you. The prince and the others are besieged in the castle. Thank God, we got to you in time! Back here a couple of miles we came upon a small gang of robbers. We had a bit of shooting, and, I regret to say, no one was bagged."

"Loraine—where is she, King?"

"Don't tremble like that, old man. She's safe enough in the castle. Oh, it was a fine game Marlanx had in his mind!"

While the troopers were making ready for the march Truxton King and Hobbs related their story to eager, horrified groups of officers.

Finally the battalion, augmented by the misguided company from the deserted railroad camps, moved swiftly into the defile, led by young Rabot. Truxton King rode beside the brother of the girl he loved, uttering words of cheer and encouragement.

"The Countess Ingomede—has anything been heard from her?" asked Tullis. He had been thinking of her for days and nights.

"Well, nothing definite," said King evasively

CHAPTER XIX.

THE RETURN.

FROM the highlands below the Monastery Captain Haas and his men were able to study the situation in the city. The impracticability of an assault on any one of the stubborn, well guarded gates was at once recognized. A force of 700 men, no matter how well trained or how determined, could not be expected to surmount walls that had often withstood the attack of as many thousands. The wisdom of delaying until a few thousand loyal though poorly armed countrymen could be brought into play against the city appealed at once to Prince Dantan and John Tullis.

Squads of men were sent without delay into the hills and valleys to call the panic stricken, wavering farmers into the fold. John Tullis headed the company that struck off into the well populated Ganlook district.

Marlanx, as if realizing the nature of the movement in the hills, began a furious assault on the gates leading to the castle. The watchers in the hills could see as well as hear the conflict that raged almost at their feet, so to speak.

The next morning Captain Haas announced to his followers that Marlanx had begun to shell the castle. Big guns in the fortress were hurling great shells over the city, dropping them in the park. On the other hand, Colonel Quinnox during the night had swung three Gatling guns to the top of the wall; they were stationed at intervals along the wall, commanding every point from which an assault might be expected.

That night recruits from the farms and villages began to straggle into the camp. They were armed with rifles, ordinary shotguns and unique blunderbusses, swords, staves and aged lances. All were willing to die in the service of the little prince. By the close of the second day nearly 3,000 men were encamped above the city. Late that night John Tullis rode into camp at the head of a great company from the Ganlook province. He had retaken the town of Ganlook, seized the fortress and recruited the entire fighting strength of the neighborhood. More than that, he had unlimbered and conveyed to the provisional camp two of the big guns that stood above the gates at the fortress.

Marlanx trained two of his big guns on the camp in the hills. From the fortress he threw many futile shells toward their place of shelter. They did no damage; instead of death, they brought only laughter to the scornful camp. Under cover of night the two Ganlook cannons were planted in a position commanding the southeastern city gate. It was the plan of the new besiegers to bombard this gate, tearing it to pieces with shot.

The knowledge that Marlanx had no big guns except those stationed in the fortress was most consoling to Tullis and his friends. He could not destroy the castle gates with shells, except by purest chance. He could drop shells into the castle, but to hit a gate twenty feet wide? Never!

Truxton King was growing haggard from worry and loss of sleep. He could not understand the abominable, criminal procrastination. He was of a race that did things with a dash and on the spur of the moment. His soul sickened day by day. John Tullis, equally unhappy, but more philosophical, often found him seated upon a rock at the top of the ravine, an unlighted pipe in his fingers, his eyes intent upon the hazy castle.

"Cheer up, King. Our time will come," he was wont to say.

Then came the night before the proposed assault on the gates. The guns were in position, and the cannonading was to begin at daybreak. Truxton was full of the bitterness of doubt and misgiving. Was she in love with Vos Engo? Was the count's suit progressing favorably under the fire of the enemy? Was his undoubted bravery having its effect upon the wavering susceptibilities of the distressed Loraine?

The sound of a voice in sharp command attracted his attention. There was a bright moon, and Truxton could see other pickets hurrying to join the first. A few moments later several trespassers were escorted through the lines and taken directly to headquarters—a man and two women, King observed.

John Tullis was staring hard at the group approaching from the roadway. One woman walked ahead of her companions. Suddenly he sprang forward with a cry of amazement.

It was the Countess Ingomede.

Her arrival created a sensation. In a moment she was in the center of an amazed circle of men. Tullis, after his first low, eager greeting at the edge of the fire circle, drew her near to the warmth giving flames. Prince Dantan and Captain Haas threw rugs and blankets in a great heap for her to sit upon. Every one was talking at once. The countess was smiling through her tears. "Make room for my maid and her father. They are colder and more fatigued than I," she said, lifting her tired, glorious eyes to John Tullis, who stood beside her. "We have come from Balak. They suffered much that I might enjoy the slender comforts I was so ready to share with them."

"Thank God, you are here!" he said in low, intense tones. She could not mistake the fervor in his voice nor the glow in his eyes.

"I knew you were here, John. I am not going back to Count Marlanx. It is ended."

"I knew it would come, Ingomede. You will let me tell you how glad I am some day."

"Some day, when I am truly, wholly free from him, John. I know what you will say, and I think you know what I shall say in reply." Both understood and were exalted. No other word passed between them touching upon the thing that was uppermost in their minds.

Food was provided for the wayfarers, and Tullis' tent was made ready for the countess and her maid.

The countess' story was soon told. Sitting before the great fire, surrounded by eager listeners, she related her experiences.

She had been seized on the night of the ball as she started across her father's garden, and escape had become possible only through the aid of Josepha and the girl's father. Farmers' wives told them of the newly formed army and of its leaders. She determined to make her way to the camp of those who would destroy her husband, eager to give them any assistance that her own knowledge of Marlanx's plans might provide.

One bit of information she gave created no end of consternation among the would be deliverers of the city. It had the effect of making them all the more resolute; the absolute necessity for immediately regaining control in the city was forced upon them. She told them that Count Marlanx had lately received word that the Grand Duke Paulus was likely to intervene before many days, acting on his own initiative, in the belief that he could force the government of Graustark to grant the railway privileges so much desired by his country. Marlanx realized that he would have to forestall the wily grand duke. If he were in absolute control of the Graustark government when the Russian appeared he, and he alone, would be in a position to deal with the situation.

"The grand duke may send a large force of men across the border at any time," said the countess in conclusion. "Count Marlanx is sure to make a decisive assault as soon as he hears that the movement has begun. He had hopes of starving them out, thus saving the castle from destruction, but as that seems unlikely his shells will soon begin to rain in earnest upon the dear old pile."

Truxton King was listening with wide open ears. As she finished this dreary prediction he silently arose to his feet and, without a word to any one, stalked off in the darkness. Tullis looked after him and shook his head sadly.

"I'll be happy on that fellow's account when daybreak comes and we are really at it," he said to Prince Dantan, who knew something of King's affliction.

But Truxton King was not there at daybreak. When he strode out of the camp that night he left it behind forever.

The unfortunate lack of means to communicate with the occupants of the castle had been the source of great distress to Captain Haas. If the defenders could be informed as to the exact hour of the assault from the outside they could do much toward its speedy success by making a fierce sortie from behind their own walls. A quick dash from the castle grounds would serve to draw Marlanx's attention in that direction, diminishing the force that he would send to check the onslaught at the gates.

Truxton King had all this in mind as he swung off down the mountain road, having stolen past the sentries with comparative ease. The danger from Marlanx's scouts outside the city was not great; they had been scattered and beaten by Haas' recruiting parties. He stood in more danger from the men he would help, they who were the watchful defenders of the castle.

It must have been 2 o'clock when he crossed the king's highway, a mile or more above the northern gates, and struck down into the same thick undergrowth that had protected him and Hobbs on a memorable night not long before.

At 3 o'clock a dripping figure threw up his hands obligingly and laughed with exultation when confronted by a startled guardsman inside the castle walls and not more than fifty yards from the water gate. He shouted a friendly cry as he advanced toward the man, calling out his own name.

Ten minutes later he was standing in the presence of the haggard, nerve racked Quinnox, pouring into his astonished ears the news of the coming attack. The colonel lost no time in routing out the sleeping guardsmen and reserves and in sending commands to those already on duty at the gates.

When the sun peeped over the lofty hills he saw inside the gates a restless, waiting company of dragoons ready for the command to ride forth.

Meantime King had crossed the grounds with Colonel Quinnox on the way to the castle. He was amazed, almost stupefied, by the devastation that already had been wrought. A dozen or more balls had crashed into the facade. Yawning fissures, gigantic holes, marked the path of the ugly messengers from Marlanx. Nearly all of the windows had been wrecked by riflemen who shot from the roofs of palaces in and about the avenue. Two of the smaller minarets were in ruins. A huge pillar in the lower balcony was gone. The terrace had been plowed up by a single ricochetting shell.

"Great God!" gasped King. "It is frightful!"

"They began bombarding yesterday afternoon. We were asked to surrender at 3 o'clock. Our reply brought the shells, Mr. King. It was terrible. After the first two or three shells we found places of shelter for the prince and his friends. They are in the stone tower beyond the castle. The most glorious courage is shown. Count Vos Engo guards the prince and the ladies of the household. Alas, it was hunger that we feared the most. Today we should have resorted to horse's flesh. There was no other way. We knew that relief would come some day. John Tullis was there. And now it is today! This shall be our day, thank God!"

Attendants sped to the tower, shouting the battle tidings.

The prince came tumbling down the narrow iron stairs from his room above, shouting joyously to Truxton King. No man was ever so welcome. He was besieged with questions, handshakings and praises. Even the Duke of Perse, hobbling on crutches, had a kindly greeting for him. Tears streamed down the old man's cheeks when King told him of his daughter's safe arrival in the friendly camp.

But just now Truxton was staring at the narrow staircase. Vos Engo and Loraine were descending slowly. The former was white and evidently very weak. He leaned on the girl for support.

Count Halfont offered the explanation. "Vos Engo was shot last week through the shoulder. He is too brave to give up, as you may see. It happened on the terrace. There was an unexpected fusillade from the housetops. Eric placed himself between the marksmen and Miss Tullis. A bullet that might have killed her instantly struck him in the shoulder.

King never forgot the look in Loraine's eyes as she came down the steps. Joy and anguish seemed to combine themselves in that long, intense look.

She gave him her hands. The look in her tired eyes went straight to his heart. Vos Engo drew back, his face set in a frown of displeasure.

"My brother?" she asked, without taking her gaze from his eyes.

"He is well. He will see you today."

"And you, Truxton?" was her next question, low and quavering.

"Unharmed and unchanged, Loraine," he said softly. "Tell me, did Vos Engo stand between you and the fire from the"—

"NOR HAVE I BROKEN MY PROMISE TO YOU."

"Yes, Truxton," she said, dropping her eyes as if in deep pain.

"And you have not—broken your promise to him?"

"No; nor have I broken my promises to you."

"He is a brave man. I can't help saying it," said the American, deep lines suddenly appearing in his face. Swiftly he turned to Vos Engo, extending his hand. "My hand, sir, to a brave man!"

Vos Engo stared at him for a moment and then turned away, ignoring the friendly hand. A hot flush mounted to Loraine's brow.

Vos Engo's response was a short, bitter laugh.

CHAPTER XX.

THE LAST STAND.

SOON after 5 o'clock a man in the topmost window of the tower called down that the forces in the hills were moving in a compact body toward the ridges below the southern gates.

One hundred picked men were to be left inside the castle gates with Vos Engo, prepared to meet any flank movement that might be attempted. Three hundred mounted men were selected to make the dash down Castle avenue straight into the camp of the sharpshooters. It was the purpose of the house guards to wage a fierce and noisy conflict off the avenue and then retire to the castle as abruptly as they left it, to be ready for Marlanx should he decide to make a final desperate effort to seize their stronghold.

The dash of the 300 through the gates and down the avenue was the most spectacular experience in Truxton's life. He was up with Quinnox and General Braze, galloping well in front of the yelling troops. These mounted carbineers, riding as Bedouins, swept like thunder down the street, whirled into the broad, open arena beyond the duke's palace and were upon the surprised ruffians before they were fully awake to the situation.

They came tumbling out of barns and sheds, clutching their rifles in nerveless hands, aghast in the face of absolute destruction. The enemy, craven at the outset, threw down their guns and tried to escape through the alleys and side streets at the end of the common. Firing all the time, the attacking force rode them down as if they were so many dogs.

After ten or fifteen minutes of this desultory carnage it was reported that a large force of men were entering the avenue from Regengetz circus. Quinnox sent his chargers toward this great horde of foot soldiers, but they did not falter, as he had expected. On they swept, 2,000 or 3,000 of them. At their head rode five or six officers. The foremost was Count Marlanx.

Quinnox saw now that the Iron Count was determined to storm the gates and gave the command to retreat. Waving their rifles and shouting defiance over their shoulders, the dragoons drew up, wheeled and galloped toward the gates.

Scarcely were the massive portals closed and the great steel bars dropped into place by the men who attended them when a low, dull explosion shook the earth as if by volcanic force. Then came the crashing of timbers, the cracking of masonry, the whirring of a thousand missiles through the air. Before the very eyes of the stunned, bewildered defenders, dismounting near the parade ground, the huge gates and pillars fell to the ground.

The gates had been dynamited.

Then it was that Truxton King remembered. Marlanx's sappers had been quietly at work for days drilling from the common to the gates. It was a strange coincidence that Marlanx should have chosen this day for his culminating assault on the castle. The skirmish at daybreak had hurried his arrangements no doubt, but none the less were his plans complete. The explosives had been laid during the night. The fuses reached to the mouth of the tunnel across the common. As he swept up the avenue at the head of his command, hawk faced and with glittering eyes, he snarled the command that put fire to the fuses.

A moment later his vanguard streamed through the aperture and faced the deadly fire from the driveway.

At last they began to advance across the grassy meadow. When one man fell under the fire of the guardsmen another rushed into his place. Three times the indomitable Graustarkians drove them back and as often did Marlanx drag them up again, exalted by

How to Make Sauces.

Sauce making is next to salad making, and the woman not skillful in this bit of culinary work is losing every day, for a sauce can be used with left-over foods. There are all kinds of sauces—lemon sauce to pour over dry cake, mint sauce for roast lamb, parsley and butter sauce for meat, tartar sauce for oysters, etc. A sauce that is served with broiled steak is made with the acid juice saved from a can of tomatoes. This is boiled with bay leaf, parsley and "kitchen bouquet." It is enriched with butter and sometimes slightly thickened with flour. A fish sauce is made with melted butter, lemon juice and finely ground parsley, seasoned with white pepper and salt. It is served either in the shell of a hard boiled egg or placed in a little paper patty pan for the purpose. Lemon or orange sauce is made like a thin blanc mange, chilled and poured over cake. It can be made perfectly white if the yolks of eggs are not used. Some merely use lemon juice, water, butter and cornstarch slightly sweetened. This makes a clear sauce. An onion sauce is tempting on some meat. The onions are fried brown, removed from the pan, and stock is added to the grease with mustard and lemon juice.

How to Wash Crocheted Articles.

Crocheted and knitted articles can be washed satisfactorily by sewing the articles in a pillow slip and then washing them in warm soapy water. The bag must be squeezed between the hands to make it clean, but it must not be rubbed between the hands. When you think the articles must be clean press all the water that you can out of the bag, but do not wring it. Then hang the bag in the air to drain and when it is perfectly dry rip open the pillowcase, and the article will be found in excellent condition. If the wool article is a baby's carriage blanket or a straight shawl it will be improved by drying it on a flat surface. It may be spread on the table or on the floor if clean papers or a clean cloth is spread on the floor first. The article should be patted until it is perfectly straight and flat and should then be left until it is perfectly dry.

How to Purify Rainwater.

Rainwater is one of the best washes for the complexion in existence, but clean rainwater is often hard to get, for after every shower the water from the barrels is black with soot, etc., washed off the roof. To prevent this and to secure clean rainwater, get a bit of coarse, close canvas and make a little bag of it. Into this bag put some clean gravel, and tie the bag on to the end of the pipe, so that the water will have to pass through the gravel before reaching the barrel. The gravel makes a capital filter, and if it be changed from time to time and the barrel be kept clean you will always have clean soft water when required for any purpose.

How to Lengthen Life of a Pillowcase.

Every housewife knows how soon pillowcases wear out, but it took a remarkably clever woman to see at a glance how she could prolong their lives. When her pillowcases are beginning to show signs of wear she takes out the seam at the bottom of the case and turns it round, so that the side seams come directly up in the middle. Then she reseams the bottom. It is easy to see that this will bring the side of the pillow under the head, where the wear would come, so the pillowcase will last longer. A better idea could not be found, and who minds sewing up a pillowcase seam?

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of Garrett county a sum of money out of the State School Tax.

WHEREAS, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, especially upon Garrett county of the State School Tax, and the inability without larger increase of County Taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett county, the largest county in the State in area, as to render school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in more central parts of the State; and

WHEREAS, It has been unanimously recommended by the State Board of Education that such sum of money should be paid out of the State School Fund to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county; therefore

SECTION 1. UNIQUE METHOD OF RENOVATING "GREENBACKS"

Treasury Department Proposes to Clean and Reissue All Currency.

Uncle Sam, by reason of necessity, has been forced into adopting methods whereby the expenses of the government are curtailed. His latest scheme, which it is thought will effect a saving of from $300,000 to $400,000 annually, is to wash all currency issued by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing that finds its way back to the Treasury for redemption. Heretofore all forms of "greenbacks" and "yellowbacks" have been acerated after redemption by the Treasury Department. Now, however, it is propose to vitalize some of this currency so that it may be turned back into the channels of trade, and at the same time be just as good as the new paper currency which comes fresh from the Bureau of Engraving each day.

The idea was suggested to Treasury Department officials by Director Ralph of the Bureau of Engraving and printing. He detailed Burgess Smith, a chemist in his department to carry out the necessary work in perfecting a system of laundering old money. Finally, the plan was considered practical and a committee of subordinate officers of the treasury formed for the purpose of looking into the subject. Director Ralph says that Uncle Sam's present laundry is not quite in perfect order. The mechanical equipment now installed performs the work but it is thought a more satisfactory system can be devised. For that reason, Mr. Smith has been placed in charge of the experimental work and has been assigned to work out, not only a practical system but one that will safeguard the handling of soiled currency. The practical side of the matter has, it is said, been attained, but the other side remains to be developed.

In making the paper currency at the Bureau a system of checking is employed which is as complete as human ingenuity can devise. Each die, roll and plate has a number in sequence stamped upon it. Each employe receiving a piece of steel to work on is charged with the same until it is returned to the custodian of the vaults. In the office of the custodian complete records and the history of 18,000 dies, 18,000 rolls and 18,000 plates are on file. Once a year the custodian's records are checked by a committee from the Treasury Department. It usually takes three months to accomplish the task. After the records are audited, all obsolete dies, rolls and plates are called for and ordered destroyed. The same minute system of checking obtains in every department of the Bureau and only twice in the history of the constitution have plates and unfinished bills been reported missing.

As a one dollar bill passes through about 500 hands before it become legal tender, a system of checking is absolutely necessary. The same system, it is said, will not be required when the Bureau starts laundrying currency. While incentive to steal an unfinished note is not as great as it would be to obtain a real note, it is all the more necessary that great safeguards be taken when the operatives handle the real money. In washing the legal tender, transferring it from one operator to another. Director Ralph believes that greater safeguards will be imperative. Just now the committee of the Treasury and Mr. Ralph are planning a system whereby it will be impossible for a bill to go astray while being handled by the operatives. As soon as this is perfected and the mechanical devices installed, Uncle Sam will employ enough laundresses to rehabilitate his worn-out currency as fast as it is turned into the Treasury Department, making it again the equal of a fresh bill and at the same time saving the government much money.

At present no attempt will be made to revive the completely worn-out bills. It will, however, wash and resize all notes that are received at the Treasury Department from banks and other financial institutions for redemption, the fibre of which has not been broken. When the notes are counted in the Treasury, and completely worn out notes will be placed in a separate pile from the merely dirty currency. The latter will be sent to the Bureau and the other notes to the redemption division where they will be macerated. Director Ralph estimates that fully 40 per cent. of the notes returned to the Treasury—about $2,000,000 a day—will be sent to the Bureau for laundrying. This mean a saving of $1200 a day without taking into consideration the costs of operating the laundry. At present it costs the government one and one-half cents to print a bill, but in washing the currency the cost will be very small.

To wash the currency thoroughly operators will have to sort out the paper money, place it on the copper screen trays, which in turn are placed in copper cages and then placed in a solution of soap and water. As soon as they are thoroughly saturated they are taken out of the solution and subjected to an antiseptic bleaching process. They are then resized, rolled and placed in packages for their return to the Treasury. After passing through their bath, the bills present a nice clean appearance and look and feel like new crisp tender. All stains are removed and small holes in the paper are filled up with the sizing. The ink is not harmed a particle in the washing process.

GERMANY'S AIRSHIP FLEET

Travel By Compass At Night—Ten Thousand Airship Soldiers.

"I saw at Cologne," said M. Cappazza, "four 'dirigibles,' one 'Zeppelin' two 'Parseval' and one 'Gross.' They were all sheltered in a single shed, which still had room for another 'Parseval' of 7,000 cubic feet, and, without the 'Zeppelin,' could contain in all six airships of that size. For 14 days these airships maneuvered with the utmost precision, and what is even more important they proved their capacity for making their flight by night, when it is clearly impossible to fire upon them and when the camp fires of the enemy betray the number and disposition of the forces. The Germans think nothing of the sending up a 'dirigible' during the night, and when the reconnoissance has been made the airship steers by the compass back to the point from which it started with extraordinary accuracy. A powerful searchlight is placed beside the shed, and when the balloon comes within its range it serves as a guide.

"What struck me most," M. Capazza continued, "was the variety of the balloons, which have no resemblance one to another or of the airships built outside Germany. This diversity of type is a great tribute to the open-mindedness of the German Government, or rather of the Emperor himself, to whose efforts the German aerial fleet is undoubtedly due. Each constructor was left to carry out his own ideas without official interference, and there is no official type. Those airships built by the army officers are on exactly the same footing as those built by private constructors. Germany," said M. Capazza, "realizes that to purchase a successful dirigible it is necessary to order it to fulfill certain definite conditions and not to dictate to the constructor the lines on which it is to be built."

M. Capazza dwelt with great emphasis on the land organization which enabled all necessary supplies to be provided and repairs carried out in the shortest possible time, no matter where in the German Empire an airship might land. Two thousand men a year are trained in the handling of airships and the authorities have now 10,000 expert soldiers at their disposal. "In fine everything has been foreseen and carried out on a prearranged plan in perfect order."

SAW GEN. GEORGE CUSTER AFTER THE MASSACRE

Soldier Who Was on Detail Tell of Savagery of Sioux Braves.

Passing the evening of his eventful life in peace and comfort at his orchard home in Klickitat county, Wash., southwest of Spokane, is Benjamin Gallentine, frontiersman and Indian fighter with the United States regulars in Dakota, Montana and Wyoming from 1870 to 1876. He enlisted at Wheeling, W. Va., in 1870, and with a company of recruits was sent to Camp Hancock, then located at Bismark, N. D., being afterward shifted to Fort Lincoln, where General Custer was in command of the Seventh Cavalry.

Gallentine was on the battlefield the day after the Custer massacre on June 25, 1876, and this is his version of the affair.

"When the Sioux broke over the limits of their reservation and were committing ravages in Montana and Wyoming the government sent out a force of regulars from St. Paul under Generals Terry and Crook. There were 19 companies of infantry in the command. I was placed with the Seventeenth Infantry.

"The Seventh Cavalry and companies of Infantry left Fort Lincoln in June, 1876, with General Terry in command, for the Little Big Horn country, where several thousand Indians, led by Sitting Bull, were on the warpath, and crowded back against the Big Horn mountains and River.

"Being with Terry I was not far from the scene of the Custer battle. Evidently Custer was led into a trap. After advancing nearly the entire length of the Indian camp thousands of yelling Sioux and other tribes appeared from ambush and started their deadly work against the little band of cavalrymen. The battle lasted nearly two hours, and of Custer's command not a soul escaped death.

"While the battle was going on Reno and Bentine were fortifying on the bluffs at the head of the Indian village. After wiping out Custer's band the Indians, carrying Custer's battle flags, made a rush for the fortifications and killed all but 15 or 20 cavalrymen in each company.

"I was on the battleground with Terry the second day after the massacre and was detailed to help bury the dead, which took us two days. We found every soldier stripped and mutilated. Custer evidently was not touched after he fell. We found a small riding whip placed across his nose, probably an acknowledgment of his bravery. However, his brother, Capt. Tom Custer, fared differently. His heart had been cut out and laid across his breast. It was the belief that this was done by Rain-in-the-Face, a Sioux chief, and thereby hangs a tale.

"Rain-in-the-Face killed an English lord and a veterinary surgeon of the Seventh Cavalry in 1873. He kept under cover for a year, but was finally captured by Tom Custer at Standing Rock, S. D., ane taken to Fort Lincoln for trial. While in the hospital he made the threat that he would cut Tom's heart out before he died. He escaped and two years later undoubtedly made good."

HAGNER ASPIRES TO CONGRESS

County Attorney Alexander R. Hagner, of Hagerstown, has announced he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from the Sixth district. In speaking of his candidacy, he said:

"My political ambition has, since 1896, when I came within one vote of the nomination, been to represent the Sixth Maryland district in the Congress of the United States. To be fortunate enough to secure that nomination and election would be an honor for which any citizen ought to feel justly proud. I fully realize what it would mean, and in entering the contest I wish to announce to the Republicans of this district I do not propose to make any unseemly scramble for the nomination.

"In my disappointments I am sure no one can justly say that my conduct has not at all times been consistent with what was right from every political standpoint. All of the counties in the Sixth district have representative citizens holding political offices of considerable profit and trust, save Washington. For example, Garrett has the Surveyor of the Port; Allegany, Congressman for the last twelve years, two of the Circuit Court judges and other minor positions; Frederick, the National Bank Examiner; Montgomery, innumerable appointments at the hands of the general Government, while this county seems to have been left out in the distribution of political patronage. Hence, Washington county, which I hope to have back of me, ought to be honored by the nomination of a candidate this time for Congress.

"The Republican party, if in control in the next Congress, will have many great questions to solve, and the Representative elected by the Republicans in the Sixth Maryland district, whoever he may be, must expect to give an account of his stewardship to the people.

"The tariff, I have no doubt, needs a revision, but that revision must come at the hands of the party which practically created that system and has continuously maintained it, rather than at the hands of the Democracy, an open antagonist. The preservation of the forests, public lands and water powers owned by the Government demand the most careful attention and consideration at all times at the hands of Congress that the same may not be unlawfully wrested from the people. I believe in a strict enforcement of all law upon the statute books, to punish those who have secured by illegal means any of those rights and the enactment of such additional laws by Congress to meet cases not now provided for, so that those valuable rights and possessions may be fully restored to the people.

"If I am nominated by the Republican Congressional Convention, which meets in Frederick on June 9th next. I will make an aggressive campaign from start to finish, entirely fair, however, to my opponent, and I will leave nothing undone consistent with fairness to bring victory to the party that entrusts to me so great an honor.

WHY NOT CLEAN UP?

In our last issue we suggested that the Mayor appoint a "cleaning up" day in the near future for the town and called attention to the unsightly condition of several vacant plots of ground. So far as we know there has been no action taken along this line up to the present time, but we believe that the Mayor will appoint such a day before long.

We want to suggest that the cemetery be given some special attention before Decoration Day. We understand that the observance of this holiday will be on a larger scale than for some years. The band is practicing special music for the occasion, and the parade of "The Boys in Blue" will take place as usual.

Each lot owner owes it to the memory of his loved ones who sleep there to do what he or she can to make the cemetery as clean and as pretty as possible.

THE FIRE COMPANY.

We are still looking for a practice drill by our fire company.

We think we have good material and good apparatus; but fireman must be trained. Every minute counts after a fire is once started.

Excellent practice can be had on the streets any time without wasting water. See how long it takes to run a hundred yards with a reel, connect a length of hose to the fire plug and get a stream of water through it.

Has the fire company, or the town provided some means of sounding an alarm without delay?

Better to have these things prepared before the first fire occurs.

INGRATITUDE.

If there is any one quality possessed by man more detestable than another it is that of ingratitude and the best place of any to discover it is in the political arena. John Jones is an office seeker every time an opportunity presents itself. His friends struggle and perhaps sacrifice their own interests to help gratify his ambition. While they do this they are treated by him as though his loyalty to them knew no bounds. He loses out finally. It is then the true character of the man comes to the surface. His former supporters and friends are, as he thinks, of no further use to him, and he is ready to say and, by his conduct, often does say they can go the way of the wicked. Their past efforts are not appreciated in the least by the selfish benefactor of their deeds. Almost anyone who has noted the movements of men can readily recall such instances. The quicker such an imposter is found out and halted, the better for the community in which he moves.

All men cannot and should not agree on everything, but the moment you disagree with this species of political demagogue in matters affecting his political aggrandisement, that moment all the favors you have granted him, whether many or few, sink into everlasting oblivion and his eternal condemnation is visited on you. It is a source of pleasure to most men to do a favor to those who appreciate it and somewhere in whose make up at least a degree of gratitude is to be found, but it is extremely discouraging where neither of these can be found, even by the use of a magnifying glass.

ROADS AND THE COST THEREOF

The somewhat lively, not to say acrimonious, interchange of opinions between State Senator Blair Lee and Chief State Roads Engineer Crosby has served to direct attention anew to the cost of the highways as they have been constructed or are yet to be built under contracts approved by the State Road Commission. Senator Lee strenuously backed the application of the Montgomery Board of County Commissioners in the proposal to construct a six-mile section of road in the county under the supervision of an engineer to be selected by the commissioners at a cost of $10,000 less than the state engineer estimated as the probable cost of the work.

In the recently given out interview Senator Lee is accredited with the following statement: "Comparing the roads Mr. Crosby built last summer with those built by Mr. Knight last summer, the latter appears conclusively as the more capable constructor, for his roads are not only less expensive to construct, but there was no places in his three and a half miles that failed this spring, while there were a number of failures in Mr. Crosby's roads."

Perhaps a single year's comparative test cannot be accepted as determining which is the more durable work. Possibly the cheaper roads built under county supervision, while good short-term roads, will not maintain their repute in the long run. However that may be, it is a matter of general interest that Montgomery county has been doing some good road building on her own account and upon a different system and at less cost than the roads built under contracts placed by the state commission. Montgomery is a rich county and can afford, if she will, to expend $100,000 or so in building roads according to her own ideas, and if the county will only do this a valuable object-lesson in comparative schemes of road-building will be furnished. And as the business of road-building is but in its beginning, the demonstration which Montgomery may furnish will not come too late for practical purposes.

THE DANGEROUS FLY.

It is the season when the housewife must be reminded about the housefly. Nor are the precautions against its dangers and the practice of its prevention restricted to the woman of the house. The warfare against this pest is man's work also.

The entomologist of New York, Dr. E. P. Felt, is in accord with similar experts in other states, as well as with the counsel issued by the federal experts in entomology in the vernal call for the minimizing of this winged carrier of disease. These alarms are timely and are needed. The mathematics of this insect's multiplication stagger formulas. The theoretical offspring of one domestic fly in a single summer are calculated in the quadrillions. But these possibilities need not discourage destruction. The fly cannot travel far. The normal radius of its life is restricted to less than a quarter of a mile, although it may be carried farther on carts or other vehicles. Their breeding places exist chiefly because of indifference. The care and cleanliness of domestic animals have much to do with the development of this danger. Sanitation, particularly in the disposal of refuse, is imperative.

APOLOGY FOR BAD FAITH.

Senator Bailey, of Texas, is disposed to enlarge on the theory which has been growing on him for a year or more against the declaration of party platforms as a guide to party policy in legislation. In the Senate last week he denounced the theory of adhesion to such declarations as "nothing more or less than a proposition to transfer the the legislative power of this republic from the bodies where the Constitution lodged it over to irresponsible political conventions."

This is moonshine. The legislative power is not transferred to "irresponsible political conventions" because no legislators are bound by the party platforms except those who accept and stand on the platforms of their respective parties. But in all representative government it is a settled principle that legislators are elected by the people with a view to the policies they stand for. How shall the people know what policy in government the men they vote for will represent?

No intelligent man demands a slavish adhesion to the letter of party platforms where new conditions arise to change the method of reaching the professed aim. But when on long-defined issues the party policy is declared, and men elected on that policy proceed to break the pledges, it reduces political action to the science of gaining votes on false pretenses.

Senator Bailey, and others as prominent as he, have given signal illustrations of that sort of politics. His present counterblast against national platforms is a sophisticated apology for bad faith.

Joy in the Jungle.

The lion lolls in the jungle
And combs his tangled mane,
As he lazily blinks
And cheerfully thinks
It will never come back again.

The rhinoceros rolls in his wallow
And grunts in his sloppy lair,
As he loudly blows
And really knows
It has gone away from there.

The elephant strolls at his pleasure
Through the still and leafy wood,
And he shakes his fat
Since he's certain that
It has disappeared for good.

The hippopotamus splashes
The sedgy swamp to a foam
As he learns with joy
From a nigger boy
It has struck the trail for home.

The camelopard stretches his larynx
And lets loose a grateful whoop
That knocks out the blues
When he hears the news
It has really skipt the coop.

There is rest all over the jungle;
In the open and in the lair
They are lying around
With their ears to the ground
To hear when It lights elsewhere.

TOO MANY RAIDS ON RAILROADS

Political Agitation Reaching Danger Point.

However the railroads may view the Congressional aspect of things as relating directly to them—and there is no question as to the concern it is giving them—other than railroad men see in the situation that which isn't assuring from the standpoint of the public at large. No one would accuse Willis J. Abbot of being predisposed to favoring railroads, his long and intimate association with the great commoner and his writings for years establishing for him the reputation of a publicist in the broadest sense of the term.

"One of the most prominent manufacturers of railroad supplies in the United States drifted into Washington the other day," Abbot writes, "and talked to me and Chairman Mann, of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, somewhat in this fashion:

" 'In 1907 the attacks of the Roosevelt administration on the railroads stopped railroad construction all over the country. Nothing was bought by a road except what was actually necessary for its immediate operation. Steel rails that had been purchased were stacked and held for the time when returning prosperity and congressional quietude would permit their being laid. Near my plant on the Pacific Coast there were, in 1908, nearly two miles of locomotives on side tracks, exposed to the weather, out of commission idle.

" 'Now the political agitation which led to the entire cessation of railroad activity in 1907, and produced the panic, is again being pressed to the danger point. It means the cessation once more of railroad building, betterment of equipment, and, as railroads are the greatest employing and purchasing corporations in the United States, their prosperity or adversity is reflected in the labor market of the nation.

" 'It isn't so much that fair control of the roads is opposed either by them or by financial leaders, but the continual attacks upon them in Congress antagonize investors and seriously limit the road's borrowing capacity. That necessarily limits their ability to build new cars, to straighten and improve their lines, to replace timber trestles with bridges of steel or stone. And incidentally it closes opportunities of employment to some hundreds of thousands of American workmen.'

"After this outburst of pro-railroad oratory," continued Abbot, "I went to the document clerk in the Capitol and asked for a full set of the bills intended to regulate railroads which had been introduced and printed at the present session of Congress. The package received in return weighed about ten pounds; the number of bills which specifically referred to railroad regulation was fifty-eight; the number which by indirection affected the railroads was so great that the clerk has not yet given me copies of all.

"Among the latter is a bill providing that cans of oysters and crabs shipped over interstate lines must be stamped with the weight of the oyster or crab meat contained therein. This proposition is put up to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Another one is that no apples shall be sent in closed packages, else they be considered to be misbranded within the meaning of an act prohibiting * * * * transportation of adulterated or misbranded food. That, too, puts it up to the railroads to determine how the harmless apples of commerce shall be packed and carried.

"There is an element of humor in the fact that one bill is intended to prevent the entrapping or shooting of carrier pigeons, which would seem to indicate that by and by the aerodrome would become subject to the powers of that committee.

"The Interstate Commerce Committee holds, so far as legislation in concerned, the prosperity of the railroads of the United States in its hands. What it shall recommend to the present House of Representatives will almost assuredly become law. The law so made will affect, according to the last statistical abstract, 1,500,000 railroad employes, and I am reliably informed that an equal number of workingmen are engaged in the various industrial establishments which furnish railroad supplies. Yet to this committee have been presented in a two months' session, 58 bills ranging from the protection of carrier pigeons to the President's plan for the creation of a commerce court.

"Between these extremes—the one ridiculous, the other serious—is a mass of proposed legislation bearing on railroads. It would be no stretch of imagination to say it was a mass of anti-railroad legislation. That few of the 57 or more varieties of bills stand any chance of passage is not important. They are drawn for home consumption and the constituents down home when they receive copies of the proposed measures are convinced that their representative, at least, is free from the venal taint of railroad influence.

"There are places in the South where they need and deserve railroad stations. There are places out in the Northwest and in the Southwest where they want better railroad facilities—new spurs into the valleys being opened as a result of the government activities in the reclamation service.

"Of course, the need for railroad regulation is notorious. In the House the other day a member asked the pertinent question why pottery could be shipped from Liverpool, England, to Chicago at less charge for freight, than from the potteries at Liverpool, O., to Chicago? The answer was practically the old joke—'because we need the money.' In Berlin, a year ago, I met a man from Gloucester, Mass., who was doing a thriving business selling fish glue, which he could deliver in Germany at less cost than the freight from Gloucester to Chicago. These curious features of railroad rate-making are difficult of explanation to the general public, and are responsible for much of the anti-railroad sentiment.

"However, they are not to be corrected by indiscriminate raids on railroad credit—by such a bill, for example, as that prohibiting roads from borrowing money for more than one year without leave from the Interstate Commerce Commission. That measure alone, if enacted, would go far toward putting business where it was in the dark days of 1907."

BITTINGER.

The announcement, on last Thursday evening, May 5th, of the sudden death of little Harry Hetriech, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Melchor Hetriech, cast a perceptible gloom over the community. The child was nearing his third year and the sudden death was the result of an attack of pneumonia, which continued but a few hours before it culminated in death. The entire community feel a profound sympathy for the parents in this hour of bereavement. The interment was made in the Lutheran cemetery, on Sunday morning, after impressive services conducted by Rev. Alvin Yugel.

Several killing frosts visited this section last week, and as a result it is thought that much of the fruit has been destroyed.

Lewis Deifenbaugh, of Grantsville, with Postmaster Michael Nathan and daughter, of the same village, passed through here last Sunday morning in an automobile enroute to Oakland.

Frank Miller, of Waterloo, Iowa, spent one day last week with his uncle, Thomas B. Wiley, of this place.

Attorneys Julius C. Renninger and E. H. Sincell, of Oakland, spent a night in this village last week.

School Commissioner C. E. Ellithorp, of the village, attended a meeting of the School Board in Oakland last week.

Harry Wiley finished his duties as census enumerator for this district last week and entered the Normal class at Oakland last Monday, for a term of instruction.

Senator Lee strenuously backed the application of the Montgomery Board of County Commissioners in the proposal to construct a six-mile section of road in the county under the supervision of an engineer to be selected by the commissioners at a cost of $10,000 less than the state engineer estimated as the probable cost of the work.

In the House the other day a member asked the pertinent question why pottery could be shipped from Liverpool, England, to Chicago at less charge for freight, than from the potteries at Liverpool, O., to Chicago? The answer was practically the old joke—'because we need the money.' In Berlin, a year ago, I met a man from Gloucester, Mass., who was doing a thriving business selling fish glue, which he could deliver in Germany at less cost than the freight from Gloucester to Chicago. These curious features of railroad rate-making are difficult of explanation to the general public, and are responsible for much of the anti-railroad sentiment.

"However, they are not to be corrected by indiscriminate raids on railroad credit—by such a bill, for example, as that prohibiting roads from borrowing money for more than one year without leave from the Interstate Commerce Commission. That measure alone, if enacted, would go far toward putting business where it was in the dark days of 1907."

BITTINGER.

The announcement, on last Thursday evening, May 5th, of the sudden death of little Harry Hetriech, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Melchor Hetriech, cast a perceptible gloom over the community. The child was nearing his third year and the sudden death was the result of an attack of pneumonia, which continued but a few hours before it culminated in death. The entire community feel a profound sympathy for the parents in this hour of bereavement. The interment was made in the Lutheran cemetery, on Sunday morning, after impressive services conducted by Rev. Alvin Yugel.

Several killing frosts visited this section last week, and as a result it is thought that much of the fruit has been destroyed.

Lewis Deifenbaugh, of Grantsville, with Postmaster Michael Nathan and daughter, of the same village, passed through here last Sunday morning in an automobile enroute to Oakland.

Frank Miller, of Waterloo, Iowa, spent one day last week with his uncle, Thomas B. Wiley, of this place.

Attorneys Julius C. Renninger and E. H. Sincell, of Oakland, spent a night in this village last week.

School Commissioner C. E. Ellithorp, of the village, attended a meeting of the School Board in Oakland last week.

Harry Wiley finished his duties as census enumerator for this district last week and entered the Normal class at Oakland last Monday, for a term of instruction.

COUNTY SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS ORGANIZE

E. A. Browning Reelected Secretary. Treasurer and County Superintendent

The Board of School Commissioners of Garrett county organized on last Saturday at the office of the Board in Oakland when Mr. Peter H. Yost, the recently appointed Republican member of the Board qualified before Clerk of the Court E. Z. Tower. Mr. Yost succeeding Mr. George E. Bishoff, of near Oakland, who was a member of the Board for upward of twelve years.

The organization of the Board was effected by the reelection of Mr. Charles A. Deffinbaugh, editor of the Mountain Democrat, as its president; Dr. E. H. Bartlett, clerk; William R. Offutt, attorney, and Mr. E. A. Browning, secretary, treasurer and county superintendent.

Aside from the organization and the appointment of trustees for the various schools in the county, no other business of importance was transacted. The trustees appointed for the Oakland schools were Messrs. Joseph E. Harned, G. Arthur Fraley and John W. Hart, who succeeds themselves.

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Helbig was knocked down by a team of horses on the crossing an the intersection of Liberty and Green streets last Saturday morning and suffered slight bruises to his shoulder and a bad knock on the back of his head when he came in contact with the pavement. Fortunately the child was not run over by the vehicle to which the horses were attached, otherwise he may have been seriously hurt.

Mr. E. H. Sincell went to Hagerstown Monday afternoon where, as attorney for the owners, he closed up a deal in Pocahontas county (W. Va.) timber lands involving considerably over a quarter of a million of dollars. The property was transferred by deed from the Chaffey-Wilson Lumber Company to the Maryland Lumber Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia, and composed of Maryland capitalists, who will at once begin the manufacture of lumber on the tract.

Messrs. Floyd Duckworth and Erwin Fazenbaker, of near Westernport, were in Oakland last Saturday when they placed before the Board of School Commissioners the great need for a new school house in their community. The present building is a small log affair, erected shortly after the Civil war at a cost to the mother county of Allegany of only $34, since which time the total for repairs has been almost nothing. The present state of the house is deplorable. It is inadequately furnished and from a sanitary standpoint unfit for school purposes or anything else.

FOR RENT—After May 1st, a 6-room cottage, with stable on lot. Kitchen and one bedroom furnished if desired; apply at this office.

As Miss Lottie Loar was descending the front steps at the residence of Mr. A. D. Naylor on Fourth street last Monday afternoon she lost her balance and fell headlong down the steps to the cement pavement below, striking upon both elbows. At the time Miss Loar thought she was uninjured aside from a few braises on her arms but when she arrived at her home and attempted to open a gate leading to the houses, she found that she had lost all use of her arms and hands and has been suffering intense pain since. Miss Loar's many friends hope for her speedy recovery.

Something new in Talcum Powder; Babcock's Corylopsis of Japan, the most popular Talcum on the market today. Hamill-Gonder Pharmacy.

Tuesday was walking cake day at S. Lawton & Sons' store, where a demonstration of the Majestic Range is being held all this week. The cake was baked in a Majectic Air-Tight Oven Range in the morning, and in the afternoon at 3:30 a large oak plank eight feet long, was placed over the cake and nine ladies stood on the plank, crushing the cake from its original thickness of about eight inches to about one and one-half inches, and in five minutes the cake rose to its original height, when it was cut and served to all present. This may sound like a fairy tale, but the ladies present will vouch for the truth of the above. The demonstration will continue all week. Drop in at Lawton's and see these ranges and have a cup of coffee and lunch free.

A New Potato Disease.

The wart disease is a new enemy of the potato crop which is attracting great attention in Europe, and which is liable to be introduced into the United States at any time. It affects the tubers, forming large, rough, unsightly warts, and, in severe attacks, completely destroys the crop. Once the fungus gets into the soil it is impossible to grow a crop of potatoes on the land for several years. It has been introduced into Nova Scotia and Canada by seed potatoes sent from Europe.

Modern Home Plumbing.

The sanitary equipment of the home is an all-important matter, and there is no other feature which will afford as much comfort and be so conducive to perfect health as good plumbing, while on the other hand, poor plumbing is a constant menace to the health of the occupants as well as the cause of everlasting annoyance and discomfort.

It is well to keep in mind when building the fact that yourself and family may be required to occupy the home for a long period without new plumbing being installed, therefore the few extra dollars expended to obtain the best will in reality be HEALTH ASSURANCE.

We respectfully invite you to call and inspect our samples and receive an estimate on your plumbing.

Louis Broadwater, who lives near Avilton, sold a horse last Friday, for which he received $130. Louis tucked the money away in a bureau drawer and on Saturday he went to Merrill. Coming home late Saturday night he found the front door open and his wife in bed and asleep. Louis went to bed and slept like a man who has made a good horse trade. Sunday morning Louis and his family prepared to go to church and he found that he had no change in his pocket and went for the wad he got for the horse and found that it was gone. The money was stolen Saturday night after Mrs. Broadwater went to sleep and before the arrival of Louis. There is suspicion, but no clue. The money was taken by some one who knows the premises well.—Cumberland Times.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

PASTOR RUSSELL IN LONDON

"HEREAFTER"

"There Shall Be No More Death, Neither Sorrow Nor Crying, Neither Shall There Be Any More Pain; For the Former Things Are Passed Away" (Revelation xxi, 4).

London, Eng., May 8.—Albert Memorial Hall, the largest and most renowned auditorium in the world, having a capacity of ten thousand, was crowded this evening to hear Pastor Russell, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, who delivered an address on "HEREAFTER" under the auspices of the "International Bible Students Association." Taking the above text, he said:—

Mankind instinctively look for and believe in a future life; to the majority of minds it does not seem logical that death ends all. So surely as we believe our Creator to be all-wise, we must assume that he has some purpose in connection with our race, not attained as yet, something beyond the capacity of attainment in the present life, under present conditions. Even without a Divine revelation, therefore, we would be justified in anticipating a life beyond the tomb, but speculation upon such an important subject, of such vital interest, is not necessary. We are glad that our Creator has given us in the Bible clear intimations respecting his purposes, in relation to mankind in the future. Nevertheless these purposes were kept secret, not revealed until the first advent of our Redeemer. Thus the Apostle declares that "Christ brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." It was invisible before, not brought to light, and its terms and conditions could not be clearly discerned.

Without any Divine revelation, we see a sufficiency on every hand to cause astonishment and to call anxiously for explanations. We see the world of mankind weak and depraved, sighing, crying and dying. "Transitory" is written upon everything human. The Scriptures assert that we of today are living under "a reign of sin and death," and that this dominion has lasted for over six thousand years. Why are these things so? Is it not true that there is but the one God? Is it not true that his creatures on the spirit plane are perfect, that in heaven there is neither sighing, nor crying, nor dying? There is no reign of sin and death there, no hospitals, no asylums, no jails, no penitentiaries—all is harmony, perfect, pure, in full accord with the Almighty. Why are conditions so different on this earth of ours?

Because One Man Disobeyed.

The Bible alone offers us an explanation of the situation. It tells us that God created our race as pure, as perfect, as holy, as happy as the angels, and that he placed our first parents in Eden, surrounded with everything beautiful and desirable. It explains that our fall from that perfection into mental, moral and physical decrepitude came as a result of disobedience to God. It explains that "the wages of sin is death," that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," that all the souls produced by Father Adam and Mother Eve are dying souls, in consequence of our sin-inheritance. This is bad enough, sad enough; and, as was intended, our hearts cry out after the living God, for his mercy and compassion, that he would save us from death, save us from destruction. The answer of Divine Justice is, that we are unfit to live—that our Creator graciously designs that sinners shall not be immortal. But, hearkening, we hear a message assuring us that God has looked down in compassion and "heard the groanings of the prisoners." He foreknew our helplessness under the reign of sin and death, and in his Plan made provision for our case in advance—"before the foundation of the world."

After four thousand years of this reign of sin and death, exhibiting Divine Justice without mercy, our Creator revealed the wonderful features of his Program. He sent forth his Son, "that he, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man"—not for the Elect Church merely, but for all the families of the earth. Hence it is written that Jesus "gave himself a ransom for all;" and again, that "He is the propitiation (satisfaction) for our sins (the Church's) and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

So, then, the death penalty pronounced against our race, which would have reduced Adam and his posterity to the hopeless condition of beasts, as respects eternal life, God had already intended to set aside through the sacrifice of Christ. Nevertheless, he allowed sin and death to reign from Adam to Moses, and from Moses to Christ, and from Calvary to the present. He has contented himself with laying the foundation for the world-wide blessing, in the death of the Redeemer. He intends ultimately, the Bible assures us, to offer complete deliverance from sin and death, to Adam and all of his children. The arrangement is that, "since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive. But every man in his own order" (I Corinthians xv, 21-23).

"Doctrines of Demons."

The truth about this matter is severe enough; it shows forth Divine Justice, intertwined with Divine Mercy and Love. We admit our present unworthiness of life eternal and feel grateful for proposed assistance through Christ, but our great Adversary, operating through ignorance, and superstition and fear, seized the opportunity to deceive us and misrepresent our Creator by bringing in what St. Paul designated, "doctrines of demons" (I Timothy iv, 1). These have been promulgated, not merely in heathen lands, but amongst the civilized. These false doctrines have tended to alienate the hearts and minds of humanity from God and his revelation; they have put a barrier between God and his creatures.

These "doctrines of demons" are presented from various standpoints, but they are alike in one respect; namely, they all teach that God deceived our first parents when he told them that the "wages of sin is death." These "doctrines of demons" assert the contrary, that man cannot die, but must live somewhere to all eternity. Thus on the basis of man's fears, this doctrine that God thrust immortality upon his creatures, the demons built up for us a theory so horrible as to be nauseating and terrifying to every sane and healthy mind. These "doctrines of demons" have been promulgated far and near, and with various colorings, but in essence they are all the same. They have come down from the "dark ages," represented in all our creeds, Catholic and Protestant.

Our Catholic friends have developed this thought to a nicety. They tell us that of those who die, only a mere handful are fit for heaven and go there immediately. They tell us that the most reprehensible class, heretical rejectors of Divine Truth, will be sent to a hell of eternal torture where they will never die. They assure us, however, that the number who will receive this extreme punishment is small in comparison with the race as a whole. They tell us that the majority, Catholics and Protestants, civilized and heathen, are unfit for heaven at death, and likewise not deserving of eternal torture, and that thus the great mass of mankind, nine out of every ten, go at death to Purgatory, there to suffer for centuries or for thousands of years in expiation of sins, and for purification of their souls, that they may be eventually fit for Heaven and its blessings. Our hearts rebel at such a view of the "hereafter." While giving our Catholic friends, and our own forefathers who were Catholics, credit for being as sincere as ourselves, we conclude that the light of our day, and the light of our intelligence, will not permit us to believe and rejoice in such a view of the "hereafter" as this. We say to ourselves, Surely the Great God has something nobler than this in reservation for his creatures.

Protestant Views Worse.

What shall we say of the "Hereafter" from the standpoint of our Protestant creeds? How do these compare with the Catholic views foregoing—how much worse? When our forefathers thought they had found something erroneous in the teachings of Papacy, when they concluded that Purgatory was not to be found in the Bible, they heroically determined to cast it out of their creeds. But alas! When discarding it, they did not realize that they were making a bad matter worse. They held on to the "doctrine of demons," that God had created man so that he could not die, and could not be destroyed, and so they proceeded to interpret matters along that line. Realizing the Scripturalness of the proposition that only the saintly were fit for heaven, and rejecting the theory of Purgatory, they logically consigned all except the saintly thereafter to eternal torture. Alas! How inconsistent it is; how strange that we ever thought Divine Foreknowledge, Wisdom, Justice, Mercy, Love and Power should have created man to the number of thousands of millions, with the foreknowledge and fore-intention and desire that they should suffer an eternity of torture.

Parting of the Ways.

Thus, my dear hearers, you with myself and others of the intelligent people of the world, find ourselves today in a most trying position. Our hearts have repudiated the doctrine of eternal torture as being un-Christlike, unworthy even of a devil. We can believe neither in a Purgatory of centuries, nor in eternal torture as a consequence or penalty for Adam's disobedience in eating of the forbidden fruit, nor as a penalty upon his children for not living perfect lives when they were "born in sin and shapen in iniquity" and "prone to sin as the sparks to fly upward." Our hearts cry out for the living God and the true light upon his dealings.

Under this awakening intelligence, thousands of noble men and women are leaving God's Book, and leaving all of the Churches to go after Theosophy, Christian Science, and especially after Evolution, with its companion teaching of Higher Criticism—that the Bible is thoroughly unreliable. We are living now in a time of great falling away from the faith; few intelligent people any longer believe in the Bible. Our colleges and universities—and, sad to say, our theological seminaries—are busy turning out unbelievers—infidels. Nor are these people wicked or immoral in their unbelief; they are as well-meaning as ever, but have lost their way. They reject the Bible because they believe it to be the foundation of the various inconsistencies in their creeds; they are stumbling for lack of knowledge; they cannot believe that man's hereafter is one of centuries of suffering, or of eternal suffering.

Seeking the Old Paths.

The Lord, through the Prophet Jeremiah, tells his people to "Inquire for the old paths," and this is the appropriate lesson for each of us. We do, indeed, need to discard the creeds of the past, not because they contain nothing of truth, but because error commingles in them to such a degree as to make them perversions of truth as a whole. We need to take off the creedal spectacles with which we have hitherto been studying God's Word, and come to the Bible afresh, to hear its message. Thus coming, many of us have been surprised as we have found its purity and consistency and harmony with itself. We have already intimated the Bible view of man's death sentence, and the Bible presentation that Christ died for our redemption, and the Bible assurance that as a consequence, in "due time," "the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth." We have also the Bible assurance that not merely the living will profit by the provision of God's grace, but that "all that are in their graves shall come forth" to share in and to be blessed by the favorable conditions which God will by and by inaugurate.

The Bible declares that the penalty for sin is being experienced by humanity at the present time—the death penalty—and that the redemption price of Christ's death is sufficient for the sins of the whole world. It declares that on account of this redemption, ultimately the resurrection of the dead shall take place—"all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth." It is because of the Divine intention that there shall be a resurrection of the dead that the Bible everywhere, both in the Old and New Testaments, speaks of those who have died, both good and bad, as being "asleep," and the promise is that "They that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."

Nor will they come forth to similar conditions of sorrow that now surround us all. On the contrary, the First Resurrection is to be composed of the holy, the saintly, and they are to be associated with their Redeemer as his Bride and Consort, to assist in delivering and restoring mankind. Later the imperfect, who have not had their full trial, the great mass of mankind, will be brought forth, that they may learn the ways of righteousness, that they may learn to know God, and Jesus Christ, and in due time be uplifted out of the conditions of sin and death. Then will come the time mentioned in our text, The Hereafter for the world. How joyful is the message, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, nor dying; for the former things have passed away." Ah, how different is God's proposition of a general uplift of the worthy and their assistance back to perfection—to all that was lost in Adam. How different is this from the "doctrines of demons," which have perplexed us, which have divided the Church of Christ into numberless sects and parties, and which have almost driven us from Christ and the Bible.

Life, Not Immortality.

Thus we see that God's provision in Christ for mankind is that each individual member of our race may yet, if he will, attain to everlasting life through the merit of Christ's sacrifice, and through the operation of his Kingdom. Each may attain to all that was lost in Adam and redeemed at Calvary; namely, human perfection and Edenic blessedness. But additionally, note the blessings which God has provided for the Church—a spiritual blessing, a change of nature. These are called out now from amongst men, that they "might be a kind of first-fruits unto God of his creatures" (James i, 18). These are to be a "royal priesthood," associated with Christ, now in the priestly work of sacrificing, presenting their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, which is their reasonable service. And when the sacrificing shall be finished, they are to be joined with Christ in the glories of his Kingdom, and share with him in the work of blessing mankind. These are the "elect" who, in God's providence, shall by and by uplift and bless the non-elect. These are the ones to whom will come the promised "glory, honor and immortality." Our Redeemer brought to light, life eternal for the world, and he also brought to light immortality for the Church.

Let us then be glad and rejoice in the "Hereafter" that God has provided, and let us search his Word more diligently and more carefully than ever, that we may know the things which God has freely given to us. Thus we may avail ourselves of our present privileges and opportunities and by and by hear the Master's "Well done—enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

WASHINGTON LETTER

Debates in Congress—The President's Trip—Horse Show in Monument Grounds.

The past week in Congress has been rather tame—a little oratorical bandiage by Senator Rayner of Maryland, urging the insurgent Republicans in a playful way to align themselves where they belong, with the Democrats. This was answered by Senator Dolliver of Iowa, who insisted that the insurgent Republicans were the real party and that they would continue to uphold the banner. Debates on various bills representing the administration's conception of the Roosevelt policies are proceeding languidly in both Houses, but more interest is manifested in the Pinchot-Ballinger investigation where Mr. Ballinger himself has recently appeared as a witness, than in the debates in Congress.

The President has left the city for a few days. It no doubt affords him great relief to get away from the care and strain of office. It is said that the coming undertaking of the tariff board in ascertaining the cost of production of commodities at home and abroad, will be the subject of several of the President's speeches while away. It is also said that he will not apologize for the Payne-Aldrich law and will point out that he is endeavoring to follow a scientific method of arriving at future tariff revision downward in accordance with the Republican platform on which he was elected.

Idle and social Washington is at this moment much interested in a horse show which will be held in the Monument Grounds and near Potomac Park, which locality is becoming a point of interest throughout the country as the probable site of the International Exposition to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal, which it is now said will be completed in 1914 instead of 1915. There is much interest in military and naval circles with reference to the proper protection of this canal by fortifications. The ex-Secretary of Treasury, Shaw, and other writers on military and naval subjects urging ship subsidies, have shown by figures that the United States is lamentably weak as compared with Japan, not actually in fighting ships, for in this respect we are much stronger than the little island kingdom on the other side of the Pacific, but in trained sailors, of which Japan has at least a hundred thousand more than we have, and in supply and transportation ships for the army and navy, of which she has a hundred to our one. She greatly overmatches us. It is not everyone that knows when our great fleet of battleships recently sailed around the world, they were supplied with coal and provisions by the ships from other countries. This could not be done in time of war. No neutral ship under the international code would dare to help us in any way, and thrown on our own resources neither our army nor navy would be able to reach the Philippines in two years, while Japan could land a hundred thousand men there in two weeks. Our situation will be improved as far as home defense is concerned when the Panama Canal is opened and our fleet can get into a position to defend the Pacific slope harbors without the circuit of Cape Horn. It has been understood all along that the canal will be amply fortified. The few who think it should be unguarded might look into what Germany is doing for the Kiel Canal and England for the canal at Suez and also for the Strait of Gibraltar. The Mediterranean Sea at its entrance at Gibraltar and its exit at Port Said may be said to be one long British canal or strait. In case of war no enemy could either enter or leave the great Mediterranean Sea. The great guns mounted high on Gibraltar fully command that magnificent entrance, while powerful searchlights turn night into day and make it impossible for an enemy to sneak in by hugging the Morocco coast, not more than 18 miles away. Our government will doubtless build powerful defenses with disappearing guns of heaviest calibre and high powered searchlight apparatus at both ends of the Panama Canal.

TIGERS IN INDIA.

Strange Hindoo Beliefs Concerning the Man Eaters.

In India the traditions of folklore are numerous and strange. Among those pertaining to the tiger the following are the most peculiar: The uneducated Hindoo (and he is in the great majority) believes that the ghost of a man killed by a tiger rides on the head of the beast that slew him to warn him of of danger and to guide him to new victims. It is declared that God provides for the tiger's daily wants to the amount of 1 rupee a day—that is to say, if the tiger kills a calf worth 6 rupees he will not be allowed another victim for five days.

Eating the flesh of a tiger is suppose to give one great courage and alertness, but the whiskers must first be singed off the beast or his spirit will haunt the man who fed off him, and he is likely to be turned into a tiger in the next world.

The following incident really occurred in a small Indian village in the interior: One of the villagers was unfortunately killed by a tiger. The police investigated the accidental death and rendered this verdict: "Pandu died of a tiger eating him. There was no other cause of death. Nothing was left of him save his bones and some fingers, which probably belonged to either the right or left hand."—Washington Star.

MEN OF THE CUMBERLAND

Mountaineers Who Live Close to the Soil in Almost Inconceivable Isolation.

These "contemporary ancestors," as President Frost has called the mountaineers of the Cumberland, live in an almost inconceivable isolation. A few of them have never seen "yon side" the cove in which they were born. Close to the unproductive soil they live, hard by their own firesides they hold, and they speak as their grandfathers spoke when they came from England. A mountain child and I were climbing a steep path together when a snake darted out across our way. The boy threw a stone at it and the ugly creature flattened its head and puffed out its throat until the brown skin looked mottled. "Lo'ye, hit's right pied," said the boy. Richard Grant White tells us that a hundred years ago "hit" was a form of the pronoun still often heard. Throughout Appalachian America, so far as I know it, this very pronoun is shibboleth. The young mountaineer, returned from college in the low country, will carefully silence that h, but in unguarded moments it comes to his lips. And why not? Haply his forefathers left England before that aspirate, with others, was drowned in the clang of Bow Bells.—Atlantic Monthly.

AN ARCTIC RESCUE

The Feeling When the Relief Ship Came Into View.

Very often during the months of daylight we stood on the cliff straining our eyes to see the longed for relief ship. As the summer of 1905 slipped on we almost despaired, but one day in July, when hope had almost abandoned us, we saw one of the boys jumping up and down and supposed that at last his brain had given way under the strain. In fact, many of us were almost crazy with the monotony and anxiety that were upon us day after day. We watched a moment and wondered which of us would be the next to go off his balance.

When we went to him and saw what he saw, the long looked for relief ship, I don't know whether we all jumped for joy or what we did, for we have no memory of our actions in that hour. Quickly each man gathered his little kit ready to rush to the boat and leave forever that island where death had stared us in the face for sixteen months and where we had almost given up all hope of ever again looking upon the faces of our loved ones.

In our frantic haste to be gone many of us left behind relics and records which we prized and later regretted the loss of. At the end of sixteen months the relief ship Terra Nova had arrived, and we steamed away to Norway, where our party divided, some going to London and others to Germany.—Captain Edwin Coffin's Account of the Ziegler Polar Expedition in National Magazine.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, barries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Second Quarter, For May 15, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xii, 22-32, 38-42—Memory Verse, 41—Golden Text, Matt. xii, 30—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

We have today the option of the regular lesson or a special lesson on the Holy Spirit, but as the lesson for the day gives opportunity for a study of the Holy Spirit we will continue regularly. First we see Him healing a demon possessed man who was both blind and dumb, and the man both spake and saw. The people were amazed and said, "Is not this the son of David?" perhaps recalling the words of Isa. xxxv. 5, 6, "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped; then shall the lame man leap as an hart and the tongue of the dumb sing." Recently we saw Him heal a demon possessed dumb man (ix. 32, 33), but in this case the afflicted man was blind as well as dumb. But nothing is too hard for the Lord. Can we imagine a kingdom without sickness or infirmity or suffering of any kind? Yet that is what we expect and shall surely see in His time (Isa. xxxiii. 24; Rev. xxi, 1-4).

The blind Pharisees madly accuse Him of casting out demons by the power of the devil himself, as if Satan would cast out Satan and work against himself. How foolishly the devil does cause people to talk! They talk much more foolishly today when they say and teach that there is no devil at all and no hell. It would seem from verse 27 that unbelievers were permitted by their ruler to do some wonderful things, even as the magicians of Egypt counterfeited the miracles of Moses up to a certain point. We know from II Thess. ii. 9; Rev. xiii. 11-15, that at the end of this age the devil will specially deceive many by his miracles and signs and lying wonders. Our Lord Jesus said that if it were possible they would deceive the very elect (Matt. xxiv. 24), so we must not be deceived by the wonders wrought by the adversary in the name of spiritualism, Christian Science and other false teaching of our times. These things will continue and increase until the devil, the strong man of verse 29, shall have been bound and shut up in the bottomless pit for 1,000 years (Rev. xx. 1-3). The truth of God, just as it stands in His word, is the only power that will set us free from all delusions (John viii. 32, 36).

We are either with Christ or against Him, either taught by the spirit of God or the devil (verses 28, 30). If people resist the Holy Spirit and listen to the teaching of demons it is, as Jesus said, impossible to escape the damnation of hell (Matt. xxiii. 33). As I understand it the unpardonable sin of verses 31, 32, and I John v. 16, is the persistent turning from the Holy Spirit to the devil and attributing to the latter the works of the Spirit. Let it comfort and encourage any who fear they have committed the unpardonable sin to remember that the very fact that they have a fear of such guilt is evidence that the Holy Spirit has not left them, and, however far they may have wandered, if they will only turn to the Lord the word stands, "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out" (John vi. 37).

That words are an evidence of the condition of the heart (verse 34) should make us covet to have the word of God dwelling in us richly in order that our words may savor of Christ. It would be well to be like Elihu in Job xxxii, 18-20, and that would be the case if our experience was that of Job xxiii. 12; Jer. xv. 16. If we kept verse 36 of our lesson in mind it would make us more careful in view of Rom. xiv. 10, 12.

In verse 38 see these blind and foolish Pharisees asking for a sign after He had already wrought in their presence all the signs which the prophets had said would be done by the Messiah. No wonder that He called them an evil and adulterous (idol worshiping, world conformed) generation (verse 39), a generation of vipers (verse 34; xxiii. 33), of their father the devil (John viii. 44), for He knew them well and knew what was in them.

See in verses 40, 41, His indorsement of the story of Jonah and the great fish and Nineveh and her repentance, and no doubt He looked onward to the time when Israel, cast up on their shores by the nations, would become truly penitent at His appearance in glory and carry His message not to one city, but to all nations for their good. See in verse 42 His indorsement of the story of the queen of Sheba and the wisdom of Solomon, and doubtless He looked onward to the fulfillment of Isa. lx. Is he to us a greater than Jonah or Solomon or Moses or Aaron? Do we say, with great gratitude and gladness, "We have such an High Priest" (Heb. viii. 1; vii. 26; iv. 15), and have we as believers entered into rest? (Heb. iv. 3.)

Those who profess to be His friends and yet talk down the things that He believed are no friends of His, but rather belong to the company represented by the Pharisees of His day. Being rejected by the nation, whose rulers had determined to kill Him (verse 14), He is led, by a visit from His mother and His brethren, to declare, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father, which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother" (verse 50). Compare Luke viii, 21.

MR. MUDGE'S WOOING

A Very Homely Man Who Was a Very Persistent Lover.

By ADELAIDE RUTH HILL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Jabez Chute Mudge was his name. Considering that he was the homeliest man in his state it would seem that his parents might have helped him to a more millifluous pair of surnames.

Mr. Mudge, however, came of good enough stock, was fairly well educated and was the possessor of a couple of thousand dollars a year. He lived on his own place, where he grew grapes, his only occupation. If he had had anything else to do this story would never have been written, for nine-tenths of his time was devoted to incidents recounted therein.

On a neighboring hill lived Leonidas Meredith, a gentleman whose name was as euphonius as Mr. Mudge's was discordant. Mr. Meredith possessed a daughter, Leita, who was as comely as Mr. Mudge was homely. This story recounts the wooing of Leita Meredith by Chute Mudge.

When Mudge first saw Miss Meredith and how he happened to fall in love with her doesn't matter. His first move in the direction of possessing her was made one morning when her father was getting into his carriage to drive to a train on his daily journey to the city. Mudge stepped up to him and astonished him by asking for the hand of his daughter.

"My daughter!" exclaimed the gentleman, opening his eyes very wide.

"Yes, Mr. Meredith; I have loved her

"I SHALL LOVE YOU FROM A DISTANCE."

a long while and shall always love her. I can take fairly good care"—

"You get out of this mighty quick or I'll find a way to hurry you."

"I shall stay here, Mr. Meredith, till I get your consent."

"Tom," yelled the wrathy father to the gardener, "come here!"

Tom dropped a spade and came running toward his employer.

"Just help me a bit with this fellow."

Mr. Meredith took the suitor by one arm, Tom took him by the other, and, walking him down to the pond, lifted him and with a "One, two, three," they threw him in.

Mudge came up spluttering. Mr. Meredith hurried to his carriage and was driven away, his would be son-in-law crying after him: "I'm not discouraged, sir. I'll try again."

When Miss Leita Meredith heard the story of her wooer's ducking she gave a little laugh, then said, "Poor fellow!" If Mudge had heard the remark possibly he might have gathered a ray of hope. The young lady's mother asked her if she had ever had any communication with Mudge, to which she replied that she had not known that there was such a person in existence.

This was the first episode in Mr. Mudge's courtship. The second was very different. Jabez kept an eye on the Meredith place and noticed a young man who called rather more frequently than the red headed lover thought might be well for his own suit. One afternoon when this gentleman was leaving the Mereditns, Jabez waylaid him and asked him if he could tell him the way to B. The man replied that he could not. Jabez told him that he believed he was lying. The man promptly slapped Jabez's face, and Jabez as promptly knocked him down. The young man's jaw was pretty nearly broken, and when he got up he was in no condition to renew the fight. He went back to the Meredths for assistance, told of his encounter and spoke of his assailant as a "red headed, monkey shaped devil."

Miss Meredith, who was bathing his jaw, at once recognized her persistent lover. What woman can fail to feel some interest in a man who for her sake will first consent to be ducked by her father and then will permit no other man to pay her attention? She expressed to the gentleman under her care her abhorrence of Jabez Mudge and his act, but for her life she could not but consider him in the light of a victor. When her visitor showed a shrinking from meeting the "red headed, monkey shaped devil" again and asked to be driven to his home Jabez had got rid of his only rival. Miss Meredith had more admiration for the monkey shaped man than his opponent.

Not long after this Miss Meredith concluded to walk to the village. Her mother told her she had better go in her pony cart since she might meet Mr. Mudge, and it would be easier for her to drive away from him than to walk away. To this the girl replied that she was not afraid of Mr. Mudge and would not permit him to restrict her movements in the least. Down in the bottom of her heart she had a curiosity to talk with this singular being who was suffering and daring for her and hoped that he might join her. Jabez, constantly on the lookout for such an opportunity, saw her leave the place on the hill and sallied forth to meet her. As she approached he stood still with his hat in his hand and his head bowed.

"May I have a few words with you?" he said in a sad voice.

"No."

Nevertheless he walked on beside her.

"Do you want another ducking?" she asked.

"A thousand if they will bring me nearer to you."

"What in the world put it into your head to want me?" she asked.

"First, you are the most beautiful woman in the world," he replied.

"Second?"

"Second is all the rest of it. I must have you, and I will have you."

"And I will not have you."

"Then I shall love you from a distance as long as I live."

"And I wish you to understand that in case any man pays me attention in future you are to let him alone."

"Won't you at least give me the satisfaction of dying by his hand? I would rather do that than live to see him possess you."

"You're too silly for anything."

By this time they had reached a fork in the road, and she signified that he must leave her. Jabez did so and walked away to his home, feeling that he had gained one point, but it was a very small point, and there was a whole picket fence of points bristling ahead of him.

Not long after this Mr. Meredith introduced a young man named Long to his daughter and intimated that he would be pleased if she and Long would make a match. The young man fell in readily with the plan and after devoting himself to the girl for some time proposed to her.

"I'm sorry," she said, "but I can't marry any one."

"Why not?" he asked, surprised.

"There is a man living down there who has taken it into his silly head that he wants me so much that I'm afraid he'll kill any one who marries me."

"He will, eh? Then it is time some one kills him."

"You had better not try it."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why, he loves me so well that he permitted papa and Tom, the gardener, to throw him into the pond, all on my account, but he waylaid a gentleman who was calling on me and nearly broke his jaw."

"I'll see him and find out whether he's going to put another of your admirers out of the race."

"Don't."

When Miss Meredith said "don't" she meant "do." She wished to know what her red headed lover would do in the matter, though she did not intend that anything serious should happen. Long went straight to Mudge and said:

"I have asked Miss Meredith to marry me. She says that if she does you will kill me."

"I beg your pardon. Miss Meredith didn't say any such thing."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?"

"With Miss Meredith's permission I'll fight you any way you please—fists, swords, pistols or rifles."

"But Miss Meredith considers you as standing between her and marriage. Of course she doesn't wish me to fight for her with you."

"Then let her say so."

Somewhat surprised at this turn of the affair, Long went back to Miss Meredith and told her what had passed between him and "the red headed monkey," supposing she would at once give him something that would indicate to Mudge that she wished him to let any suitor of hers alone. Instead of that she said:

"I'll see what I can do with him."

Long bowed himself away with a bearing that denoted disappointment and displeasure.

The next morning Mudge had a feeling that he should receive some communication from Miss Meredith and believed she would talk with him rather than write. He was not mistaken. During the day he saw her leave her home on foot. He went to meet her.

"Why do you persist in thrusting yourself between me and any one who wishes to marry me?" she asked.

"Do you wish to marry this man who came to see me yesterday?"

There was no reply to this.

"Because if you do I will do nothing to prevent you."

"I am glad that this insane freak of yours has become tinctured at last with a little common sense. Doubtless your love is not so fierce as it was."

"There is no change in my love except that it has grown greater. When it began it was selfish. Now I love you so well that I am ready to sacrifice myself for your happiness."

She led the way on a path not much trodden, and it was two hours before she left him. When she returned to her home there was evidently something on her mind.

The next morning a maid left hot water in her mistress' room and found it empty. Miss Meredith had fled to become Mrs. Mudge.

KING EDWARD VII OF ENGLAND DIED FRIDAY

Was Born In Buckingham Palace November 9, 1841.

The world was startled Saturday morning by the intelligence announcing the death of King Edward VII of England, which occurred Friday at midnight.

His son George Frederick, Prince of Wales, succeeds Edward on the throne.

King Edward VII was born November 9, 1841. He became King on January 22, 1901.

Because of the long reign of the illustrious Queen Victoria, he was, with the exception of William IV, the oldest monarch who ascended the English throne since Egbert assumed that dignity nearly 1200 years ago.

He is survived by Queen Alexandra and four children. The latter include Prince George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, who succeeds to the throne; Princess Louise, wife of the Duke of Fife; Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud, now Queen of Norway.

In honor of his father and maternal grandfather, the royal infant was christened Albert Edward. He was always known by both names while prince of Wales, and was called "Bertie" in the family circle. As King he chose to adopt a good old English name and ruled as Edward VII.

His training for the throne began with his earliest youth. The Queen often caused him to accompany her on trips about the kingdom that he might become familiar with scenes and events in which he was destined later to become the leading figure. He was popular as a child, and there was much ado over the part he took, as a youngster of 10, at the opening of the great exhibition in 1851.

He was 19 years old when he made a trip to Canada and the United States. He readily brought himself into line with the spirit of the new world. He had the tact to cast aside the exclusiveness and ceremony of court life and to mingle freely with the people. His unaffected manner and good fellowship won for him thousands of friends.

The next year, 1862, was marked b the trip to the orient.

In 1862, as prince of Wales, he formally entered public life as a member of the house of lords. It was, too, the year of his marriage. The bride was Princess Alexandria Caroline Mary Charlotte Louisa Julia, the oldest daughter of the late King Christian of Denmark. King Christian, at that time, was prince of Schleswig-Holstein. He had a slender income for one with his needs, and he had a large and interesting family. The prince of Wales first meeting with Princess Alexandra occurred at the Cathedral of Spires, September 24, 1861. She was then 17 years of age, the prince 20. The wedding, a gorgeous affair, occurred March 10, 1863. Six children were born, two of whom have died. The Duke of Clarence, the oldest son, died on the eve of his marriage, in 1891. Another child died in infancy.

Twice the King was attacked by disease that threatened his life. In 1872 he suffered from typhoid fever. It appeared for a time that he would not survive and prayers were offered in churches throughout the kingdom for his recovery. He was stricken again on the eve of his coronation. Appendicitis attacked him and when announcement was made of the operation that would have to be performed, there were thousands who predicted that he would not be able to withstand it. But he recovered and the coronation ceremonies, although postponed, were carried out on a magnificent scale in August, 1902.

For more than 20 years before his ascension to the throne, King Edward was much in the public eye. He gained a high degree of popularity and became the target for much criticism.

His public duties were simple enough. They required mainly, his royal presence at public celebrations. He presided at the opening of great exhibitions, the launching of a number of battleships, the dedication of great buildings and the opening of a number of public institutions.

In his private life, the king, while he was prince of Wales, afforded material for much gossip and uncounted pages of newspaper space. He was a thoroughgoing sportsman and a devoted patron of the theatre. He was very fond, too, of the society of charming and clever women. Some of his early affairs were not free from scandal, but in later years he exhibited greater discretion, at least.

He developed a great racing stable and his colors were at the front in scores of notable races. He was a leader in yatching affairs and the owner of some of the fastest vessels of that class in the world. Lipton's efforts to capture the American cup were of intense interest to the king. He usually inspected the Shamrocks, and in a test race of one of them the king narrowly escaped death through the breaking of a mast.

He often took part in hunting parties on the estates of rich Englishmen. Card games usually figured in the evening entertainment at these house parties in the country. The baccarat scandal was the outcome of one of these games.

The king made many trips to the continent. There were annual pilgrimages to noted health resorts and less frequent visits to the courts of rulers. These trips won for Edward popularity among people of all classes.

Among the puritanic it was charged that his career was marked too much by frivolity and high living, and then shook their heads solomnly when they thought of the day when he should ascend to the throne. Evil days they were certain, were in store for the nation.

These prophecies were far wrong. As a prince he had no serious work to do and devoted himself to a life of pleasure. As king, a heavy responsibility was placed upon him and he proceeded with dignity and ability to discharge his obligations. Many of his old associates were cast aside. Immediately provision was made for the payment of his debts and it was reported two or three years after the beginning of his reign that he had wiped out all these claims against him.

Military operations during his reign were limited to the expedition against Tibet and fighting with natives in South Africa and on the frontier of India. Otherwise England has been at peace with all the world.

In the field of world politics his influence was steadily cast on the side of peace. He held the nation in check during the storm of public sentiment that followed the action of the Russian fleet in firing on the fishermen in the English channel. It was through his diplomacy that friendly relations were established with France and were maintained with all the other nations of the world.

During the 1909 trip abroad made by his father, King George, then Prince of Wales, had to take on his shoulders some of the kingly duties. The result startled England.

The new king previously had been best known for the things he didn't do. Even the most loyal supporters of the royal family did not take him seriously. Good-hearted, quiet, reserved, unenergetic, perhaps a little negative—this was the general estimate.

But when Prince George took the tiller, he forced his critics to admit they had misunderstood him. He showed evidence of careful study of European and colonial conditions, he was widely read on every subject. He made speeches that were clear, straightforward, illuminating, forceful. He showed himself to be one of the best informed men in England on naval affairs.

Previously an extraordinary ignorance prevailed, even in England about the future ruler. He wasn't the striking, showy personality that his father was. He didn't set styles for the world. He was not a gallant. He avoided the limelight.

It is apparent, however, that King George hasn't been wasting his 45 years.

The prince came into the world a "younger son." Death, in 1892, made him heir to the British throne by carrying off his brother, the Duke of Clarence, who was 19 months his senior.

Prince George, then 27, succeeded his brother in the affections of the popular Princess May of Teck, as well as in line of succession. Just a month before the Duke of Clarence was to marry the Princess May, an attack of influenza carried him off. The marriage of Prince George and the Princess was the wish of Queen Victoria.

The new King of England was known as the Sailor Prince. He went to sea while still a young boy, and has gone through every grade of the navy service. He has cruised around the world, and made a long trip in visiting all the British colonies in 1901.

Queen May, whose full name is Victoria May, was destined for a throne from her birth. She was born in the royal palace of Kensington, on May 26, 1867. She is the mother of six children.

The new king and queen are very devoted and are seen everywhere together. Queen May is pretty, a lover of her home, and is thoroughly English in her thinking and tastes. She knows no other language.

The only cause for difference between the new rulers is that King George says his wife gives away every cent she has. She has started a nurses' home, a home for cripples, supports scholarships in schools for girls, and has two secretaries to look after her general charities.

Queen May's favorite color is pink, her most treasured flower is the lily. She has many feminine fads, including one for a collection of book plates. She plays tennis, and drives some, but prefers to walk when it is possible.

Prince Eddie, new Prince of Wales, is 15 now and is studying at the Royal Naval College, Osborn, Isle of Wight. He goes through the same studies as the rest of the pupils, works in the shops and the foundry, and likes it. With a strong inherited taste for the navy, he will probably go into the army, and is already enrolled in the ranks of the famous Gordon Highlanders.

How to Use Magnesia In Cleaning.

Magnesia may be obtained either in powder or in square cakes, and it is very effective in cleaning laces and delicate fabrics. Sift or rub it on the parts to be cleaned, and lay them away in a box or drawer where they will be undisturbed for a day or so, and then shake them out. It is a very good plan to apply the magnesia in this way when putting away party dresses that have become slightly soiled. The magnesia absorbs the dust, and when you take them out to wear them next time, they will be fresh and dainty. The magnesia is also effective, when applied in the same way, for removing grease spots.

How to Preserve Grapes In Winter.

Carefully selected fruit may be kept till the early spring. Select large fruit that is perfect and not overripe, line the bottoms of wooden boxes with brown paper and lay the grapes in carefully, taking care that the bunches go not crowd or overlap. On this layer place another thickness of paper, then another layer of fruit, and so on till the boxes are full. Cover the top thickly with paper, tucking it in well around the sides. Keep in a cool place.

How to Clean White Enamel.

Soap never should be used in cleaning paint, especially white enamel or any paint with a gloss, as this will remove the gloss, which is the chief charm of the wood. If in washing woodwork a cupful of the glue used by carpenters is melted and poured into a pail of warm water it will not only serve as a cleaner to the paint, but it will leave a high gloss such as new paint has. When once she uses this the housekeeper will consider the glue a household necessity.

VOLUME 34. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1910. NUMBER 12

UNCLE JAKE HARSHBERGER WAS RIGHT TO THE DOT

The Garrett County Weather Prophet Has Been Vindicated

Uncle Jake Hershberger, who enjoys quite a reputation as a weather prophet, came to town last Saturday, and informed his friends that the slight snow that fell last week completed the list of snows predicted by him when the first one fell last winter. By some observations and calculations known only to Uncle Jake, he estimates the number of snows that we may expect during a winter; and, strange to say, he is never far wrong in his calculations.

This year, however, when March came in like the proverbial lamb, with its sunny skies and balmy breezes, when old Dame Nature got up and humped herself to beat all previous records for an early spring, when the suburban resident girded up his loins and spaded up the onion bed, and trundled the lawn mower across the green sward until its merry music was heard on all sides; when the forward changed their underwear and packed their overcoats in moth balls; then it was that we came to the conclusion that Uncle Jake had slipped a cog or that Halley's comet had flopped its tail, and driven the seasons a few months ahead; and we said, if there be prophecies they shall fail, yea, verily. While we were preparing the bed for the gay and festive onion we saved the angle worms in a baking powder can, and hied us to the babbling brook, and some of the speckled beauties, forgetting Uncle Jake and his prophecies, bit; and we rejoiced and were exceeding glad that ten of the snows that belonged to us would never come.

We laughed at Uncle Jake and his prophecies, but only for the month of March. In April we thought he might be nearly correct, and in May we were convinced that we had been too previous in laughing at all, also in planting our onions and changing our clothes.

We take off our hat to Uncle Jake; he was right; and we hope that he will be right on the job with his calculations for many, many years.

Orrick & Co., of Baltimore, was $93.271 This was the bid of White, Weld & Co., of New York, for $5,000,000 of series "B," maturing February 25, 1925.

HOME TALENT MUSICAL COMEDY.

"Gibson Family Reunion" to be Given June 9 and 10.

The ladies of St. Mark's church at their business meeting recently decided to put on a home talent musical comedy entitled "Gibson Family Reunion." They have arranged for the production to be drilled by Miss Anna Manges of the Bock Entertainment Co., of Wilkes Barre, Pa. This company has made a business of home talent entertainments for 15 years and is the most successful company of its kind in existence. Miss Bock, the owner and manager of the company and author of "Gibson Family Reunion," also wrote "County Fair" and "Union Depot," both of which have been given in our town.

The Gibson Family Reunion is in two acts. The first shows the Gibson Family preparing for the Reunion. The second shows the assembly of guests at the reunion, Mrs. Gibson introducing specialities, choruses, dances, etc., for the entertainment of her guests.

In the first act Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have just returned from a Woman's Rights convention, and find Molly, the Irish servant girl, and Billy, the stammering chore boy, singing love songs instead of getting the house in order for the reunion. Mrs. Gibson being a strong minded, forceful woman, at once on her return commands not only Molly and Billy to proceed to the preparing the house for the reunion but also in a most authoritive manner demands that her husband, Job Gibson, assist with the decorating, etc. Mr. Gibson from start to finish impersonates the part of a meek, henpecked man, while Mrs. Gibson very strongly represents the new woman suffragettes type. Their two daughters, Caroline and Phyllis, represent two very opposite types of character—Caroline being very haughty, dignified and rather disagreeable, while Phyllis portrays the very bright, sweet, clever, happy go lucky kind—ever ready for a jolly good time and continually doing the most improper things which dreadfully shock her most haughty sister Caroline. Molly, the Irish servant, is a typical Irish character ever bubbling over with wit, while Billy, the stammering chore boy is an excrutiatingly funny specimen whose worrysome stammer continually gets him into trouble.

The Duke and Ted Lorain are two up-to-date characters with plenty of opportunity for good acting.

The second act is full of bright, catchy situations. Most of the act is made up of musical specialties. For this act fifty of our most graceful young people will take part.

The entertainment will be given June 9 and 10.

COMET WILL BE AT ITS BRIGHTEST THIS EVENING

When It Will Be a Mere 14,300,000 Miles Away.

This evening the comet will be at its brightest, 35 times more brilliant than it was a month ago and twice as brilliant as on Tuesday. It will be seen in the west just after sundown.

For the next few days thereafter the celestial visitor should present a magnificent spectacle in the evening sky with a tail pointing up from the horizon one-third of the distance to the zenith.

Each night the comet will set later, getting fainter and fainter, until it bids us au revoir for another 75 years. This will probably be in the latter part of June.

The passage of the earth through the comet's tail occurred last night, beginning at 11:20 o'clock and ending about 1:20 this morning. Hereafter the comet will be visible in the evening instead of in the morning. The earth is moving from right to left, the comet from left to right. At their respective rates of 18 and 25 miles a second they passed each other at the joint rate of 43 miles a second. Two days after the passage of the comet's tail its head will be nearest to the earth, 14,300,000 miles. The comet's orbit is inclined to that of the earth at an angle of 18 degrees.

The tail is supposed to be composed of extremely tenuous gas, and most of the scientists agree it does not contain meteors There are no reports that any sensible effect was produced on the earth's atmosphere even though the earth did pass through the tail.

RESTS ON LATIN PHRASE

Maryland's Claim as to the West Virginia Boundary.

The boundary line between the States of Maryland and West Virginia will not down, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, as the question has again made its appearance in the highest tribunal of the nation, this time upon the proper translation of a Latin phrase in the Maryland charter granted in the year 1629 to Lord Baltimore by the Crown of England, Maryland's attorney general holding to one translation and West Virginia's legal representative holding to an opposite translation.

This phrase is: "Deinde vergendo versus meridiem ad ulteriorem dicti fluminis ripam et eam sequendo qua plaga." Maryland contends that the boundary is at the high-water mark on the south bank of the Potomac, while West Virginia claims that it is at the low-water mark.

"This language clearly carries Maryland to the high-water line on the farther bank," says Attorney-General Straus, of Maryland, in a brief just filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the dispute has been taken for settlement.

Attorney-General Conley and Assistant Counsel Price, for West Virginia, in another brief, take the position that an Attorney-General of Maryland cannot translate Latin nearly so well as an Attorney-General of West Virginia. "Eam" is a feminine pronoun, they are sorry that the Maryland official should think it refers to "ripam." Even if it did and all the rest of his translation were correct, the counsel for West Virginia claim that under a compact between Maryland and Virginia in 1785 the low-water mark was made the southern boundary of Maryland.

DEATH OF MISS RUBY WEIR

The Daughter of a Promident Garrett County Farmer.

Miss Ruby Hazel Weir, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Weir, died Saturday morning at the home of her parents in District No 11, Garrett county, about three miles from Lonaconing.

Deceased was born on the Weir Farm on June 15, 1896, and lived there all her life. She attended the Weir school which is situated near her home, and was a bright and clever pupil. Miss Weir was ill only a few days, having been seized with an attack pneumonia on the Monday preceeding her death. She was a much loved and popular young lady. Her disposition and character were all that is sweet and good and as the only daughter she was a valuable help to her mother in managing the affairs of the household. She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Weir, and one brother, William.

The funeral took place on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Weir homestead. Rev. G. W. Hobbs, of the Lonaconing M. E. Church, officiated, and was assisted by Rev. John Green, of Garrett county. Interment was made in Hansel's cemetery.

HARRY McCOMAS MARRIED

Eldest Son of Dr. and Mrs. McComas Took Unto Himself a Wife.

The news of the marriage of Mr. Harry L. McComas, eldest son of Dr and Mrs. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, reached here last night by a message over the long distance telephone from Dr. and Mrs. McComas, who were in Baltimore and who returned to Oakland this morning.

The bride was Miss Margaret J. Woodward, of Philadelphia. The wedding occurred on January 17th, and was kept a secret by the couple until a few days ago when Dr. McComas went to Baltimore and being unable to find his son at the University, where he had been a student for a year or more, started to investigate, finally locating the young man at the corner of Mosher and John streets, Baltimore, where he was in charge of a drug store.

RULES FOR THE ASSESSMENT

Stocks, Bonds, Debts and Even Jewelry Covered.

The provisions of the new law ordering the reassessment of property are very explicit. The act providing for this revaluation obtains in Garrett county and concerns its citizens. Practically everything is assessable—real estate of every description, stocks, bonds, promissory notes, s certificate of indebtedness or evidences of debt in whatever form. Even jewelry except that habitually worn on the person, is taxable.

Churches, graveyards (where profit is not intended), hospitals, asylums and other charitable or benevolent institutions are exempt, as are the crops of any land in the hands of the producer or his agent, and also provisions and fuel kept for use and consumption of the family. Working tools of mechanics and the first $300 worth of farming utensils are also on the list of exemptions.

The provisions of the law do not apply to the shares of homestead or building associations incorporated in Maryland and doing business solely within the State to the extent that the shares represent investments in mortgages on real estates within the State.

Money that is the proceeds of the sale of stocks, bonds or other property disposed of to evade taxation is assessable.

Assessors are empowered to administer the oath to all parties owning property. The affidavit required of each property-owner contains this: "I have not directly or indirectly converted temporarily for the purpose of evading the assessment thereof for taxation into non-taxable property or securities of any kind."

Assessors have the right to propound any question which they may deem necessary to enable them to assertain the location, kind the character of the personal property owned by the person to whom the oath is administered.

Any person or officers who makes a wilfully false and fraudulent return shall be guilty of perjury and liable to a fine of not over $500 or imprisonment not exceeding two years and to be forever disqualified from being a witness in any matter of controversy.

Penalties are also prescibed for assessors who shall make fraudulent returns.

The law says assessors shall assess property at its full cash value, not looking to a forced sale.

The assessment books shall not be open to inspection of any person other than a tax or assessment official, nor shall any copies be permitted to be made, unless in case of appeal or revision. A fine of from $5 to $500 is imposed upon any official found guilty of violating this provision. The county clerks, however, are permitted to give the assessement and valuation of real estate to parties having the right to demand the same.

Any person, with a view to evade payment of taxes, who refuses to give in to the assessor any bonds, notes, claims or other evidences of debt shall not be permitted to recover on the same by action at law or suit in equity before the courts until they have been listed and the taxes paid thereon.

The tax commissioner furnishes the blanks for the assessors and all printed instructions and forms for the guidance of the assessors.

Eclipse of the Moon, May 23.

OAKLAND COUPLE ELOPED TO MARYLAND'S QUEEN CITY

Daughter of A. C. Whetsell Married to Roy Fisher in Cumberland

Miss Nancy, or rather Mrs. Roy Fisher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Whetsell, was mrrried in Cumberland yesterday, after a strenuous night and day caused by the opposition of her father to the match and the consequent incarceration of the wedding party by Cumberland officials on a charge of kidnapping made by the father when he learned that his daughter had gone to Cumberland with the intention of getting married to the groom, who for some weeks past has been employed in the Whetsell restaurant on Railroad street as a waiter.

The groom hails from Texas and went to Cumberland Tuesday morning on the accommodation to make arrangements for the marriage. Later in the day the bride left for the same city and was accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Belle Cropp. Shortly afterward the bride's father became "wise" to the situation and telephoned Chief of Police Flanagan at Cumberland to place the whole party under arrest and hold them until his arrival. The Chief carried out his instruction to the letter and when Mr. and Mrs. Whetsell arrived in Cumberland they were met with tears and entreaties by the three composing the bridal party. The rest of the story is told by the following taken from this morning's Cumberland News:

The sequel to the "tempest in a teapot" caused by the runaway pair, Roy Fisher and Nancy Whetsell, of Oakland, who eloped Tuesday from the latter city and came here only to fall into the arms of the law in the shape of Chief Flanagan was presented yesterday morning at Magistrate Humbird's office followed by the marriage of the couple later on. The girl's father and mother, as told in yesterday's Daily News, followed the pair here determined to take their daughter home and prosecute Fisher for "kidnapping." That is Mr. Whetsell was of this mind but Mrs. Whetsell, as well as the aunt who accompanied the pair here and Roy and Nancy were matrimonially bent and didn't hesitate to say so. The outcome of the whole matter was that after liscussing the affair with the Magistrate yesterday and listening to some good wholesome advice from that solon, the stern father relented after he had been told a thing or two by his wife and daughter who reminded him that they were "some pumpkins" too when it came to deciding the matter and that there was nothing to stop the marriage, the girl being eighteen years old. So the truce was signed.

Nancy and Roy, happy as two turtle doves, Aunt Belle and Mr. and Mrs. Whetsell with Chief Flanagan as best man, accompanied by several witnesses, proceeded to Kingsley M. E. parsonage where the knot was tied by Rev. Alexander Bielaski, pastor of that church. Chief Flanagan kissed the bride like a good fellow and blushed when he did so.

All the parties returned to their homes in Oakland yesterday and once again is Cupid, the little rascal, chuckling with glee.

SEEKING FOR HEIRS

St. Louis Attorney Interested in Settlement of Large Ferguson Estate.

Attorney Blaine Aiken, of South Main street, is in receipt of a letter from an attorney, O. L. Brown, of St. Louis, Mo., asking Mr. Aiken to furnish him some information concerning any Fergusons that may reside in this county.

Attorney Brown says he is endeavoring to locate the heirs to an estate in Ireland, amounting approximately to $22,500,000, left by one Ferguson about the year 1830. Heirs to this estate are scattered all over the United States, and an effort is being made to hunt down all who may have a claim to share in it. The Fergusons who are heirs are a branch of the family, which was of Scotch-Irish descent and emigrated from the north of Ireland to this country, settling in Virginia, Pennsylvania and New York, their descendants afterward scattering over the United States.

Heirs have been located in Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, besides others who are probably heirs and have not been heard from in Kentucky, Iowa, Tennessee and Missouri. The attorney says that the proof of the estates is absolute, and it is simply a proposition of finding the heirs and tracing their ancestry.—Washington (Pa.) Herald.

Mr. Samuel Ferguson, of Oakland, believes that he is connected with the family.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

PASTOR RUSSELL'S DISCOURSE ON PENTECOSTAL BLESSINGS

GREAT WHITSUNTIDE SERMON AT ALBERT MEMORIAL HALL

London, Eng., May 15th. — Albert Memorial Hall, recognized as the largest modern auditorium in the world, was crowded today to hear Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, on "Pentecostal Blessings." Many of the most prominent stalls and boxes are owned by the nobility, many of whom occupied them, while others, unable to attend, graciously granted permission for their occupancy by others; but hundreds were turned away. The meeting was held under the auspices of the "International Bible Students Association." The speaker said:—

It is appropriate that on this day, celebrated and recognized as the anniversary of Pentecost, we should consider the import, and have well in mind what we celebrate. I therefore take as my text, the words of St. Peter explanatory of the occasion: "This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall have the vision which your ancients dreamed of; and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days my Spirit, and they shall proclaim." (I give you a preferred translation.)—Acts ii. 16-18.

St. Peter declares that the outpouring of the holy Spirit upon the waiting believers at Pentecost was mentioned by Joel the Prophet, but he does not say that all of the prophecy was fulfilled there and then. As a matter of fact we know that the holy Spirit was not then poured out on all flesh; it was poured out merely upon God's servants and hand-maidens. A careful inspection shows us that there are two parts to the prophecy—(1) All flesh, and (2) God's servants and hand-maidens. The order of the blessing is also stated. It will come upon all flesh after those days, but upon the servants and hand-maidens in those days. The days mentioned evidently refer to this Gospel age—from Pentecost to the second coming of Christ.

In this period, of now nearly nineteen centuries, God's holy Spirit has been granted to his faithful ones, and to these alone. Only the fully consecrated have been accepted of the Lord as living sacrifices, and only such have been begotten of the holy Spirit, that they may be "new creatures in Christ." During all this time, the world has been unrecognized so far as the holy Spirit is concerned. Indeed, the Apostle after Pentecost went still further and declared that "the whole world lieth in the Wicked One." The only action of the holy Spirit must be, as in the case of Felix, to "reprove the world of sin and righteousness, and of a coming judgment." Our text declares, however, that the time is coming when the world will receive a share of the great Divine blessing, which was fully assured by the death of Christ. But its time of favor will be "after those days"—after this Gospel Age shall have come to an end; after the New Dispensation, the Millennial Age, shall have come. Let us note first the blessings belonging to this Gospel Age, in which we are specially interested, and subsequently let us notice the blessings that God has promised shall come to all mankind.

The Church's Pentecost.

It is not sufficient that we say that a Pentecostal blessing came upon the followers of Jesus in the upper room at Jerusalem, totally different from anything that had been known in the world before! We want to know why it was so; and if a blessing, why it did not come sooner to God's people? We remember Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Daniel, the Prophets; we recognize the fact that they were grand characters, and, as St. Paul said, "They had this testimony that they pleased God." Yet there was no Pentecostal outpouring in their day, nor until the age of man in the world was more than four thousand years. Why was this? We answer that God has his own times and seasons for the various features of his work.

We recall the words of our Lord Jesus, respecting his forerunner, "Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding he that is least in the Kingdom of heaven is greater than he" (Matthew xi. 11). Why could not John, and others of the prophets preceding him, enter in and enjoy this Gospel favor? We answer, in the language of St. Paul, "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Hebrews xi. 40). Our Creator has great gifts to dispense to our race through the Redeemer, and it is for him to determine the times and the seasons for the dispensing of these blessings, and to whom they shall go. According to the Divine arrangement, the Redeemer had first to die as man's Ransom-Price, before any of the race could come back into full relationship with the Creator. It is true that by faith Abraham and others of the past did enjoy certain of God's favors, and much of his fellowship, but none could be received into full sonship and joint-heirship with Christ, until first their sins had been cancelled. Then they could be accepted in Christ on the terms which the Father has appointed.

Those very disciples who received the blessing in the upper room on Pentecost, had forsaken sin, had become Jesus' disciples, had made full consecration of all their earthly hopes and interests, had been accepted by the Lord Jesus, and he had put his Spirit upon them, enabling them to do many mighty works in his name. However, it was one thing to do mighty works through his spirit, or power, and another matter to possess that spirit inherently—to act directly as agents of Divine favor instead of indirectly. It is in harmony with this thought that we read that after our Lord breathed upon them the holy Spirit, symbolically imparting his Spirit, and commissioning them as his representatives to preach the Gospel, he told them, nevertheless, to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power—the holy Spirit—until the Father should recognize them directly as his ministers and ambassadors.

From the standpoint of Divine Justice, the Apostles and believers were still under the sentence of death as sinners at the time of our Lord's death, at the time of his resurrection, at the time of his ascension. Then he said to them, "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you" (John xvi. 7). After the forty days, invisibly present with his disciples, except on a few occasions for a few moments each, our Lord ascended, and after ten days the holy Spirit from the Father came upon the waiting household of faith. It evidenced to them the fact that their sins had been forgiven for Christ's sake, that they were justified freely from all things through his sacrifice, and that their consecration to sacrifice themselves had been accepted of the Father, and that henceforth they might count themselves as "joint-sacrificers with Christ," "members of his Body," members of "the Church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven," members of the "Seed of Abraham" (Galatians iii. 29).

Keys of the Kingdom.

The Master in speaking to St. Peter assured him that to him were committed the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, which signified that the way into the Kingdom at that time had not yet been opened, and that Peter would be honored by being the Lord's servant to do the opening work. There were two of these "keys," and therefore there were two opening works to be accomplished.

The Church, under Christ her Lord, is God's kingdom, not yet set up or established "in power and great glory"—not yet finished or inaugurated. The work of this Gospel Age is to "call" or invite such as have a hearing ear to become joint-heirs in this Kingdom, for which he taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." So many as genuinely accept this heavenly calling, this "high calling" to glory, honor, and immortality, are probationary members of the Kingdom of Heaven. Such are Scripturally exhorted to continue faithful to their vows of consecration, and thus make their calling and election sure to a place in this glorious Kingdom, which will be inaugurated at the second coming of Christ. But the Lord instructs all saying, "Sit down first and count the cost" (Luke xiv. 28); "but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him" (Hebrews x. 38).

All who are thus spirit-begotten (by the holy Spirit, John i. 13) during this age are promised a spirit birth, to spirit-being in the resurrection. We read, "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: It is sown an animal body; it is raised a spiritual body. . . . For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (I Corinthians xv. 42-44, 50). The entire period between the first advent and the second advent of our Redeemer is set apart in the Divine Program for this great work of selecting from amongst men the "little flock," such as shall be counted worthy of these honors on the spirit plane, and the privilege of participating with Messiah in his great work of the next age.

To the Jew First.

Only Jews received the Pentecostal blessing. The Gentiles were excluded for three and a half years thereafter, in harmony with a Divine promise made to the Jewish nation. Then came the time for a similar privilege to be extended to the Gentiles, and the record informs us that Cornelius was the first Gentile to be received into spiritual relationship with God. He was a good man, and had been a good man for years; he prayed often, and gave much alms to the people, but until then, the middle wall of partition separated between Jew and Gentile. Even then he could not be received of God because of his works, or prayers, or alms, but must first be instructed respecting Christ and his redemptive work, and must believe and accept the same. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12), either in this age or in any other.

Thus it was that, in harmony with our Redeemer's promise, St. Peter used the "key" which introduced the Gentiles to the Pentecostal blessings. As he used the first key on the Day of Pentecost in explaining to the multitudes of Jews the meaning of the Pentecostal blessings, and the privilege that they had of entering into the Divine favor thereby, so, at this later date, the Lord instructed Cornelius to send for Peter, saying, "Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodging in the house of one Simon a tanner by the seaside; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee" (Acts x. 32; xi. 14, 15). Thus were the two "keys" used by St. Peter, and thus were the doors of the Gospel favor—the high-calling of joint-heirship with Jesus—thrown open, both to Jews and to Gentiles, through faith in the precious blood. The doors thus thrown open are not yet closed; but, as we sometimes sing, "That gate was left ajar for me."

I rejoice with you today, fellow-students of the Word of God, that this great gift of God is still obtainable, that the time has not yet fully come when the door of opportunity to this high-calling must close. Close it will, so soon as the full number of the "elect" shall be completed. Thank God that another door will then open; the door of Restitution to human perfection and to earthly life, grand beyond the power of description.

But the blessed opportunity of this Pentecostal favor is still granted. As St. Peter declares in his epistle, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature" (II Peter i. 4). The door to this divine nature is the one that will soon shut, as our Redeemer illustrated in the parable of the "Wise and Foolish Virgins." When a sufficient number of "wise virgins" shall have entered to complete the bride-class, forthwith the door of opportunity to that station, to that class, to that honor, to the divine nature, will be closed, and the elect of God will be neither one more nor one less than the number originally foreordained.

"My Spirit Upon All Flesh."

St. Paul speaks of this Gospel age saying, "Now is the acceptable time; today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Not all hear his voice in these days. The great mass of mankind have not even heard of the name of Jesus, and consequently could not harden their hearts against him, nor against the terms now offered for return to fellowship with God. This is the acceptable time or period of salvation, in the sense that God is now willing to accept the offerings of believers if they present their bodies living sacrifices. St. Paul declares that this is a reasonable service, holy and acceptable to God (Rom. xii. 1).

The testimony to the Church and the high-calling have been open during this Gospel Age. The testimony to the world and the blessings under that testimony will be during the Millennial Age. The death of Jesus is "the propitiation (satisfaction) for our sins (the Church's), and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world"—in due time, during the Millennial Age (I John ii. 2). For, as the Apostle Paul declares, "there shall be a resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust" (Acts xxiv. 15). That will be the time for the precious merit of Jesus' sacrifice to be made known, to be understood, to be appreciated, and to bring its blessed results of restitution to who-so-ever will receive the same.

Then God's holy Spirit—holy power will, through Christ, be outpoured upon all flesh—upon all mankind. Messiah will inaugurate the new dispensation by sealing with Israel the New Covenant in his blood; as says the Lord through the Apostle Paul, "This is my Covenant with them when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the Gospel they are enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes" (Romans xi. 27, 28).

This out-pouring of the holy Spirit is not merely for Israel, nor God's blessing merely upon Abraham's natural seed outside the Church class. It will include all of every nation desirous of coming into accord with God, after they shall have come to a clear knowledge of the Truth. All nations shall be privileged to enter into and enjoy Israel's great Covenant, by becoming children of Abraham through faith. And all rejectors of God's grace having been destroyed in the Second Death, the world of mankind will constitute the promised seed of Abraham, whose number shall be as the sands of the seashore, even as the spirit-begotten ones of this Gospel Age are likened to the stars of heaven.

The Ancients, the Prophets, St. Peter declares, have all spoken of these glorious "times of restitution," and it will be during these times when the Lord shall pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, that the people may realize what the Ancients had seen in vision and in dreams—"the wilderness blossoming as a rose," "the solitary place being glad," "fountains in the desert," "the knowledge of the Lord filling the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep, and none needing to say to his neighbor, Know thou the Lord, for all shall know him from the least to the greatest."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Second Quarter, For May 22, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xiv. 1-12. Memory Verses, 10-12—Golden Text, Prov. xvi, 32—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

For the present we are asked by the committee to pass by the wonderful thirteenth chapter—why, I know not—but we will return to it in a few weeks and have three lessons in it. Although this lesson today gives an account of the beheading of John the Baptist, the sad event evidently took place some time previous. But now, Herod hearing of the fame of Jesus, his guilty conscience tells him that it is John whom he had murdered. He was perplexed because some said that John was risen from the dead, some said that Elijah had appeared and others that one of the old prophets was risen again. Herod said, "Who is this of whom I hear such things?" And he desired to see Him (Luke ix. 7-9). Herod's question, "Who is this?" is an all important one. See also Luke v. 21; vii. 49; Matt. xxi. 10; Isa. lxiii. 1; Jer. xxx. 21, where the question is in connection with the forgiveness of sins, the son of David, the Messiah and the One who is to judge the nations. As our Lord put it to Simon Peter, "Whom say ye that I am?" (Matt. xvi. 15.) It should take hold of each one of us, and unless we can from the heart reply as Peter did it will be bad for us. "What is Jesus Christ to me?" is the great question.

In a previous lesson we saw messengers coming to Jesus from John in the prison, but now we have the account of his imprisonment and execution. Herod feared John, knowing him to be a just and holy man, and he heard him gladly and did many things. But Herod had taken his brother Philip's wife and was living with her, and John had told him that it was not lawful. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel (margin, inward grudge) against John and would have killed him, but she could not. But Herod had imprisoned John for Herodias' sake (Mark vi. 17-20). For some idea of what a wicked, unscrupulous woman can do see I Kings xxi. 7-15, and II Kings xi. 1, and consider that Babylon, which is said to be guilty of the blood of all that were slain upon the earth, is compared to a woman arrayed in purple and scarlet and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls (Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 24). The life of John in prison must have been a sad and lonely one indeed were it not that he had access to God, with whom he had spent so many years in the wilderness. No prison walls can shut out God or the angels, and an eternity of glory will more than compensate for the greatest sufferings of the saints on earth (Rom. viii. 18).

Birthday parties should be happy occasions and innocent affairs, but this one of our lesson was one of the worst on record. It was a great affair, being a supper made by Herod for his lords, high captains and chief estates of Galilee. On this occasion the daughter of the wicked Herodias danced so acceptably to Herod and them that sat with him that Herod promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask. According to Mark (verse 23), "He sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom." What an outcome of a drunken revel and a dance! The result of dancing in our times, so often accompanied by drink if not by drunkenness, has never been fully written, but enough has been written to lead thoughtful people to renounce the whole thing and especially the fashionable dancing school. If you care to know, write Dr. Sylvanus Stall of Philadelphia for further information. If the church had a tithe of the zeal of the devil to lead souls astray, how many might by the church be pointed to Him who is able to save from going down to the pit! But where is the zeal referred to in the words, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (John ii. 17; Ps. lxix. 9).

The girl went forth and said to her mother, "What shall I ask?" And, being instructed by her mother, she asked for the head of John the Baptist. Quickly it is brought to her, and she carried it to her mother. Did ever a daughter carry or a mother receive so grewsome a gift? Yet this is in our day made into a play to entertain thoughtless people. The murder of John meant in due time the murder of Jesus, and the world lying in the wicked one seeks and applauds this kind of entertainment. It is written that the king was sorry, but the sorrow that does not lead to doing right amounts to nothing, and I fear that he has been sorry ever since and will be forever. According to Phil. i. 21, 23, it was a gain to John, a very far better, for he has been well and happy ever since. His disciples took up the body and buried it, but they did not bury John. We never bury people, but only the bodies in which they lived awhile. There shall be a resurrection of all dead bodies, those of the just and the unjust, but there shall be an interval of 1,000 years between (Luke xiv. 14; xx. 35; Acts xxiv. 15; Rev. xx. 5). The disciples of John went and told Jesus. That is the thing to do always and about everything, and then we shall know the peace of God which passeth all understanding (Phil. iv. 6, 7). Then also shall we know what it means to be guided in all things by Him (Prov. iii. 5, 6).

OTHER GREAT ARE SAILING IN THE SKY

Halley's Big One Is Not the Only Pebble on the Beach.

Halley's is neither the biggest nor the brightest comet that ever sent a superstitious past into paraxysms of terror. In ancient as well as in modern times comets have appeared which far outshone it in splendor and which far surpassed it in size.

By all odds, it seems to be fairly well agreed among astronomers that Donati's comet of 1854 was the most remarkable on record. The memory of its brilliancy and its size still lingers with many who saw it in their younger days. Its orbit was found to be a huge ellipse and its period of revolution 2,040 years. There is some evidence that it might have been identical with a great comet recorded by Seneca as having appeared in B. C. 146. At one time the nucleus was 5,600 miles in diameter and the entire head 250,000 miles in diameter, and the entire greatest length attained by the tail was 51,000,000 miles. Seven successive envelopes were seen to rise from the comet, one after another, each moving upward at the general rate of something like 30 miles an hour. At one time it had three tails. It was computed that the volume of the comet was about 500 times that of the sun. Yet the actual quantity of matter which it contained was only a fraction of the earth's mass.

Famous, too, is the comet of 1811, which Napoleon thought was a sign of the success which awaited his Russian invasion. Altogether it seems to have been almost equal to Donati's comet in brightness and certainly exceeded it in size; for its head was 1,250,000 miles in diameter and its tail 100,000,000 miles long. Like Donati's comet, it was found to revolve in a huge elliptical orbit, which will cause it to gleam again in our skies in the year 4876, if it be still in existence. The year 1811 was that of the celebrated port wine vintage of Portugal, and "comet wine" figured for a long period of years in the price list of wine merchants, in the cellar books of many private houses, and in the advertisements of auction sales.

The comet of 1744 was remarkable for its six tails spread out over the sky like a wonderful luminous fan. For a long time the single contemporaneous drawing in which those wonderful tails were depicted was looked upon with incredulity by astronomers. All distrust has since been removed by ample confirmatory testimony. It was visible throughout a period of seventeen months.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT...

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL, Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

PASTOR RUSSELL'S DISCOURSE ON PENTECOSTAL BLESSINGS

GREAT WHITSUNTIDE SERMON AT ALBERT MEMORIAL HALL

London, Eng., May 15th. — Albert Memorial Hall, recognized as the largest modern auditorium in the world, was crowded today to hear Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, New York, on "Pentecostal Blessings." Many of the most prominent stalls and boxes are owned by the nobility, many of whom occupied them, while others, unable to attend, graciously granted permission for their occupancy by others; but hundreds were turned away. The meeting was held under the auspices of the "International Bible Students Association." The speaker said:—

It is appropriate that on this day, celebrated and recognized as the anniversary of Pentecost, we should consider the import, and have well in mind what we celebrate. I therefore take as my text, the words of St. Peter explanatory of the occasion: "This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall have the vision which your ancients dreamed of; and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days my Spirit, and they shall proclaim." (I give you a preferred translation.)—Acts ii, 16-18.

St. Peter declares that the outpouring of the holy Spirit upon the waiting believers at Pentecost was mentioned by Joel the Prophet, but he does not say that all of the prophecy was fulfilled there and then. As a matter of fact we know that the holy Spirit was not then poured out on all flesh; it was poured out merely upon God's servants and hand-maidens. A careful inspection shows us that there are two parts to the prophecy—(1) All flesh, and (2) God's servants and hand-maidens. The order of the blessing is also stated. It will come upon all flesh after those days, but upon the servants and hand-maidens in those days. The days mentioned evidently refer to this Gospel age—from Pentecost to the second coming of Christ.

In this period, of now nearly nineteen centuries, God's holy Spirit has been granted to his faithful ones, and to these alone. Only the fully consecrated have been accepted of the Lord as living sacrifices, and only such have been begotten of the holy Spirit, that they may be "new creatures in Christ." During all this time, the world has been unrecognized so far as the holy Spirit is concerned. Indeed, the Apostle after Pentecost went still further and declared that "the whole world lieth in the Wicked One." The only action of the holy Spirit must be, as in the case of Felix, to "reprove the world of sin and righteousness, and of a coming judgment." Our text declares, however, that the time is coming when the world will receive a share of the great Divine blessing, which was fully assured by the death of Christ. But its time of favor will be "after those days"—after this Gospel Age shall have come to an end; after the New Dispensation, the Millennial Age, shall have come. Let us note first the blessings belonging to this Gospel Age, in which we are specially interested, and subsequently let us notice the blessings that God has promised shall come to all mankind.

The Church's Pentecost.

It is not sufficient that we say that a Pentecostal blessing came upon the followers of Jesus in the upper room at Jerusalem, totally different from anything that had been known in the world before. We want to know why it was so; and if a blessing, why it did not come sooner to God's people? We remember Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Daniel, the Prophets; we recognize the fact that they were grand characters, and, as St. Paul said, "They had this testimony that they pleased God." Yet there was no Pentecostal outpouring in their day, nor until the age of man in the world was more than four thousand years. Why was this? We answer that God has his own times and seasons for the various features of his work.

We recall the words of our Lord Jesus, respecting his forerunner, "Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding he that is least in the Kingdom of heaven is greater than he" (Matthew xi. 11). Why could not John, and others of the prophets preceding him, enter in and enjoy this Gospel favor? We answer, in the language of St. Paul, "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Hebrews xi. 40). Our Creator has great gifts to dispense to our race through the Redeemer, and it is for him to determine the times and the seasons for the dispensing of these blessings, and to whom they shall go. According to the Divine arrangement, the Redeemer had first to die as man's Ransom-Price, before any of the race could come back into full relationship with the Creator. It is true that by faith Abraham and others of the past did enjoy certain of God's favors, and much of his fellowship, but none could be received into full sonship and joint-heirship with Christ, until first their sins had been cancelled. Then they could be accepted in Christ on the terms which the Father has appointed.

Those very disciples who received the blessing in the upper room on Pentecost, had forsaken sin, had become Jesus' disciples, had made full consecration of all their earthly hopes and interests, had been accepted by the Lord Jesus, and he had put his Spirit upon them, enabling them to do many mighty works in his name. However, it was one thing to do mighty works through his spirit, or power, and another matter to possess that spirit inherently—to act directly as agents of Divine favor instead of indirectly. It is in harmony with this thought that we read that after our Lord breathed upon them the holy Spirit, symbolically imparting his Spirit, and commissioning them as his representatives to preach the Gospel, he told them, nevertheless, to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power—the holy Spirit—until the Father should recognize them directly as his ministers and ambassadors.

From the standpoint of Divine Justice, the Apostles and believers were still under the sentence of death as sinners at the time of our Lord's death, at the time of his resurrection, at the time of his ascension. Then he said to them, "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you" (John xvi. 7). After the forty days, invisibly present with his disciples, except on a few occasions for a few moments each, our Lord ascended, and after ten days the holy Spirit from the Father came upon the waiting household of faith. It evidenced to them the fact that their sins had been forgiven for Christ's sake, that they were justified freely from all things through his sacrifice, and that their consecration to sacrifice themselves had been accepted of the Father, and that henceforth they might count themselves as "joint-sacrificers with Christ," "members of his Body," members of "the Church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven," members of the "Seed of Abraham" (Galatians iii, 29).

Keys of the Kingdom.

The Master in speaking to St. Peter assured him that to him were committed the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, which signified that the way into the Kingdom at that time had not yet been opened, and that Peter would be honored by being the Lord's servant to do the opening work. There were two of these "keys," and therefore there were two opening works to be accomplished.

The Church, under Christ her Lord, is God's kingdom, not yet set up or established "in power and great glory"—not yet finished or inaugurated. The work of this Gospel Age is to "call" or invite such as have a hearing ear to become joint-heirs in this Kingdom, for which he taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." So many as genuinely accept this heavenly calling, this "high calling" to glory, honor, and immortality, are probationary members of the Kingdom of Heaven. Such are Scripturally exhorted to continue faithful to their vows of consecration, and thus make their calling and election sure to a place in this glorious Kingdom, which will be inaugurated at the second coming of Christ. But the Lord instructs all saying, "Sit down first and count the cost" (Luke xiv, 28); "but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him" (Hebrews x, 38).

All who are thus spirit-begotten (by the holy Spirit, John i, 13) during this age are promised a spirit birth, to spirit-being in the resurrection. We read, "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: It is sown an animal body; it is raised a spiritual body. . . . For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (I Corinthians xv, 42-44, 50). The entire period between the first advent and the second advent of our Redeemer is set apart in the Divine Program for this great work of selecting from amongst men the "little flock," such as shall be counted worthy of these honors on the spirit plane, and the privilege of participating with Messiah in his great work of the next age.

To the Jew First.

Only Jews received the Pentecostal blessing. The Gentiles were excluded for three and a half years thereafter, in harmony with a Divine promise made to the Jewish nation. Then came the time for a similar privilege to be extended to the Gentiles, and the record informs us that Cornelius was the first Gentile to be received into spiritual relationship with God. He was a good man, and had been a good man for years; he prayed often, and gave much alms to the people, but until then, the middle wall of partition separated between Jew and Gentile. Even then he could not be received of God because of his works, or prayers, or alms, but must first be instructed respecting Christ and his redemptive work, and must believe and accept the same. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv, 12), either in this age or in any other.

Thus it was that, in harmony with our Redeemer's promise, St. Peter used the "key" which introduced the Gentiles to the Pentecostal blessings. As he used the first key on the Day of Pentecost in explaining to the multitudes of Jews the meaning of the Pentecostal blessings, and the privilege that they had of entering into the Divine favor thereby, so, at this later date, the Lord instructed Cornelius to send for Peter, saying, "Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodging in the house of one Simon a tanner by the seaside; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee" (Acts x, 32; xi, 14, 15). Thus were the two "keys" used by St. Peter, and thus were the doors of the Gospel favor—the high-calling of joint-heirship with Jesus—thrown open, both to Jews and to Gentiles, through faith in the precious blood. The doors thus thrown open are not yet closed; but, as we sometimes sing, "That gate was left ajar for me."

I rejoice with you today, fellow-students of the Word of God, that this great gift of God is still obtainable, that the time has not yet fully come when the door of opportunity to this high-calling must close. Close it will, so soon as the full number of the "elect" shall be completed. Thank God that another door will then open: the door of Restitution to human perfection and to earthly life, grand beyond the power of description.

But the blessed opportunity of this Pentecostal favor is still granted. As St. Peter declares in his epistle, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature" (II Peter i, 4). The door to this divine nature is the one that will soon shut, as our Redeemer illustrated in the parable of the "Wise and Foolish Virgins." When a sufficient number of "wise virgins" shall have entered to complete the bride-class, forthwith the door of opportunity to that station, to that class, to that honor, to the divine nature, will be closed, and the elect of God will be neither one more nor one less than the number originally foreordained.

"My Spirit Upon All Flesh."

St. Paul speaks of this Gospel age saying, "Now is the acceptable time; today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Not all hear his voice in these days. The great mass of mankind have not even heard of the name of Jesus, and consequently could not harden their hearts against him, nor against the terms now offered for return to fellowship with God. This is the acceptable time or period of salvation, in the sense that God is now willing to accept the offerings of believers if they present their bodies living sacrifices. St. Paul declares that this is a reasonable service, holy and acceptable to God (Rom. xii, 1).

The testimony to the Church and the high-calling have been open during this Gospel Age. The testimony to the world and the blessings under that testimony will be during the Millennial Age. The death of Jesus is "the propitiation (satisfaction) for our sins (the Church's), and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world"—in due time, during the Millennial Age (I John ii, 2). For, as the Apostle Paul declares, "there shall be a resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust" (Acts xxiv, 15). That will be the time for the precious merit of Jesus' sacrifice to be made known, to be understood, to be appreciated, and to bring its blessed results of restitution to who-so-ever will receive the same.

Then God's holy Spirit—holy power will, through Christ, be outpoured upon all flesh—upon all mankind. Messiah will inaugurate the new dispensation by sealing with Israel the New Covenant in his blood; as says the Lord through the Apostle Paul, "This is my Covenant with them when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the Gospel they are enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes" (Romans xi, 27, 28).

This out-pouring of the holy Spirit is not merely for Israel, nor God's blessing merely upon Abraham's natural seed outside the Church class. It will include all of every nation desirous of coming into accord with God, after they shall have come to a clear knowledge of the Truth. All nations shall be privileged to enter into and enjoy Israel's great Covenant, by becoming children of Abraham through faith. And all rejectors of God's grace having been destroyed in the Second Death, the world of mankind will constitute the promised seed of Abraham, whose number shall be as the sands of the seashore, even as the spirit-begotten ones of this Gospel Age are likened to the stars of heaven.

The Ancients, the Prophets, St. Peter declares, have all spoken of these glorious "times of restitution," and it will be during these times when the Lord shall pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, that the people may realize what the Ancients had seen in vision and in dreams—"the wilderness blossoming as a rose," "the solitary place being glad," "fountains in the desert," "the knowledge of the Lord filling the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep, and none needing to say to his neighbor, Know thou the Lord, for all shall know him from the least to the greatest."

Lesson VIII.—Second Quarter, For May 22, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xiv, 1-12. Memory Verses, 10-12—Golden Text, Prov. xvi, 32—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

For the present we are asked by the committee to pass by the wonderful thirteenth chapter—why, I know not—but we will return to it in a few weeks and have three lessons in it. Although this lesson today gives an account of the beheading of John the Baptist, the sad event evidently took place some time previous. But now, Herod hearing of the fame of Jesus, his guilty conscience tells him that it is John whom he had murdered. He was perplexed because some said that John was risen from the dead, some said that Elijah had appeared and others that one of the old prophets was risen again. Herod said, "Who is this of whom I hear such things?" And he desired to see Him (Luke ix, 7-9). Herod's question, "Who is this?" is an all important one. See also Luke v, 21; vii, 49; Matt. xxi, 10; Isa. lxiii, 1; Jer. xxx, 21, where the question is in connection with the forgiveness of sins, the son of David, the Messiah and the One who is to judge the nations. As our Lord put it to Simon Peter, "Whom say ye that I am?" (Matt. xvi, 15.) It should take hold of each one of us, and unless we can from the heart reply as Peter did it will be bad for us. "What is Jesus Christ to me?" is the great question.

In a previous lesson we saw messengers coming to Jesus from John in the prison, but now we have the account of his imprisonment and execution. Herod feared John, knowing him to be a just and holy man, and he heard him gladly and did many things. But Herod had taken his brother Philip's wife and was living with her, and John had told him that it was not lawful. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel (margin, inward grudge) against John and would have killed him, but she could not. But Herod had imprisoned John for Herodias' sake (Mark vi, 17-20). For some idea of what a wicked, unscrupulous woman can do see I Kings xxi, 7-15, and II Kings xi, 1, and consider that Babylon, which is said to be guilty of the blood of all that were slain upon the earth, is compared to a woman arrayed in purple and scarlet and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls (Rev. xvii, 4; xviii, 24). The life of John in prison must have been a sad and lonely one indeed were it not that he had access to God, with whom he had spent so many years in the wilderness. No prison walls can shut out God or the angels, and an eternity of glory will more than compensate for the greatest sufferings of the saints on earth (Rom. viii, 18).

Birthday parties should be happy occasions and innocent affairs, but this one of our lesson was one of the worst on record. It was a great affair, being a supper made by Herod for his lords, high captains and chief estates of Galilee. On this occasion the daughter of the wicked Herodias danced so acceptably to Herod and them that sat with him that Herod promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask. According to Mark (verse 23), "He sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom." What an outcome of a drunken revel and a dance! The result of dancing in our times, so often accompanied by drink if not by drunkenness, has never been fully written, but enough has been written to lead thoughtful people to renounce the whole thing and especially the fashionable dancing school. If you care to know, write Dr. Sylvanus Stall of Philadelphia for further information. If the church had a tithe of the zeal of the devil to lead souls astray, how many might by the church be pointed to Him who is able to save from going down to the pit! But where is the zeal referred to in the words, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (John ii, 17; Ps. lxix, 9).

The girl went forth and said to her mother, "What shall I ask?" And, being instructed by her mother, she asked for the head of John the Baptist. Quickly it is brought to her, and she carried it to her mother. Did ever a daughter carry or a mother receive so grewsome a gift? Yet this is in our day made into a play to entertain thoughtless people. The murder of John meant in due time the murder of Jesus, and the world lying in the wicked one seeks and applauds this kind of entertainment. It is written that the king was sorry, but the sorrow that does not lead to doing right amounts to nothing, and I fear that he has been sorry ever since and will be forever. According to Phil. i, 21, 23, it was a gain to John, a very far better, for he has been well and happy ever since. His disciples took up the body and buried it, but they did not bury John. We never bury people, but only the bodies in which they lived awhile. There shall be a resurrection of all dead bodies, those of the just and the unjust, but there shall be an interval of 1,000 years between (Luke xiv, 14; xx, 35; Acts xxiv, 15; Rev. xx, 5). The disciples of John went and told Jesus. That is the thing to do always and about everything, and then we shall know the peace of God which passeth all understanding (Phil. iv, 6, 7). Then also shall we know what it means to be guided in all things by Him (Prov. iii, 5, 6).

OTHER GREAT ARE SAILING IN THE SKY

Halley's Big One Is Not the Only Pebble on the Beach.

Halley's is neither the biggest nor the brightest comet that ever sent a superstitious past into paraxysms of terror. In ancient as well as in modern times comets have appeared which far outshone it in splendor and which far surpassed it in size.

By all odds, it seems to be fairly well agreed among astronomers that Donati's comet of 1854 was the most remarkable on record. The memory of its brilliancy and its size still lingers with many who saw it in their younger days. Its orbit was found to be a huge ellipse and its period of revolution 2,040 years. There is some evidence that it might have been identical with a great comet recorded by Seneca as having appeared in B. C. 146. At one time the nucleus was 5,600 miles in diameter and the entire head 250,000 miles in diameter, and the entire greatest length attained by the tail was 51,000,000 miles. Seven successive envelopes were seen to rise from the comet, one after another, each moving upward at the general rate of something like 30 miles an hour. At one time it had three tails. It was computed that the volume of the comet was about 500 times that of the sun. Yet the actual quantity of matter which it contained was only a fraction of the earth's mass.

Famous, too, is the comet of 1811, which Napoleon thought was a sign of the success which awaited his Russian invasion. Altogether it seems to have been almost equal to Donati's comet in brightness and certainly exceeded it in size; for its head was 1,250,000 miles in diameter and its tail 100,000,000 miles long. Like Donati's comet, it was found to revolve in a huge elliptical orbit, which will cause it to gleam again in our skies in the year 4876, if it be still in existence. The year 1811 was that of the celebrated port wine vintage of Portugal, and "comet wine" figured for a long period of years in the price list of wine merchants, in the cellar books of many private houses, and in the advertisements of auction sales.

The comet of 1744 was remarkable for its six tails spread out over the sky like a wonderful luminous fan. For a long time the single contemporaneous drawing in which those wonderful tails were depicted was looked upon with incredulity by astronomers. All distrust has since been removed by ample confirmatory testimony. It was visible throughout a period of seventeen months.

WATCH OAKLAND GROW.

A Modern City on the Crest of the Alleghany Mountains.

Oakland, the county seat of Garrett county, Maryland, is situated in a magnificent farming country. Agriculture being the true basis of all continued prosperity, this industry alone could support a city or several thousand people, where most crops of the temperate zone are produced and where total failures are wholly unknown. In addition to the staple crops of wheat, oats, corn, rye, potatoes, buckwheat, maple sugar, hay, etc., this section is a great apple country, and many varieties of fruits, berries and vegetables grow with little attention.

Yet, these are by no means all the advantages nature has so prodigally bestowed upon this community. Right at our doors are rich deposits of coal, kaolin, pure glass sand, fire and potters' clay, an inexhaustible supply of brick and tile shale, abundant supply of natural gas for lighting, heating and manufacturing purposes, the purest water on earth, a great supply of water power only waiting harness to illuminate this mountain top, and supply factories and electric railways with power.

Oakland is situated in the center of a plateau twenty by sixty miles in extent, two thousand eight hundred feet above the sea, where it is never too hot for comfort and never too cold for convenience; America's ideal summer resort; America's greatest health resort; where we sleep under two or more blankets all summer long and you, who reside in the lowlands or large centers of population, are sweltering with the heat and breathing humid, unhealthy and poisoned air. Here the drives are grand in prospect and glorious in nature's garb; where some new scene greets the vision at every turn of the road. $238,000.00 is being spent on State highways radiating from Oakland.

Come to Western Maryland, young man, and grow up with the country. If you prefer to invest in agricultural lands or fruit lands, you will find prices ranging from five to fifty dollars per acre, depending upon location and improvements These are attractive investments without risk of loss. We also invite factories and industries of all kinds, and believe that this location offers the best advantages on account of the abundance of raw material, cheap fuel and accessibility to market.

When you consider that right here, within six hours of the Nation's capital, is a country with almost unbounded resources, with a variety of everything: Water Works, Sewerage, Natural Gas, a healthy climate, where hay fever and many ills to which the human race is heir in less favored climes, is entirely unknown; a land of pure and abundant water, a land of churches and schools, without any race or other vexatious problems, and where the small investor along with the man of more pretentious capital has opportunities commensurate with his pluck, intelligence and energy, of an equal start in life, then you will readily concede the importance and correctness of the advice given herein.

"The Creator is still making people, but no more land." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune and fame."

Don't miss the opportunity of a lifetime and regret it for years to come. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Oakland is on the boom, and you should get on the band wagon if you wish to be in the procession.

One fluid ounce (one-quarter of a gill) equals eight drams.

A piece of butter as large as a small egg weighs two ounces.

Nine large or twelve small eggs weigh one pound with the shells off.

One level teacupful of butter or granulated sugar weighs half a pound.

One quart of sifted flour (well heaped) weighs one pound.

A common sized tumbler holds about one-half pint.

Four cupfuls of liquid, one quart.—Chicago Tribune.

Hints For Housewives.

To make a neat darn use old veils of coarse mesh. Pieces to fit are basted over the holes and make a guide through which to work the darning cotton.

The kitchen bouquet which is so often called for in recipes for soups consists of several sprigs of parsley, one of thyme and one of celery, one blade of mace, a small pepper and a blade of cinnamon tied together or sewed in a cheesecloth bag.

Vanilla extract should be kept in a dark place, as it loses its strength when exposed to light.

Remedy For Croup.

Take one-half pint bottle to a drug store and get 5 cents' worth of friar's balsam (not patented). Fill the bottle with the best molasses, shake very thoroughly and give a teaspoonful, more or less, every two hours until cough is better. In cases of croup commence the mixture as soon as the first symptoms appear. Lay a cold water compress on the throat and cover with flannel. Wring out the compress in cold water as often as it gets warm.

Dresden Chocolate Crumb.

Mix one cupful of stale bread crumbs, one-half cupful of grated unsweetened chocolate, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt. Put in a pan and bake in a moderate oven until the chocolate is melted and the crumbs are thoroughly heated. Fill individual paper cases two-thirds with the mixture and top with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

Cabinet For Sheet Music.

The music cabinet herewith shown is the invention of a New York man. This cabinet is a three sided affair, revolving on a stationary stand. The compartments for the music are arranged in the form of steps and hold the sheets in a vertical position with titles of each showing above the titles of those below. In such a stand several hundred pieces of music may be kept without confusion, and any one can be found almost at a glance. To facilitate matters the sheets may be kept in alphabetical order or the vocal or instrumental music can be separated, or both methods may be used in conjunction.

Cream of Corn Soup.

One can of corn, one pint of water. Let simmer five minutes. Add three cupfuls of milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter in a pan, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of onion, one cupful of milk and sieved yolks of two hard boiled eggs cooked to a bubbling. Add corn and milk; then strain. Salt and pepper to taste. This is a rich soup.

Vinegar Sauce.

Take half a cup of vinegar, one pint of water, half cup of sugar and half teaspoonful of ground cinnamon. Put over the fire in a granite or porcelain lined saucepan. Wet one heaping tablespoonful of flour in a little water and add to the vinegar when it boils.

Molasses Pie.

Into one cupful of thick dark molasses stir one teaspoonful of flour. Cut a lemon in slices, carefully remove all seeds and chop it fine. Mix with the molasses and pour into a plate covered with a crust. Add an upper crust and bake in a hot oven.

To Remove Rust From Marble.

Make a paste of two parts of soda, one of powdered pumice and one of salt. Sift, mix with water, rub well and wash off.

FILLING RUTS IN A ROAD.

How the Work of Repairing Them Should Be Done.

With earth roads there is a pronounced tendency to rut, and when ruts begin to appear on the surface great care should be used in selecting new materials with which they should be immediately filled, says a bulletin of the department of agriculture. Every hole or rut in the roadway if not tamped full of some good material like that of which the road is constructed will become filled with water and will be made deeper and wider by each passing vehicle. A hole which could have been filled with a shovelful of material will soon need a cartful. The rut or hole to be repaired should be cleared of dust, mud or water and just sufficient good fresh earth placed in it to be even with the surrounding surface after having been thoroughly consolidated with the pounder. Soil should not be placed on the surface. Neither should the surface be ruined by throwing upon it the wornout material from the gutters alongside. Ruts and holes should not be filled with stone or gravel unless a considerable section is to be so treated, for if such material is dumped into the holes or ruts it does not wear uniformly with the rest of the road, but produces lumps and ridges and in many cases results in making two holes for every one repaired.

RUTS THAT NEED TO BE FILLED.

Reversible road machines are often used in drawing the material out of ditches to the center of the roadway, which is left there to be washed again into the ditches by the first heavy rain. A far more satisfactory method when the roadway is sufficiently high and where a heavy roller cannot be had is to trim the shoulders and ridges off and smooth the surface with the machine. This work should begin in the center of the road, and the loose dirt should be gradually pushed to the ditches and finally shoved off the roadway or deposited where it will not be washed back into the ditches by rain.

ARE OUR ROADS TOO WIDE?

German Highways Narrower, but Better Maintained, Says a Consul.

The following information concerning the superiority of the highways of Germany as compared with those of the United States is furnished by Robert J. Thompson, consul at Hanover:

German roads are perhaps subjected to a hundred times more traffic than similar roads in the United States. These roads range from twenty to thirty feet in width, while in our middle and western states, where traffic is comparatively light, we take land of an average value of $100 per acre and cut it up with roadways sixty-six feet in width, practically two-thirds of the same being given over to weeds, which furnish an inexhaustible supply of seeds for the adjoining farm lands. The farmer in Germany who has conquered the weeds on his ground need have no thought of them being started again from uncultivated or uncared for land along the roadways. There are no weeds, no mud, no chuck holes, no sand stretches in the roads.

One of the simplest and most practical measures that could be taken for the betterment of roads in the United States would be to reduce their width to from one-third to one-half of what they now are.

In the United States public highways in the states given below may be estimated as follows: Minnesota, 80,000; Wisconsin, 60,000; Michigan, 60,000; Iowa, 70,000; Kansas, 70,000; Nebraska, 50,000; Missouri, 80,000; Illinois, 80,000; Indiana, 70,000; Ohio, 80,000; total, 700,000 miles. Reducing the width of these public highways, which now average sixty-six feet, to thirty-six feet would give back to the farmers of these states for cultivation 2,500,000 acres of generally tillable land, which at an average valuation of $100 per acre would mean the restoration to the producing values of the states named of $250,000,000.

Road Building to Music.

Major L. W. V. Kennon in building the Benguet road through the mountains of northern Luzon, Philippine Islands, was obliged to study the character of his 4,000 native employees and adopt peculiar methods of developing their efficiency. He found that music was the best incentive to work. He had a band follow the gangs wherever they went and play as the men worked. From laborers worth 10 cents a day he developed the men into musical machines working in cadence with drum beats. Finally in closing up the work he made a wager that the road would be finished by a certain day. He promised a good cigar to every laborer if he won the bet. He won.

COMPULSORY TOWN PLANNING

How American Foresight Has Impressed Our Neighbors Across the Sea.

The magnificent ambition with which our young towns plan out their future growth has sometimes amused foreigners, especially those from old settled countries where the growth of a town has usually been spread over far too long a period to admit of any general plan beforehand. Dickens laughed in his "American Notes" and "Martin Chuzzlewit" at the disparity between aspiration and achievement not only in the Mississippi Eden, but in the national capital. Since his day, however, those ambitious forecasts have so often "come true" or near it that some later travelers are not unnaturally discovering another than a humorous side to them.

John Burns, for instance, who is now president of the local government board in England, seems to have been chiefly impressed on his American tours with the practical usefulness of the foresight involved in these schemes. Though mushroom cities are rare in England, it is no uncommon thing in this industrial era, when the peasants are deserting agriculture for urban employments, to see an ancient town suddenly expand to double or treble the size it has attained in the course of several centuries.

These additions have usually come higgledy-piggledy with no provident attention to the claims of beauty and comfort. John Burns has asked himself why something of the American foresight should not be imported. His answer is contained in an interesting section of the local government bill which he is now piloting through parliament.

This "town planning" section, as it is called, goes beyond any instrument we possess for attaining the same end. It practically empowers the central government to compel towns all over the country to regulate their expansion along aesthetic and hygienic lines. The local government board will invite every town to study its possibilities of future growth and the desirable or probable direction of the movement and to draw up a plan for buying adequate park lands, etc., in advance.

The plan will be revised by the board, and when finally shaped the board will require the town authorities to carry it out. The board will also help them to carry it out. For instance, if the scheme involves the purchase of private property as to which the town authorities cannot come to satisfactory terms with the owner the board will fix the price, and its decision is to be absolute.

WOMEN IMPROVING TOWN.

Rendering Great Service In the Betterment of Walla Walla, Wash.

The Woman's Park club of Walla Walla, Wash., is giving a fine demonstration of the service that women may render in behalf of civic improvement. Of course the women's clubs which are devoted to educational and musical interests occupy an important place among the organizations that work for the highest welfare of the community, but there is also room for societies of women with purposes like that of the park club.

Many distinguished women have urged their sex to show at least as much interest in civic improvement as in self culture. A large number of clubs throughout the country devote their attention to specific work for their towns, and more would do so if they knew how to make a beginning.

The Walla Walla women are to build a children's summer house, with a rest room for mothers who come to the park with their children, toilet rooms and an open apartment for use as a summer nursery. The club will also put more boats on the lake, lay out tennis and croquet courts and hire an instructor to lead the children in their games and teach them the use of the equipment.

This is an enterprise of great worth, and the women of the park club should receive full credit for the good they are doing. It has not been easy work. The last $300 was earned by running a restaurant during the fair week.

Do Trading at Home.

The local trader is entitled to the support of the neighborhood served. In and about great cities, while this is conceded, consumers in suburban places will rush to the cities, although money can be saved by trading at home. The ratio of selling cost to gross profit is far heavier in the city where rents are exceedingly high, an item in itself 5 or 10 per cent greater than in the country. All is in favor of the local store, provided it maintains a satisfactory service. Somehow people love the excitement of the trip, yield to the allurements of the department and chain stores, and in that respect city consumers are equally unmindful of the local store. In England the same conditions exist, but the traders there have begun a campaign of education in an attempt to keep trade at home.—Cleveland Leader.

The Moribund Town.

A town that never has anything to do in a public way is on the way to the cemetery. Any citizen who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig the grave. A man that curses his town furnishes the coffin. The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business to give to city affairs is making the shroud. The man who will not advertise is driving the hearse. The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise throws bouquets on the grave. The man who is so stingy to be howling hard times preaches the funeral, sings the doxology, and thus the town lies buried from all sorrow and care.—Wamego Weekly Times.

THE SKELETON IN THE CLOSET.

A Rattling of Its Bones That Terrified Its Keepers.

By GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Beverly Westlake drifted into Lakeville an obscure, poverty stricken man and by dint of hard work and shrewd business investments prospered until he was by common consent counted the leading citizen and merchant of that enterprising metropolis.

Jack Lecon entered Lakeville under a Pullman car. Jack was walking on Grand street when Beverly Westlake swung around the corner and walked toward him.

Jack's first impulse was to vanish but on second thought he remained passive and motionless, staring in surprise and wonder at the approaching figure. His eyes were bulging, and his mouth stood agape. With the confident swing of the successful and well satisfied man, Beverly Westlake walked along, scarcely noticing the silent beggar on the street—not until the man's voice startled him violently from his mental repose.

"Hello, Peachy!" was the irreverent salute of Jack. "Why, you're some elegant! How'd ye get the lift?"

The leading merchant, philanthropist, financier and exponent of the higher success wheeled abruptly, stared at the questioner, turned red, then white, gripped his hands and moved forward as if to pass without a word, thought better of it, stopped and frowned and finally mopped his forehead with nervous agitation. Jack Lecon was all smiles and his manner as affable as a man who had called a bluff and knew he was stalking big game.

"Quite a bit of time since we met, Peachy," he continued, extending a hand, which Beverly ignored. "Some difference in us now, ain't there? You got the swell cut all right and the figger to carry it out, but I—why, I ain't good for much. I'm jest sick and down in luck."

The words trailed off into a whine. Then, with a sudden change of base, Jack added, with a little triumph in his voice:

"But I got my discharge all right, and you didn't."

There was a remarkable and pitiful transformation in Mr. Westlake. The skin wrinkled, and the complexion turned a sickly red, dotted with yellowish and purplish spots.

"I say, Jack—Mr. Lecon," he stammered when he could control his voice, "what do you want—money?"

"I ain't no bloated aristocrat that I refuses it," leered Jack, with an ingratiating grin.

Mr. Westlake fumbled in his coat pockets and produced a roll of bills that caused poor Jack to gasp.

"Take this," said the merchant, extending a generous wad of the freshly minted green, "and—and don't bother me again, Jack—Mr. Lecon, I mean—that is, if—if— Don't you want a ticket to the Pacific coast, where the climate is very agreeable at this season of the year? I'll furnish you with one."

But Jack Lecon was no quitter when on the easy trail of a victim. He was garrulous by turns and much addicted to the use of strong tonics. At such moments he tried to make love to Alice, Westlake's brave and devoted wife, and openly flouted his benefactor. The uneasy head which wore the crown of riches was bowed under the burden thus placed so suddenly upon his shoulders. But for Alice he would have quit and confessed all.

"I'll go away, my dear," he groaned in agony of spirit, "or I'll kill myself—no, kill him! He's the devil incarnate."

But Alice soothed and cautioned him against rashness. Imagine the mortification of having a low down brute installing himself in your home, insulting your wife and making free with your money and servants and always holding the threat of an awful exposure over your head—a veritable sword of Damocles, but ten times keener of edge and suspended not by a thread, but by a tiny spider's web.

"No; we cannot go away," Alice said in a soft voice. "We must stay and bear our burden for the present. You have lived down your early disgrace and proved yourself a repentant man."

"But the law doesn't recognize that," bitterly complained the broken down capitalist. "If I escaped from prison before my time expired I'm still a criminal in the eyes of the law. Oh, if I had been patient a little longer!"

Alice comforted him with words of caressing affection, but the iron had entered his soul, and he continued to cry out:

"To think this drunken brute should have his freedom without fear of capture or exposure! I'll kill the wretch if"—

"No, dear, you won't do any such thing—for my sake."

Jack's excesses became so disgusting in time that even sweet Alice's patience and endurance were sorely tried. Her faith in her sense of duty was showing signs of wavering when suddenly without warning Jack's skeleton kicked open the closet and fell sprawling on the floor.

The key was held by a quiet, thickset man of dark complexion, who called one evening to interview Mr. Westlake in the quiet of his study. Alice was there and hung over her husband as if to protect him.

"Mr. Westlake," announced the quiet stranger, "you have in your employ a man of the name of Jack Lecon, I believe?"

Beverly winced a little at the word "employ," and he was inclined to laugh at the irony of the thrust. Yes, he was in his employ, but a rather expensive employee. He nodded, with a smile, to indicate his comprehension.

"Well, sir," continued the stranger, "this man is a convict—escaped from the federal prison some months ago."

Beverly Westlake saw all kinds of pink and white spots, and he glanced up to see if the electric lights had changed their colors. Incidentally he felt the strangulating constriction of his wife's arms around his neck. He realized that he was pale and that his heart had almost ceased to beat.

"There is nothing to fear, Mr. Westlake. The house is surrounded, and we will capture him without any outcry. He is a desperate character—killed his guard when he escaped—and we have made special plans to capture him without danger to you or your household. I merely called on you to prepare your wife for any struggle that may follow. You understand?" Yes, Beverly understood, and Alice too.

"Alice," he said slowly, "you had better retire to your room. I will go with—with this man to find Jack."

Intuitively she caught his meaning. She hesitated but a moment and then kissed him as if to withdraw.

"I don't think we shall need your services," the officer said, with a confident air. "Our plans are all carefully laid, and by this time Jack Lecon should be a prisoner. I came here partly to engage your attention while my men secured him. I think now," consulting his watch, "the struggle must be over. We will go and see."

They passed through the great hall in solemn procession and then turned to mount the broad stairs to Jack's room. He lived in comfort and luxury away from the servants as a man set apart for special favors.

But they did not ascend the stairs. A swift figure glided down the polished marble and intercepted them—a figure that halted but an instant and then would have passed on with insistent purpose. The officer, startled by the movement, turned hurriedly and asked:

"What is it, Sheldon? Anything wrong?"

The gliding figure came to a reluctant halt and replied respectfully:

"Yes, sir; he escaped and jumped out of the window. But Jansen and Holden must have him. They were below."

There was a hurried exit from the house, and Alice forgot her dignity and scant footgear. The moon was at its zenith outside, and the crisp wintry air made the blood tingle. The frozen ground was as hard as rock, and little frost bulbs gathered on every tree and shrub.

A voice from out of the muffled silence of the night smote their ears as they turned a corner of the house.

"We have him, sir," it said calmly. "He jumped and fell on his head—hurt a little, I guess."

They gathered around a dark heap on the silver frosted ground where the twisted limbs of a man were sprawled like the four corners of a star. There was a queer limpness to the neck when the head was raised, and Alice covered her eyes and shuddered. If she divined the meaning of it she did not confess it even to herself. It was Jansen who pronounced the verdict.

"Neck broken, I guess," he said coolly. "Yes, sir, and dead as a doornail."

The leader of the men knelt over the prostrate form of Jack Lecon, and after a close examination he said, with finality in his voice:

"Yes, he's dead."

Turning toward the Westlakes, he said in way of explanation and apology: "I'm sorry we couldn't take him away without creating a scene. But I suppose now it must come out in the papers. The coroner must be summoned."

Alice drew a deep breath, and Beverly wiped the frost gathered on his mustache with a hand that trembled. His lips only mechanically muttered the commonplace words:

"You have only done your duty, officer—only your duty—and I thank you."

They turned slowly and walked up the steps of the spacious piazza and entered their palatial home. Their family skeleton was back in the closet and carefully nailed up and sealed. Would it ever break out again?

A LESSON IN THE HEAVENS.

Commenting on Halley's comet, our esteemed contemporary, the New York World, indulges in eloquence. "Measurements past comprehension, speed inconceivable, wanderings transcending the power of man to imagine are in Halley's comet; no more marvelous than the genius that plots its path, times its return, establishes by spetroscopy its likeness to the cold earth and the burning stars."

If these things fill our minds with wonder and amazement, how much more should we be filled with awe when we contemplate the incomprehensible Omnipotence that not only created Halley's comet and set its course in the universe, but created and inspired the human mind, which has succeeded in plotting that course and measuring the time of the wanderer's return, and which has said to that human intellect "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther!"

The old idea that comets were fearful beacons, portending disaster, has faded away; but, like the unwearied sun and the stars in the heaven, they still teach the lesson conveyed in the old familiar lines;

In Reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice;
Forever singing as they shine:
The Hand that made us is divine.

THE COLONEL AND THE KAISER

Now that they have met—the colonel and the kaiser—felt the grip of each other's good right hand, gazed into each other's resolute and unflinching eyes, naturally one wonders what the colonel thinks of the kaiser and the kaiser of the colonel.

Certain it is that they have formed a sort of long-distance, close corporation, mutual admiration society for several years. The kaiser has been the colonel's European ideal; the colonel the kaiser's American ideal. Among kings, the kaiser has been Exhibit A in the colonel's philosophy; among republicans, the former president of the United States has been the kaiser's bright and particular star.

What ever they think of each other, now that they have met, however, the meeting was an interesting one, and compelled the entire world's attention. Undoubtedly, Emperor William is the most picturesque figure among the earth's royalty. Our own strenuous colonel surely has more medals than anybody else pinned to his manly chest as a real, live, republican executive.

A new and acutely distressing problem presents itsself. Now that they have stood side by side—the colonel and the kaiser—which subsequently shall be entitled to stand alone at the very head of the class? Patriotism—and something more, perhaps—would prompt our ardent championship of the colonel of course. And yet the kaiser is a compelling person and most engaging from many points of view. He has been called everything that his enemies could think of, but he has made good on every undertaking, nevertheless. He has impressed his personality upon his country ineradicably. All so much like the colonel!

Perhaps we shall have to award first honor to both—agree that neither is the greater; write it down that both are greatest. It is difficult to see how international peace is surely to be preserved if we accept the other platform.

THE GRIP OF GRACE.

Much is said of the grace of God, little of the grace of human kind. No one may undertake to set forth the power of the everlasting arms, few have thought to set forth the power of the supporting arms of human love, friendship and help. The cup of kindness placed to the lip upon the weary way of human toil, the signboards placed where the wayfarer may be directed to the purling brook are little matters of human kindliness. Yet see what has been built upon them. Orders and fraternities by the score have as their motto the grip of grace. They propose to aid and support their members through the grace of human helpfulness and they take pride in the grip being as strong as a cable.

Who can conceive of the men who frame and set in place the great girders and spanning arches of the bridges that seem to be a replica of rainbows in the silhouette of the frosted sky, the amber wave and the light and shadows of the everchanging sun—monuments of human kindliness in physical form—who can conceive of men with such capabilities failing to fashion the sentiment of the race into the cables of security? Love in modern society is not poetry; it is passion and power. Faith is not a tenuous clinging to the expectations and longings of life; it is purpose and province. Hope is no longer the thing that ever springs in the breast; it is the motive power by which the ardent desires finding lodgment in the breast are projected as realities. Is this materialism? Not a bit of it. It is the bringing of the substance of the molecule into the measurement of the man. It is the redemption of matter and the incarnation of the true spirit of social grace. It means to give life a new grip.

How men have longed for this very grace of the human grip, this breath of human sentiment, this touch of the hand of humanity! The hand of God is strong, but somehow there is vastly more assurance in the reality of grace when the hand that comes is warm with the blood that tingles in human veins and strong with the muscles of the human frame. Some day a poet will sing of the marvels of the grip of the hand that clasps in friendship; the hand that closes in sustaining power; the hand that leaves with its warm imprint a sense of the generous impulse in the fellowship of life. Some day it will no longer be regarded as the agency for getting, but for giving; not as the implement of toil, but the guerdon of nobility; not as a factor of selfishness, but the beneficent agency of distribution. The hand that has acquired the grip of grace has greatly advanced the character of the person who owns it, and has added to the advance of humanity along the marvelous upgrade of life.

DOGS AND TAXES.

There are a large number of useless dogs running about town. They are no good to their owners and no good to the community at large. They keep up a barking and yelping at night, scare children, frighten horses, and make themselves a nuisance in general. Most cities and many towns have a license, and every dog is required to wear a tag, or be taken in by the dog catcher. This is a good scheme. Besides putting money in the city treasury it rids the community of numerous worthless curs. We believe our City Council would be highly commended by a majority of the people if the strictly enforced the law requiring all dogs to be tagged, and besides they would be doing their duty. Those who have dogs which they prize for one reason or another would not object to the small tax.

MARYLAND'S WHEAT.

In a crop statement issued Tuesday morning by the Department of Agriculture at Washington it is shown that Maryland's wheat crop is in better condition than that of any other State in the Union. The crop is, of course not the largest, but there is a smaller per cent. of its acreage abandoned than any other wheat-producing State can show. Just 1 per cent. of the winter wheat crop is in bad condition.

The statement shows, further, that there are 794,000 acres of Maryland in wheat, which is a greater acreage than shown by any other Southern State, except Tennessee and Texas. This is slightly more wheat than was reported in Maryland by the department last year.

Maryland's rye crop is also discussed in the statement, but the acreage is not given. The condition of the crop is placed at 92, which is slightly under the condition of rye last year at this time.

A Tribute to Robert H. Gordon.

At a special meeting of the Lawton Literary and Debating Club of Cumberland a committee consisting of Messrs. D. W. Snyder, John MacDonald and C. E. Helman, was appointed to draft a memorial to the late Robert H. Gordon, who died Tuesday evening, May 10th. The memorial submitted was unanimously adopted as follows:

In the sudden death of Capt. Robert Herbert Gordon, the Lawton Literary and Debating Club keenly feels the loss of its best friend and advisor, one who was greatly interested in its progress and who gave the club much encouragement.

The club, in turn, felt honored to have Captain Gordon as an honorary member. He was a man of intelligence who did not hide his light under a bushel. Freely he had received knowledge, freely and gladly he shared it with others. He was a public teacher, therefore we the more keenly feel the loss and extend most sincere sympathy to his family and others near and dear to him.

Captain Gordon fully recognized the omnipotence of the Creator who gave man the power of speech, who made the grass and leaves green, the rose red and the lily white. He loved the Creator, he loved Nature, loved his country and his fellow man. He saw beauty in every living thing. We hold his memory dear.

Misses Effie and Annie Miller, daughters of S. S. Miller, of Springs, left on Friday for a ten days' visit to relatives and friends at Oakland, Md., and Aurora, W. Va.—Elk Lick Star.

Pentecost

Jesus said to His disciples "Go and preach
The gospel to all creatures and to each
Of them, where'er ye find them, do ye break
The Bread of Life that each one may partake.
And do ye go to every land and tribe,
And as ye go about, all praise ascribe
To Him who sends you forth, and in His name
Restore the blind and heal the sick and lame.

"Beloved, I must leave you, but I send
To you another comforter and friend.
The Holy Ghost shall come and dwell within
Your hearts, and help to keep you free from sin.
Its peace and blessing shall on you be laid,
Let not your hearts be troubled or afraid.
Ye shall abide in Me and I in you;
What ye shall ask in My name, will I do."

Then, as the day of Pentecost drew nigh,
They waited for this blessing from on high,
And met with one accord within a place
To there receive this power through His grace.
And suddenly from Heaven there came a sound
As of a mighty wind, and all around
Where the disciples sat, the room was filled
With God's own spirit, and each voice was stilled.

Then appeared unto them cloven tongues of flame
Which sat upon their heads till all became Filled with the Holy Ghost and were amazed
To find that, as they now their voices raised,
They spoke in many tongues before unheard,
That they might spread abroad His holy word
Into the lands where Christ was yet nnknown,
And tell the wonders which His love had shown.

DECORATION DAY DOINGS

Deer Park Making Arrangements for Tournament, Base Ball, Etc.

Under the direction of the Village Improvement Society at Deer Park, a big time is scheduled to take place there on Monday, May 30th, when a tournament will be held, and a game of base ball will be played by the Deer Park and Oakland teams.

In the morning the graves in the cemetery will be decorated and an address will be delivered by Attorney Thomas J. Peddicord, of Oakland, to be followed in the afternoon by the tournament and game of ball as above noted.

A competent committee has been selected by the society to make all arrangements for the occasion and this committee is hard at work to make the day a pleasant one. All are cordially invited to be present.

DEER PARK.

Now that Deer Park has in contemplation a series of local improvements within its corporate limits it is proposed to drop the word "village" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "town."

Mayor Hennen made a full statement at the spring meeting of the Deer Park Improvement Society held last week, and an appropriation, liberal and generous in extent, was made to the town authorities by the society.

Dr. John K. Mitchell presided at the meeting, and gave expression to a feeling of satisfaction at the course pursued by the town authorities. Another meeting was held on Tuesday of this week at the home of Mrs. Lorenzo Thrasher, and business looking to the advancement of the society was transacted.

Civic pride in Deer Park is advancing by leaps and bounds.

Garrett County Barn Burned.

On Saturday night about eleven o'clock the barn of Albert Bolin on what is known as the Isreal Glotfelty farm, in Garrett county, Md., was discovered to be on fire. The blaze had made such headway that it was impossible to save any of the farm implements stored in the barn.

Mr. Bolin keeps his horses and other live stock in another building, therefore did not lose any of them. The origin of the fire is a mystery as there was no one about the building with a light of any kind as far as is known. There is strong suspicion that it was the work of some incendiary. Mr. Bolin only recently took possession of the place and the loss of his farm implements is a severe blow.—Elk Lick Star.

A Narrow Escape.

A young man and a stranger in Oakland, attempted to board a fast moving freight train as it was passing the station here on Monday afternoon, and had a narrow escape with his life. He had grasped the hand hold, fell and was unable to regain his feet. He held tight to the car, however and was dragged to the end of the platform west of the station when he bumped into the water stock with his head, cutting a deep gash above his eye and bruising his face in a number of places, besides bruising both knees very painfully. The shock when he struck the heavy casting broke his hold and he came within an ace of being drawn under the car but fortunately he retained his senses sufficiently to see the danger and rolled away instead of toward the train. He was taken in charge by policeman Nethken and conducted to a physician who dressed his injuries and later left town without disclosing his name but saying that he was on his way west.

Peaches in Hampshire County, W. Va.

An unprecedented yield seems to be assured the fruit growers of Hampshire county, W. Va., this year. In spite of the cold weather the crop is uninjured and according to John J. Cornwell, president West Virginia Horticultural Society, the yield this year will be greater by hundreds of car loads than for any previous year. When it is remembered that on more than one occasion almost a million dollars worth of peaches have been produced in one year in Hampshire county, it is no wonder the fruit growers are smiling. Good prices for the crops are assured by reason of the shortage of the crop in other parts of the United States.

Miss Becky Miller, whose home has been with the West and McComas families for nearly half a century, was seriously injured Tuesday at the McComas residence in Oakland, when Carleton McComas' billy goat got in his work by knocking the woman over and in falling she sustained a compound fracture of her right arm. Beginning June 1st an automobile route between Oakland and Aurora will be established by the proprietors of the Aurora House and Brookside Inn. The time between Oakland and Aurora will be forty minutes and trips will be so scheduled that all through trains will be met here.

In anticipation of his departure from Oakland on Friday night of this week a banquet was tendered Mr. Fred. J. Schroeder Tuesday evening when his friends to the number of a dozen or more gathered around the banquet table at the Lauer parlors. The evening, aside from the fact that the guest of honor was so soon to take his departure from Oakland, was an enjoyable one.

The foundation and concrete supports under the floor of the new building to be erected by Mr. S. A. Nally on Alder street, are progressing toward completion. The building will be 120 feet deep, and will be constructed of solid concrete, making it almost absolutely fire proof. The building will be utilized for stores, residential and amusement purposes. It will be completed by July 1st and is being erected under the supervision of the architect, Mr. John Ault, of Oakland.

Mr. Austin Brown, who spent last week with his mother and sister at Friendsville, returned to his home in Oakland Saturday afternoon feeling very much better than when he went away. On Monday he suffered a relapse, brought about by over-exertion and was compelled to take to his bed, since which time he has been suffering very much. Mr. Brown's many friends throughout the county will regret to learn of his illness. We trust that he will soon be restored to his usual health.

A. A. Maust, who recently retired from the mercantile business at Grantsville and went west with a view to locating, returned to his native heath last Saturday, after having seen a large part of the western country, including Missouri, Kansas, Texas and a small corner of Mexico. He crossed over the Rio Grande at El Paso to Juarez, Mexico, but concluded the United States was good enough for him. At Gurdon, Kansas, Mr. Maust visited his cousin, A. L. Maust, son of L. A. Maust, of Garrett, Pa. A. A. thinks the west and southwest, especially Texas, full of opportunities for young men, but he is as yet undecided about locating there. —Meyersdale Republican.

James Bell, who spent the winter at Fayetteville, W. Va., where he engaged in the photograph business, has returned to his home in Oakland, declaring that the denizens of Fayette county were too much for him, as an average of a murder each day of the week had been committed in and about Fayetteville since he took up his residence there. One of the most recent murders and one that attracted some attention at the time was the killing of a man by the son of Judge Bennett, presiding judge of the Fayetteville court. The murderer was released on bond amounting to $1000 after his preliminary hearing and the probabilities are that he will never be called up for trial.

The publication in another column of this paper today of the preliminary bulletin of meetings and conferences to be held at Mountain Lake Park this summer should set at rest the rumor which has gained prevalence in various parts of the country that there would be "nothing doing" at the Park this summer. Some of the brainest men of the nation are to appear on the lecture platform there and the attractions generally will be superior in many respects of those for many years past. The people of Oakland, and indeed all of Garrett and adjoining counties in Maryland and West Virginia, have felt the good influences of the Park for a quarter of a century and it stand, in hand to boost the place along.

Modern Home Plumbing.

The sanitary equipment of the home is an all-important matter, and there is no other feature which will afford as much comfort and be so conducive to perfect health as good plumbing, while on the other hand, poor plumbing is a constant menace to the health of the occupants as well as the cause of everlasting annoyance and discomfort.

It is well to keep in mind when building the fact that yourself and family may be required to occupy the home for a long period without new plumbing being installed, therefore the few extra dollars expended to obtain the best will in reality be HEALTH ASSURANCE.

We respectfully invite you to call and inspect our samples and receive an estimate on your plumbing.

A Story of Graustark
By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

the example he set.

"Gad, he is a soldier!" cried Truxton. "Hello! There's my friend Brutus. He's no coward either. Here's a try for you, Brutus."

He dropped to his knee and took deliberate aim at the frenzied henchman. The discovery that there were three bullets in Brutus' breast when he was picked up long afterward did not affect the young man's contention that his was the one that had found the heart.

The fall of Brutus urged the Iron Count to greater fury. His horse had been shot from under him. He was on his feet, calling to his men to follow him as he moved toward the stubborn row of green and red. Bullets hissed about his ears, but he gave no heed to them.

The commander of the guard gave the command to fall back slowly toward the castle.

Firing at every step, they crossed the parade ground and then made a quick dash for the shelter of the long balconies. Marlanx, down in the parade ground, was fairly pushing his men into the jaws of death.

Truxton King's chance to pay his debt to Vos Engo came after one of the fiercest, most determined charges. The young count had been fighting desperately for some time. His weakness seemed to have disappeared. As the foe fell back in the face of desperate resistance Vos Engo sprang down the steps and rushed after them, calling others to join him in the attempt to complete the rout. Near the edge of the terrace he stopped. His leg gave way under him, and he fell to the ground. Truxton saw him fall.

He leaped over the low balustrade, dropping his hot rifle, and dashed across the terrace to his rival's assistance. A hundred men shot at him.

"It's my turn!" shouted the American. "I'll square it up if I can. Then we're even!"

He seized the wounded man in his strong arms, threw him over his shoulder and staggered toward the steps.

"Release me, curse you!" shrieked Vos Engo, striking his rescuer in the face with his fist.

"I'm saving you for another day," said King as he dropped behind the balustrade with his burden safe.

There were other witnesses to Truxton's rash act. In a lofty window of the north wing crouched a white faced girl and a grim old man. The latter held a rifle in his tense though feeble old hands. Now and then the old man would sight his rifle and fire. The girl who crouched beside him was there to designate a certain figure in the ever changing mass of humanity on the bloody parade ground. Her clear eyes sought for and found Marlanx; her unwavering finger pointed him out to the old marksman.

She saw Vos Engo fall. Then a tall, well known figure sprang into view, dashing toward her wounded lover. Her heart stopped beating. With her hands to her temples she leaned far over the window ledge and screamed—screamed words that would have filled Truxton King with an endless joy could he have heard them above the rattle of the rifles.

The corner of the building had shut out the picture. It was impossible for her to know that the man and his burden had reached the balcony in safety. Even now they might be lying on the terrace, riddled by bullets.

The old man roused her from the stupor of dread. He called her name. Dully she responded. Standing bolt upright in the window, she sought out the figure of Marlanx and pointed rigidly.

"Ah," groaned the old man, "they will not be driven back this time

They will not be denied. It is the last charge! God, how they come! Our men will be annihilated in—Where is he? Now! Ah, I see! Yes, that is he! He is near enough now. I cannot miss him!"

Marlanx was leading his men up to the terrace.

At the top of the terrace the Iron Count suddenly stopped. His long body stiffened and then crumpled like a reed. A score of heavy feet trampled on the fallen leader, but he did not feel the impact.

A bullet from the north wing had crashed into his brain.

"At last!" shrieked the old man at the window. "Come, Miss Tullis; my work is done."

"He is dead, your grace?" in low, awed tones.

"Yes, my dear," said the Duke of Perse, a smile of relief on his face. "Come, let me escort you to the prince. You have been most courageous."

A group of terrified women were huddled in the far corner of a nearby room. The Duke of Perse held open the door for Loraine Tullis, but she did not enter. When he turned to call she was halfway down the top flight of stairs, racing through the powder smoke toward the landing below.

At every step she was screaming in the very agony of gladness:

"Stand firm! Hold them! Help is coming! Help is coming!"

A last look through the window at the end of the hall had revealed to her the most glorious of visions.

Red and green troops were pouring through the dismantled gateway, their horses surging over the ugly ground rifts and debris as if possessed of the fabled wings.

Her brother was out there, and all was well. She was crying the joyous news from the head of the grand stairway when Truxton King caught sight of her.

He was powder stained and grimy. There was blood on his face and shirt front.

"You are shot!" she cried, clutching the post at the bend in the stairs. "Truxton! Truxton!"

"Not even scratched!" he shouted as he reached her side. "It's not my"— He stopped short even as he held out his arms to clasp her to his breast. "It's some one else's blood," he finished resolutely. She swayed toward him, and he caught her in his arms.

"I love you—oh, I love you, Truxton!" she cried over and over again. He was faint with joy. His kisses spoke the adoration he would have cried out to her if emotion had not clogged his throat.

"Eric," she whispered at last, drawing back in his arms and looking up into his eyes with a great pity in her own. "Is he—is he dead, Truxton?"

"No," he said gently; "badly hurt, but"—

"He will not die? Thank God, Truxton. He is a brave—oh, a very brave man!"

Leaderless between the deadly fires, the mercenaries gave up the fight after a brief stand at the terrace.

The prince reigned again.

CHAPTER XXI.

"YOU WILL BE MRS. KING."

IT was late in the day when Truxton King was summoned to the devastated state chamber to be made a baron, and the prince completed the American's reward by presenting him with an ancient gold seal ring, one of the crown jewels.

Late that night it was reported at the castle that a large force of men were encamped on the opposite side of the river. A hundred campfires were gleaming against the distant uplands.

"The Grand Duke Paulus!" exclaimed Count Halfont. "Thank God he did not come a day earlier. We owe him nothing today, but yesterday—ah, he could have demanded much of us!"

In one of the wrecked approaches to the terrace, surrounded by fragments of stone and confronted by ugly destruction, sat a young man and a slender girl. There were no lights near them. The shadows were black and forbidding.

His arm was about her; her head nestled securely against his shoulder, and her slim hands were willing prisoners in one of his.

She was saying: "Truxton, dear, I did not love Eric Vos Engo. I just thought it was love. I never really knew what love was until you came into my life. That's what made it so hard. I had let him believe that I might care for him some day. And I did like him. So I"—

"You will never, never know how happy I am, Loraine!" he breathed into her ear.

"I hope I shall always bring happiness to you, Truxton," she murmured, faint with the joy of loving.

"You will make me very unhappy if you don't marry me tomorrow."

"I will marry you, Truxton, when we get to New York," she said, but not very firmly. He saw his advantage.

"I must ask John, really I must, Truxton," she protested faintly.

"Hurray!" he shouted—in a whisper. "He is so desperately in love he won't think of refusing anything we ask. Shall we set it for Saturday?"

They set it for Saturday without consulting John Tullis and then fell to discussing him. "He is very much in love with her," she said wistfully.

"And she loves him, Loraine. They will be very happy. She's wonderful!"

"Well, so is John. He's the most wonderful man in all this world."

"I am sure of it," he agreed magnanimously. "I saw him talking with her and the Duke of Perse as I came out awhile ago. They were going to the duke's rooms up there. The duke will offer no objections. He'll permit his daughter to select his next son-in-law."

"I shall be sorry to leave Graustark," she said dreamily after a long period of silent retrospection. "I've had the happiest year of my life here."

"I've had the busiest month of my life here. I'll never again say that the world is a dull place. I shudder when I think of what might have happened to you, my princess sweetheart, if I hadn't come to Edelweiss, I would not have found you." Feeling her trembling in his arms, he went on with whimsical good humor: "You would have been eaten up by the ogre long before this, or perhaps you would have succeeded in becoming a countess."

"As it is, I shall be a baroness."

"In Graustark, but not in New York. That reminds me. You'll be more than a baroness—more than a princess. You will be a queen. Don't you catch the point? You will be Mrs. King."

* * * * * * *

The Grand Duke Paulus was distinctly annoyed. He had traveled many miles, endured quite a number of hardships, and all to no purpose. When dawn came his emissaries returned from the city with the lamentable information that the government had righted itself, that Marlanx's sensational revolution was at an end and that the regents would be highly honored if his excellency could overlook the distressingly chaotic conditions at court and condescend to pay the castle a visit.

The grand duke resolved that he would visit the castle in a very informal way, extend his congratulations and offer his services, which he knew would be declined with thanks. Incidentally he would mention the bond issue; also he would find the opportunity to suggest to the ministry that his government still was willing to make large grants and stupendous promises if any sort of arrangement could be made by which the system might be operated in conjunction with branch lines of the imperial roads.

And so it was that at midday he rode in pomp and splendor through the city gates, attended by his staff and a rather overpowering bodyguard.

The grand duke, with all the arrogance of a real personage, was late. It was not for him to consider the conditions that distressed the court of Graustark—not at all. He was a grand duke and he would take his own time in paying his respects. When he finally presented himself at the castle doors a sleepy group of attendants actually yawned in his presence.

No one had slept during the night just passed. Excitement and the suffering of others had denied slumber to one and all, even to those who had not slept for many days and nights. Now the reaction was upon them. Relaxation had succeeded tenseness.

When the grand duke entered the great, somber throne room he was confronted by a punctiliously polite assemblage, but every eyelid was as heavy as lead and as prone to sink.

The prince sat far back in the great chair of his ancestors, his sturdy legs sticking straight out in front of him. The grand duke advanced between the respectful lines and knelt at the foot of the throne.

"Arise, your highness," piped Bobby, with a quick glance at Count Halfont. It was a faint, faraway voice that uttered the gracious command. "Graustark welcomes the Grand Duke Paulus. It is my pleasure to—to"— A helpless look came into his eyes. He looked everywhere for support. The grand duke saw that he had forgotten the rehearsed speech and smiled benignly as he stepped forward and kissed the hand that had been extended somewhat uncertainly.

"My most respectful homage to your majesty. The felicitations of my emperor and the warmest protestations of friendship from his people."

With this as a prologue he engaged himself in the ever pleasurable task of delivering a long congratulatory address. After five minutes of high sounding platitudes he again turned to the prince. It was then that he received his first shock.

Prince Robin was sound asleep. His head was slipping sidewise along the satiny back of the big chair, and his chin was very low in the laces at his neck. The grand duke coughed emphatically, cleared his throat and grew very red in the face.

The court of Graustark was distinctly dismayed.

"His majesty appears to have—ahem—gone to sleep," remarked the grand duke tartly, interrupting himself to address the prime minister.

"He is very tired, your excellency," said Count Halfont, very much distressed. "Pray consider what he has been through during the"—

"Ah, my dear count, do not apologize for him. I quite understand. Ahem! Ahem!" Still, he was very red in the face.

"I will awaken him, your excellency," said the prime minister, edging toward the throne.

"Not at all, sir!" protested the visitor. "Permit him to have his sleep out, sir. I will not have him disturbed. Who am I that I should defeat the claims of nature? It is my pleasure to wait until his majesty's nap is over. Then he may dismiss us, but not until we have cried 'Long live the prince!'"

For awhile they stood in awkward silence, this notable gathering of men and women. Then the prime minister in hushed tones suggested that it would be eminently proper under the circumstances for all present to be seated. He was under the impression that his serene highness would sleep long and soundly.

Stiff backed and uncomfortable, the court sat and waited. No one pretended to conceal the blissful yawns that would not be denied. A drowsy, ineffably languid feeling took possession of the entire assemblage.

The prime minister sat at the foot of the throne and nodded in spite of himself. John Tullis, far back near the wall, had his head on his hand, bravely fighting off the persistent demon. Prince Dantan of Dawsbergen was sound asleep.

The grand duke was wide awake. He saw it all and was equal to the occasion. After all, he was a kindly old gentleman and, once his moment of mortification was over, he was not above charity.

Bobby's poor little head had slipped over to a most uncomfortable position against the arm of the chair. Putting his finger to lips, the grand duke tiptoed carefully up to the throne. With very gentle hands he lifted Bobby's head and, infinitely tender, stuffed a throne cushion behind the curly head. A splendid smile in his eyes, he tiptoed back to his chair.

As he passed Count Halfont, who had risen, he whispered:

"Dear little man! I do not forget, my lord, that I was once a boy. God bless him!"

Then he sat down, conscious of a fine feeling of goodness, folded his arms across his expansive chest and allowed his beaming eyes to rest upon the sleeping boy far back in the chair of state. Incidentally he decided to delay a few days before taking up the bond question with the ministry. The grand duke was not an ordinary diplomat.

"DEAR LITTLE MAN! GOD BLESS HIM!"

In one of the curtained windows, far removed from the throne, sat Truxton King and Loraine Tullis.

All about them people were watching the delicate little scene, smiling drowsily at the grand duke's tender comedy. No one was looking at the two in the curtained recess. Her hand was in his; her head sank slowly toward his inviting shoulder. Her heavy lids drooped lower and lower, refusing to obey the slender will that argued against complete surrender. At last her soft, regular breathing told him that she was asleep. Awaiting his opportunity, he tenderly kissed the soft brown hair, murmured a gentle word of love and settled his own head against the thick cushions.

Everywhere they dozed and nodded. The grand duke smiled and blinked his little eyes. He was very wide awake.

That is how he happened to see the prince move restlessly and half open his sleep bound eyes. The grand duke leaned forward with his hand to his ear and listened. He had seen the boy's lips move. From dreamland came Bobby's belated "Good ni-ight."

THE END.

THE GRANGE

PROFESSOR T. C. ATKESON.

Re-elected Overseer National Grange at Recent Meeting.

Thomas Clark Atkeson, master of the West Virginia state grange, was born at Lawnvale farm, near Buffalo, Putnam county, W. Va., Feb. 15, 1852. He was educated at Buffalo academy, University of West Virginia, Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical college and Kentucky university, graduating from the last named institution with the degree of LL. B. in 1874. He has since received the honorary degrees of A. M., M. S. and Ph. D. from different institutions. In 1873 he founded the West Virginia Agriculturist and has ever since been a frequent contributor to many of the best class of agricultural publications. July 8, 1878, he married Miss Cordelia Meek, eldest daughter of Rev. Zephaniah Meek, D. D., editor of the Central Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky., immediately following which he began farming on the home farm, which he afterward bought and still owns and operates.

He joined the grange in May, 1882. At the session of the state grange held in September of the same year he was elected assistant steward. In 1883 he was elected secretary, in 1884 lecturer, in 1888 overseer, which office he held continuously until elected master in January, 1897, to which he has been re-elected twice since. At Rochester, N. Y., in November, 1903, he was elected overseer of the national grange, next to the highest office in that body, and has been re-elected ever since. As a member of the state grange legislative committee he prepared the law creating the state board of agriculture, on which he served for ten years by appointment of Governors Fleming, McCorkle and Atkinson, six of which he was president of the board. In 1907 he was elected a member of the national grange legislative committee. In 1891 he was elected professor of agriculture at the University of West Virginia, serving two years. In 1896 he was elected president of Barboursville college (now Morres Harvey college), which he resigned in June of 1897 to accept the position of dean of the College of Agriculture of the University of West Virginia. He has been a member of the university board of regents and of the state survey commission. For six years he was president of the Buffalo district board of education, having taken a deep interest in agricultural and educational affairs.

THOMAS CLARK ATKESON.

The grange was organized in West Virginia in 1872. It has been foremost in every movement, says Professor Atkeson, for promoting the agricultural welfare. In a large measure it brought about the organization of the College of Agriculture as one of the colleges of the university. Every one of the state organizations that have for their object the promotion of some special field of agriculture owes much to the grange and its support.

Officers National Grange.

The election of officers to serve for the next two years resulted as follows: Master, N. J. Bachelder, Concord, N. H.; overseer, T. C. Atkeson, Morgantown, W. Va.; lecturer, Oliver Wilson, Magnolia, Ill.; steward, C. D. Richardson, West Brookfield, Mass.; assistant steward, L. H. Healey, South Woodstock, Conn.; chaplain, C. F. Smith, Morrisville, Vt.; treasurer, Mrs. E. S. McDowell, Wellesley, Mass.; secretary, C. M. Freeman, Tippecanoe City, O.; gatekeeper, D. C. Mullen, Nampa, Ida.; Ceres, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Patterson, College Park, Md.; Pomona, Mrs. Grace E. Hull, Dimondale, Mich.; Flora, Mrs. Ida Judson, Balfour, Ia.; lady assistant steward, Mrs. Mary A. Smith, Morrisville, Vt.; executive committeeman (to serve three years), S. H. Messick, Bridgeville, Del.

A Grange Platform.

First.—Equal protection for persons of all classes, labor of all kinds, capital of all amounts and products in all forms and volumes.

Second.—No protection for monopolies and those who sell in foreign markets for less than is demanded in our own for the same article.

Third.—Heaviest duties on imports most used by those best able to bear the burdens of taxation.

Fourth.—A differential rate which may be used to open the markets of the world to all our products on equal terms.

WHERE
Are the snows
Of yesteryear?
Don't worry,
They will soon
Be here.
Jack Frost
Is getting out
His tools,
And as the weather
Slowly cools
He'll shake down
With
A liberal hand
The beautiful
To beat the band.
They may not be,
It's safe
To bet,
The snows
Of yesteryear,
And yet
To guarantee
I do make bold
They will be
Just as white
And cold,
And they
Around your ears
Will play
In quite
The same
Distracting way.
Don't worry,
They will be along.
They know
The way
And can't go wrong.
Soon we will get
The frosty mitt
And in a way
To notice it,
The snows
Of yesteryear
Have fled,
But we will meet
Their twin instead.

Ex-Governor Folk opines that we have a large and growing variety of very fine laws that are not enforced for sour apples. What we need, in his opinion, is not more legal enactments, but a husky gent with a big stick to make the people who work ten hours a day breaking laws reverse the operation.

Too many men look a law over and pronounce it a very fine specimen, but in practice they want the obeying of it left to the other fellow.

The average party who points with pride to himself as a good citizen squeals like a porker under a gate when he is asked to cease his care free life and obey a few of the laws for a change.

He wants to run his automobile or his wheelbarrow through those laws that interfere with his plans, but the air thereabout is all the colors of the rainbow when one that would protect him is not enforced.

EASTERN SHORE LEADS IN GOOD ROADS MOVE

People Across Bay Take Advantage of Their Light and Sandy Soil to Construct Enduring Highways

Attention is directed almost daily to the strides the Eastern Shore of Maryland is making in road building. This section, more than any other in the State, has taken hold of the problem and difficulties that have surrounded improved highways in such a way that it is believed to be in a fair way of solving them. With the people of the nine Eastern Shore counties the efforts of the State are regarded as only supplementary to the efforts that can be made in the counties. They are not waiting for the State to take the initative. Self-reliance seems to be the secret of their success.

Only brief periods elapse when representative citizens of the counties (sometimes personally, sometimes officially) present themselves at the offices of the State Roads Commission with an offer of a deal. They are anxions to under take some improvement which is closely related to the one they have in mind. These deals are advantageous to the State in extending the lateral branches of the proposed system. Consequently, no deal is ever broached that does not meet with consideration from the State Roads Commission, and most of the deals are accepted, although occasionally it may be necessary to reject one.

Ten years ago the Eastern Shore of Marvland was poor. It has made great strides in the last decade. It has developed in great measure as the garden from which the people of Philadelphia and New York, as well as Baltimore, get their fruits and vegetables. Linked with its progress is an increase in the mileage of its up-to-date highways.

Only recently it was boastingly asked of Samuel K. Dennis, Senator Smith's private secretary, if he knew of a better road than Park Heights avenue, in the suburbs of Baltimore city.

"It is a fairly good road," replied Mr. Dennis, "but it is not as the roads leading out of Snow Hill and Berlin."

Snow Hill and Berlin are in Worcester. It is admitted that the claim made by Mr. Dennis was just one. Moreovers it can be asserted with equal truth of a number of towns on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Why the counties on the Eastern Shore of Maryland should be so keen in the matter of road building requires no explanation from those who have studied the road-building problem. How it happens that they have taken an interest so far in advance of the counties in other sections of Maryland is not so easily explained. However, they are after good roads and they are getting them. Whatever fault may be found with road construction in other parts of Maryland they do not apply to the light sandy soil of the Eastern Shore. There the roads go down to stay, and they do stay. The people cannot get quite enough of them. Where the State does not build they are preparing to build under the State aid or Shoemaker law, in which the State pays half the cost and the county the remainder. All of the county's share, except 10 per cent., is collected from the owners of property along the route of the proposed modern road. Property owners are giving up the money

One of the pioneer advocates of good roads is State Senator E. E. Goslin of Caroline. He has been an advocate of other things—prompt payment of taxes, for instance. His ideas on this subject were so objectionable to his county friends that they put him out of public life some years ago because of them. Last fall they elected him becanse of the things he was previously rejected for, and also because of the improved roads he was instrumental in having built. His majority was a flattering one, too, for a county as politically close as Caroline. Federalsburg, near which Senator Goslin lives in Caroline, is in the very heart of the good roads system of Maryland. No little town in Maryland has better roads than the vicinity of Federalsburg nor more of them.

Indeed, Caroline is probably the banner county in road work in Maryland, although Wicomico is giving it a close race for tnis distinction. It has mile after mile of highways as fine as can be found anywhere, and it is disposed to continue the construction of these improvements, the claim being made that the roads pay for themselves many times over in the enhanced value of land adjacent to them. It was the first county on the Eastern Shore to employ a road engineer. This was Mr. Uhler, who is now connected with the State Road Commission. Under his administration county road building progressed in the most satisfactory manner.

Other Eastern Shore counties have followed the example of Caroline. Now the only county on the Shore that has no engineer of its own is Dorchester.

The people in that section are demanding that the County Commissioners act as contractors for the State in bidding for work under the State Roads Commission. The engineer is then a necessity. When the County Commissioners undertake road constraction it is necessary for the county to equip itself with rollers, carts, stone crushers and other road-building paraphernalia. This equipment is always serviceable. Moreover, the county officials learn how to build roads. Governor Crothers believes this, after all, is the chief good of the road-building project. When the $5,000,000 is spent the people will have learned their lesson. They will realize the value of good roads and know how to build them.

When the County Commissioners take a contract they do the road-building work under the supervision of the State Roads Commission and its engineering force. The local engineer may know local conditions better than the State engineer. He is helpful to him. Knowing the art of road building he knows what the State expects, and he can see that the work is done in the proper way, saving a great deal of friction that would otherwise result.

When the County Commissioners accept a contract whatever they save on the work is credited to the county, and the money can be used in continuing road construction. This is a factor in influencing the State Commission in desiring that the counties themselves should be the road builders. It is not the chief factor, however. The Commission believes when the work is done by the agents of the people, the people themselves will take a greater interest in it.

The Western Shore of Maryland is far behind the Eastern Shore in the progressive idea of road building. Allegany, Montgomery and Baltimore counties have road engineers. None of the others have. Montgomery has brought its County Commissioners into the field as road builders, and Allegany is got into the movement in the most vigorous way. Here the comparison ends as far as general interest, enterprise and the vim displayed in carrying on the work are concerned.

Chairman Tucker is disposed to blame the pikes in Western Maryland for the failure of the counties in this section to get into the field as the people of the Eastern Shore have gone into it. The piked road is a good one, but the tolls over it would pay for the State roads many times over. As the money goes out in small amounts, the people do not realize the cost. They are not pushing county officials to go after the State's money to the same extent as the officials on the Eastern Shore are being urged to become active.

MONEY REWARDS OF AUTHORS

Fortunes Derived by Scott, Dumas, Dickens and Others From Books.

The profits of successful authorship has not been confined to the last ten or fifteen years. Scott received his £8000 for a single volume at a time when money went much further than at present. When disaster came from outside speculation literary labor saved him; he earned for his creditors nearly £40,000 between January, 1826, and January, 1828.

The elder Dumas, with s great name, the system with which he managed his small army of clever collaborators, his willingness to sign as many contracts for romances as contained clauses for advance payment, is said in his heyday to have pocketed and squandered annually 300,000 francs, yet he was often without twenty francs of ready money at his disposal.

Balzac made enormous sums from the novels of the "Comedie Humaine," yet to the end he was weighted with debts, due to his visionary financial schemes. In the '20s of the last century Eugene Sue received 100,000 francs from the serial rights of "The Wandering Jew."

Of the moderns, Alphonse Daudet passed the last of his life in comfort. Emile Zola put the story of his literary earnings into his residence at Medan, making an addition named for and paid for by each successful work. Flaubert fortunately inherited money, as he did not make much from his writing. Du Maupassant earned from 28,000 to 30,000 francs a year, not a great deal when one considers that he was counted a "big seller." This was at a rate of two or three cents a word for the serial rights.

Dickens at his death left an estate valued at £100,000, though he was a man of extravagant habits in money matters. It is reckoned that he earned three times that sum during the thirty-odd years of his successful literary work.

Although Thackeray never commanded anything like the money his contemporary did—having no more than sixteen years of decided success—he was able to live in luxury and left to his children an estate equivalent to that which he himself had inherited and squandered in his younger days. He received only 100 guineas apiece for the essays later collected as the "Roundabout Papers" and £1000 for "Henry Esmond."

When Conan Doyle, a practicing physician, wrote "A Study in Scarlet"—the first introduction of Sherlock Holmes, a story of 35,000 words—after peddling it about from publisher to publisher, he succeeded in selling it for £14, at the rate of $2 a thousand words. In his latest work he received as much a single word as was formerly paid him for the thousand, getting sixty cents a word for the American serial rights alone. Seventy thousand pounds probably represents the sum the Sherlock Holmes books, together with the play, have brought the author.

The greater part of the work of Rudyard Kipling was produced in the days of his obscurity, when some of his finest stories went begging for $50 apiece, and although he now commands the highest rates, of late years he has produced but little. For the serial rights of "Kim" in England and this county he received £5000. He has accumulated a comfortable fortune and that is all.

Thomas Hardy and George Meredith do not head the list of English fiction money makers. Mrs. Humphrey Ward's profits have been large and constant. "Robert Elsmere" was not a money winner, appearing before the days of international copyright, but probably not one of her last seven or eight novels have returned her less than $50,000.

Of Katherine Cecil Thurston's "The Masquerader" 200,000 copies were sold in this country alone, and issued under the title of "John Chilcote, M. P.," in England the book brought its author another comfortable fortune.

Beatrice Harraden made no money from her great success, "Ships That Pass in the Night," which went far into the hundred thousands, because in this country there was no copyright and the English rights had been sold outright by the author for £20.

William Dean Howells, holding first rank as he does, has never had a great sale for any of his books. Mark Twain, on the other hand, had a highly renumerative income until, as with Scott, financial disaster plunged him deep into debt. F. Marion Crawford and F. Hopkinson Smith both found their profession highly renumerative.

From "Richard Carvel" as a book and from the royalties from the play Winston Churchill received over $300,000, and "The Crisis," "Coniston" and "Mr. Crewe's Career" have not been far behind. One of the most astonishing examples of profit when reviewed as price per word is that of Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire," which, totaling only about 11,000 words, sold 100,000 copies in the original edition and 50,000 in a subsequent cheaper edition.

Richard Harding Davis is estimated to have made when he was an author solely $25,000 annually from royalties on his books. Robert W. Chambers, James Lane Allen, Thomas Dixon, Alice Hegan Rice and Kate Douglas Wiggin command a twenty per cent. royalty, or about thirty cents for each copy sold.

The sale of George Barr McCutcheon's novels in four years amounted in round numbers to 1,000,000 copies. His first book, "Graustark," reached a sale of 400,000; the copyright the author sold outright for $500. He made no more such mistakes. A million copies of Florence Morse Kingsley's "Titus" are said to have been sold, but she received only $1000 for the story, having written it for a prize contest, one of the conditions being that the winning author should relinquish all claims to royalty.

One comparative glance is of interest. Poe, who died in want, was glad to receive a $5 bill for one of the best of his tales. Ex-President Roosevelt received an offer from one publishing firm of $100,000 for a book about his visit to Europe and another firm bid $50,000 for a book on sports and hunting.

Concerning the writing of books as an income producing vocation it is interesting to learn from Clement Shorter the English conditions governing the publication of novels. George Gissing admits that he received only £20 for the serial and book rights of one of his finest novels. Since then things have greatly improved, but Mr. Shorter says that he has seen many agreements and that "publishers constantly refuse to pay anything at all until there is a sale of 500 copies of a book. Some of the most reputable publishers in England are in the habit of doing this. * * * One agreement that passed through my hands the other day gave the author nothing for his first novel up to 500 copies. After that ten per cent. was to be paid and the author tied up for three novels. One publisher frequently pays £50 for all rights in a novel. But even with these hard dealings the position is very much better than it was fifteen or twenty years ago, I insist," concludes Mr. Shorter, "that no work of fiction is worth producing when the author cannot get a publisher to undertake the cost of production. So keen is the competition for good work among an ever increasing number of publishers that there is not the slightest danger of a volume of prose fiction, a volume of essays or a memoir going begging for long if it has any merit whatever."

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to
